THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

NEW SERIES....No. 129.

against whom these collectors are so continually pouring out their charges of fraud; and the captains of the fishing smacks, for intelligence, integrity, and fair dealing in the community, stand vastly before the collectors.

These collectors say that the great work for the revenue cutters is to watch the fishermen and keep them from cheating. Now, I will tell you a little something about that, Mr. President; I happen to know something about it, for I live within about ten miles of the sea-shore. The port of Portsmouth, I believe, collects about four thousand dollars of revenue a year, and you pay your officers $10,000 a year for collecting. I believe they have a revenue cutter there. Every collector wants a revenue cutter, and I will tell you the use made of them, and about all the use on that coast. They are pleasure boats, by which and in which the collectors entertain their friends with sea voyages and fishing voyages, after mackerel, and cod, &c.; and every possible excuse that a collector can get up is got up to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to allow him a revenue cutter to go on pleasure excursions in the summer time. Why, I have known them to get up a party in Boston and go away down to the British coast and spend the summer, and the service they rendered their country was writing very graphic articles of their sea shore experience and publishing them in the Boston newspapers. Well, sir, to induce the Secretary of the Treasury to give these gentlemen revenue cutters to make pleasure excursions in at the public expense, it is suggested that the fishermen are committing awful frauds, and if the Secretary will only give them a cutter, they will expose the frauds and save an immense deal to the Treasury!

Now, sir, I have a proposition to make; and I wish that when you see the Secretary of the Treasury you will name it to him. Tell him to set the fishermen to watching the collectors; and if they do not expose frauds, two dollars to one, and make savings to your Treasury—provided they can get at the frauds of the collectors—I will give up, and abandon the whole thing. This charge against the fishermen of being fraudulent, made in this wholesale way by these collectors, is a falsehood and a libel on them. There is no class of men who stand fairer in the community than they do; and last and least of all should these charges come from the officials of your custom-houses. I know something about these custom-house officers, too. Generally speaking, they are men that understand who it is that is Secretary of the Treasury. It is almost always a southern man—sometimes a northern man with southern principles, but generally a southern man—and these collectors, for the purpose of making themselves agreeable to the powers that be in the Treasury Department, send in these false and libelous accusations against better men than they are; and suggest that they are guilty of great frauds, the conclusion of all which is that if they can have a cutter at their disposal they can be exposed! No, sir; no man that is acquainted with these men will believe for a moment that their characters will suffer in comparison with the collectors who malign and detract and slander them.

A good deal has been said about the frauds which it is said are committed at sea. Some of these collectors do not know much more about a boat or about the sea than men living west of the mountains that never saw the sea. Some of them do. A vessel goes out fishing for cod. Well, if you want to fish for cod you must have a long line, a heavy sinker, a large hook, and bait it with some substantial matter, generally clam. You put your line down until the sinker touches the bottom, then draw up a little, and you begin to catch cod. In the neighborhood of the cod are always found the halibut. There are friendly relations between the cod and halibut; and they frequent the same grounds with pollock and haddock. The halibut not understanding that it is illegal for them to take hold of the bait, very frequently get hold of what is legally intended for a cod, and the fishermen haul them in. What shall they do? Throw them overboard? It would seem to be implied that they should. Now, the fact is, that this cod fishing does not mean catching cod; but there are two kinds of fisheries—mackerel fishing and cod fishing; and they are just as diverse as shooting snipes and hunting lions are, because the cod are caught, as I told you, with a long line and heavy sinker near the bottom, and the mackerel are caught with a very small line and a very small hook, indeed. One cod-fish hook will weigh down a hundred mackerel hooks; and instead of having large substantial bait, such as would be a temptation to halibut, it is a little one, not bigger than a picayune, with which the mackerel are caught. They go in schools. The mackerel are a social fish. They come near the surface; you can see them, and sometimes, when a vessel that is fitted out for cod fishing goes along, the men see that they are in the midst of a school of mackerel. Knowing that they are subject to these visitors on their voyages, they are prepared with some small hooks and lines, and while the school is there they throw out and catch the fish. That used to be considered under the law, as administered by these patriotic collectors, treason against the Government—working a forfeiture of the vessel; but Judge Woodbury, with a good deal of common sense, decided that that was all nonsense; and it was no crime if a vessel that had been fitted out for cod fishing went amongst mackerel and took a few of them. That is the law, notwithstanding what the collectors may say; and there is no violation of the law if pollock, or cusk, or haddock, or if halibut bite at the hook that is intended for cod fish. Besides, the cod fishery includes legitimately the catching of pollock, cusk, and haddock. They are salted and cured in the same way, caught on the same ground, and with the same bait; and there is no sort of fraud intended and none practiced in it, nor do I believe one word, as I have before intimated, of the charges that have been made by the collectors in regard to the other allegations of fraud.

Not only have these men furnished you a reliable corps of seamen from whom your seamen are to be enlisted, and must be as long as you have a navy; but if you will go to the intelligent merchants in the cities of New York and Boston, or any important sea-port on the Atlantic coast east of New York—I do not know how it is south—they will tell you from New York to Passamaquoddy, that the great school where the successful, the educated, the intelligent, the enterprising sea captains and mates that man your merchant vessels come from, is from these very shore fishermen. To the commerce of New York, Cape Cod is a richer mine than our adventurers have ever discovered in California. They rely upon Cape Cod and upon the men who are educated in the cod fishery for their captains and their mates, as well as their seamen to man their merchant vessels. If you will take counsel of the men that send their ships to every sea, and trust their wealth to the contingencies of every clime and of every sea, they will tell you that they can part with anything else better than they can part with the supply of the intelligent, educated class of men that come from Cape Cod and the fishing towns about there, for their captains and mates.

But still, sir, I know that we live in a day of progress; the wisdom of the fathers amounts to but very little in these times; and we are about, so far as the Senate can go, to repeal this fishing bounty, and to throw away as folly all that we have been taught by the wise men who established it, and continued it from the earliest days of the Constitution to the present time. Now, sir, if you think men do not want any education to become sailors; if you think the amount you spend for that purpose is not well bestowed, and may as well be dispensed with, what do you say to dispensing with the schools for educating officers? If you abolish these fishing bounties, and do not want to educate seamen, let us abolish the Annapolis Naval School. I am against it, always was, and, I think, always shall be. It was admitted here by some gentlemen, I am not certain that it was not the very distinguished Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Toombs,] that it cost you ten times as much to educate a naval officer in the Annapolis School as it would in any respectable private school, and ten times as much to educate a man at West Point as it would at any private academy; and by the recent action of the Government we have shown that we do not think much of their education after all, for we have put at the head of a class that graduated last year some young men who did not stay there more than six months.

Mr. TOOMBS. They were kicked out.

Mr. HALE. Not only kicked out, but told never to come back. Now, I say if the fishing bounties are to be repealed—and they are, so far as your vote will go; I do not know how it will be in the other House—I want you to show your consistency. I do not want to touch the sugar bounty this year. I let that go. But let us abolish the Annapolis School; let us abolish the Military Academy at West Point; let us be consistent. If our seamen do not want education, our officers do not, for the Army or the Navy.

I shall vote for the amendment I have just indicated; and if the amendment prevails—I hardly think it will—I shall vote for the bill; because then it will look to me as if you mean to be in earnest, as if you are honest and impartial, and as if this move made against these fishermen had its origin in a national policy, in an enlarged policy, and was not tainted or tinctured with any prejudice against New England interests or any hatred of her men and her pursuits. But, sir, if this is to go by itself; if this, the only money which you pay to educate seamen, is to be withdrawn by the Government, and that which you pay to educate officers for the Army and for the Navy is to be continued, I have nothing to say about any inference that anybody will draw; I will leave every one to draw his own inferences; but I will say this: I do not know that I shall have a seat on this floor long, nor do I care much for it; but if God spares my life, and my constituents spare my place, I will make war upon every monopoly, whether it be in the Army or in the Navy, and I will labor in the humble sphere of my influence for the abolition of all these distinctions by which one set of men are educated at the public expense and the vast majority left out.

Sir, there is not a single reason which can be offered for the sustaining of one of those institutions, that does not speak tenfold in favor of this one. You educate your men at West Point, and the great credit they have there is that they do nothing useful there except to get an education. So it is at Annapolis. They do nothing except to qualify themselves. But these seamen, whilst they are getting their education—whilst they are training themselves to qualify themselves to do honorable and efficient service to the country—are at the same time adding to the national treasure, by drawing sustenance for the people from the abundance of the seas. I know something of the perils of this occupation. There is something inviting in it, and something that is captivating, from the very imminence of the peril and the hazards amid which it is pursued. Sometimes the storm comes, and it makes orphans of more than half the children of a village. I remember, not long ago, being in the town of Marblehead, in the State of Massachusetts, after a great easterly storm, and I was told, as I stood there and saw the children coming out of the public schools, that "more than half the children you see here are fatherless, and made so by the late storm, about which so much has been said in the papers."

Now, sir, if you want to reform abuses, if you want to make the Government just and equal, I wonder what it was that turned the eye of reform to these poor sailors? I wonder where was your desire for reform when your Naval Register was before you, and you saw how many post captains you had drawing $2,500 a year for doing nothing—"waiting orders?" More than half of them are in that condition, and have been more than half their lives. The Naval Register shows that you have a corps of officers more than double what you want. Why, sir, so evident has this been that, a few years ago, when Mr. Graham was Secretary of the Navy, he actually recommended that we should build ships of a certain class to give employment to our lieutenants. Was not that a most beautiful piece of economy? We had more officers than we wanted; and for the purpose of employing them he actually recommended the building of additional ships! When you see that we have more than twice as many naval officers as we want, that half our officers are "waiting orders," and that a great many of those not waiting orders are on shore duties, which might as well be performed by any school ma'am in the country as by them, I wonder why the eye of reform does not look there. If the state of the Treasury is such that we want a little economy practiced, why, in Heaven's name, I will tell you what to look at. Look at the official paper which has been published this session, by which the pay and rations and commutations of all the officers of the Army are given. I wish I had it here; but I will give you a general idea of it. You will find that the pay proper of some Army officers is two or three thousand dollars or less; but when you come to look at the aggregate you will find it is eight or nine thousand dollars. I do not want to say anything disparaging to General Scott; I have already expressed my opinion of him here on this floor, if anybody cares to know anything about it; I have as high esteem and respect for him as any man in the world; I think him one of the greatest generals of any age, or of the world. But do you know what we pay General Scott for literally doing nothing; for I take it he has nothing to do in time of peace? We pay him $18,000 a year, and some other generals eight or nine thousand dollars; and we have got colonels living in this city whose pay proper—

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. CLAY. Did not the Senator from New Hampshire vote to give that to General Scott?

Mr. HALE. No, sir, I did not; but I will tell you what I did.

Mr. CLAY. Did you vote against it?

Mr. HALE. I made a speech against conferring that rank upon General Scott, but I took occasion to say what I now say, that I entertain the highest regard and respect for him; that I believe him to be one of the greatest generals of the age; and when I happened to meet General Scott in private, not long after, some malicious man took occasion to remind him that I had voted against conferring the lieutenant generality upon him; but the General was kind enough to say that the compliment which I paid him on the occasion was such that he had no reason to complain of me. I voted against it always, and I spoke against it; but I will tell you what I did after he had got it. You gave it to him against my voice and against my vote; and a controversy arose about what was due to him, and it seemed to be the sense of the Senate that he had been rather harshly dealt with—I do not say whether it was so or not—by the honorable Senator from Mississippi, who was then at the head of the War Department. An impression got up amongst some of General Scott's friends that he had not had exactly fair play, and that there had been an attempt to withhold from him what, under the fair construction of the law, he was entitled to, and I think I did vote to give him that, and I would do it again. I will vote to give every man what is his just due.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit me, I must inform him that he misstates the case.

Mr. HALE. I only said what I understood. I did not aver—

Mr. DAVIS. Then you did not understand the truth.

Mr. HALE. Well, I cannot help that.

Mr. DAVIS. If the Senator will not allow me to correct him—

Mr. HALE. Certainly; I yield the floor.

Mr. DAVIS. Then I have only to say that the Senator misstates the case. He presents it as a case where allowances were refused. That is not the truth. The President made an allowance to the full extent that the regulations and laws existing for the government of the Army would permit. The claim was larger than that. The Senate pleased to allow more. I, for the first time, learn, however, that it was from any general opinion in the Senate that I had done any injustice to that individual.

Mr. HALE. Well, I know it is very difficult, sir, to go along in a plain way without giving offense. I undertook to state the matter just as I understood it. I knew nothing about it, and cared nothing about it. I thought that the Secretary of War at that time did use some pretty harsh language to General Scott.

Mr. DAVIS. In a correspondence which arose, I was compelled to retaliate, after exercising, as I thought then, and think now, very great forbearance before I did use any harsh language; but when I thought it proper and becoming in me to retaliate, I used such language as I supposed would be most effective. That was not on the subject of his pay. That question arose in a very different controversy.

Mr. HALE. Well, sir, I am not going into that controversy. If the Senator will allow me I will try to quote a little Latin. Non nostrum tantas componere lites; or, to give you a Yankee translation of it—let every man skin his own game. [Laughter.] That I believe is a fair Yankee translation.

Mr. DAVIS. But if the Senator will allow me, his Yankee translation makes exactly the application. I do not mean to allow him to skin me.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean to do so; and if I said anything of that sort, I retract it; but I was answering the question whether I had not voted to give General Scott this great pay, and I said, no. I voted against giving him the title, or the emoluments which the title carried with it, or anything about it; but he got it, and a controversy did come up—I am not going to say who was right or wrong; but I believe the sense of the Senate was that General Scott was entitled to the money he claimed. Whether anybody else was right in withholding it or not, I do not think the vote said; but when that question came up, it was the opinion entertained in the Senate that he was entitled to it, and I voted for it—that is all.

Now, I will come back to the fisheries. I say that when the spirit of reform seeks a subject, I little wonder that you pass by the $18,000 paid in the shape of commutations, allowances, and rations to General Scott, and the eight or nine thousand dollars that are paid to other officers in the same way, and the four or five thousand dollars paid to colonels, who are quietly living at home, and doing no more actual war service than their wives are. I wonder why you have not looked to those, and endeavored to cut them down to something like a fair compensation, instead of, from motives of economy, going into these fishing bounties. Sir, if anybody wants reform, I can give him food enough to last him a lifetime, of subjects requiring reform, every one of which needs it, in my humble judgment, vastly more than any abuses that have been practiced by these fishermen, or any one concerned in these fisheries.

In the present state of the Treasury, when we are spending some ten million dollars to send an army out to the woods to stay to hear reports from peace commissioners who have gone ahead of them, I am not going to say that it will comport with due economy to pay these fishing bounties; but I will say this: those who have gone before us have looked to them as a very efficient means (and I believe in that they have been eminently wise) of training a navy, and keeping in course of training a corps of seamen on whom you must rely in any time of peril and danger, when an emergency shall arise which shall require you to use your naval materials and put them afloat. They are, in fact, in the place of a standing naval force; only instead of enlisting them and having them in the Navy doing nothing but receiving pay and eating rations, they are receiving a small bounty, earning a living for themselves, and doing good service for their country at the same time. I believe that this policy of the fathers is a wise one, and that it is unsafe, in the present state of information before the Senate, to depart from it. I believe that it would be wise, before we enter on this measure, to seek some counsel, some advice, some information from the naval department of the Government, as well as from the Treasury. I do not suppose that it was ever intended as a money-making business directly; and we knew, and everybody knew, that, to a certain extent, it must be a drain on the Treasury. We need not go to the Treasury Department to find that out; but inasmuch as it has such intimate relations to our naval strength and naval power, and the means of educating seamen, I think it would have been wise and becoming in us to have got some light from that quarter, especially as the efforts that were made by the honorable Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] would have a tendency to satisfy us that there were very important considerations to be looked at in that quarter as well as on the effect that the measure was to have upon the Treasury.

But, sir, as I said before, I really believe that so far as the vote of the Senate is concerned, this is a foregone conclusion; and if I have seemed in speaking to entertain the idea that I was attempting to convince any Senator, I humbly beg his pardon, and assure him that I had no such purpose; and having said that, I leave the subject with the Senate.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, I do not design to detain the Senate long on this question, but simply to give the reasons for my own vote. The importance of the subject I admit at once. From the foundation of the Government to the present time the question of nurturing and cherishing our fisheries has entered into the policy of almost every Administration. It has more or less mingled with all our public and private considerations of policy. But the argument to-day against the repeal of this bounty, has dwindled down to this, (and that is the sole burden of the speech of the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, to which I have listened with great attention,) that the cod fishery must be encouraged and cherished by this bounty, because it is a nursery for seamen, and without it the inference is that the nursery would cease to exist. That, I suppose, is the strong argument—I can conceive of none other—that we derive an equivalent from the American seamen, who are thus created, for the bounty that we give.

Now, sir, I will very briefly state why I have come into this movement, and shall support the bill. These bounties have been given from 1789, almost continuously up to this hour. From 1789 to 1807, there were nine distinct acts passed on the subject governing these drawbacks, bounties, or allowances, as they were called at various times; but throughout the whole of that period from 1789 to 1807, all these bounties and allowances were extended, not only to cured fish, but to beef and pork, and salted provisions. Will those who maintain the argument that these laws originated in the idea of maintaining a school for seamen, pretend that when the bounties were extended equally to beef and pork, they were also to encourage seamen? I have not heard the discussions on this bill; I have not been here for two days to listen to them; but I have read very carefully the reports heretofore made on the subject, particularly the report of Mr. Benton, and the minority report of Mr. Davis, of Massachusetts; and if I understand anything this was a free-trade measure originally. It was connected entirely, solely, and exclusively with the duty upon salt; and it was just that those who imported the salt should have a drawback when they exported fish and provisions which were cured with it, and the drawback was governed by the salt duty. As was remarked by the Senator from Alabama, whose speech I have also read, this allowance was created by the duty on salt, fluctuated with it, grew up with it, and finally, in 1807, when the duty on salt was repealed, all these bounties and allowances were repealed, not only on fish, but on beef and pork.

That is simply the history of these bounties and allowances, and I put the question strongly to gentlemen who contend that this was conceived in the idea of making a nursery for seamen, why it was that they included also beef and pork in the measure? Beef, pork, and fish had to be exported from the country. They had to be salted with foreign salt. If this were a school for seamen the school consisted in the sea-service, in the catching of the fish, in the length of the voyage, and in the manipulation of these little vessels. That was the school. Whether they caught fish or did not catch fish, however successful or unsuccessful the voyage might be, the school to the seamen was the same.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Will the Senator allow me to ask him if he has read Mr. Jefferson's report made in 1792?

Mr. MALLORY. I have only read the extracts from Mr. Jefferson's reports, which are included in Mr. Benton's and Mr. Davis's report.

Mr. FESSENDEN. If the Senator will read that report he will see that one of the main grounds on which it was recommended was as a school for seamen.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. Jefferson was opposed to this very bounty.

Mr. FESSENDEN. He recommended the drawback. He wanted something done.

Mr. MALLORY. If the school for seamen was the original idea, the exportation of the fish would not have been necessary. The catching of the fish, the length of the voyage, the number of men, constituted the school. The exportation from the country had nothing to do with the character of that school.

Now, sir, if the idea of a school for seamen was exclusively in view by the framers of these laws and those who upheld them, why did they not extend the bounty to other branches of fishery? England and France, as long as they have had a whale fishery, and I presume their bounties are still existing, have given the largest bounties to the whale fishery because the whale fishery was regarded as a school for seamen, on account of the length of the voyage and the character of the vessels employed. They gave, as we find in Mr. Benton's report, as much as five hundred pounds to the most successful of the whalers.

If a school for seamen had been the design, why did the act not provide that the seamen should be American? The Senator from New Hampshire has dwelt here an hour on the point that this fishery raises up American seamen. The law never required them to be Americans. It gave the bounty to all, Americans and foreigners alike. I presume, of course, that nine tenths of these cod fishermen are Americans. This results from the immediate neighborhood, from the length of the voyage being only four months; but still we look to the law and the policy enunciated by the law, for a criterion, and that shows that this was not designed expressly as a school for seamen, but was more a free-trade measure, giving them the drawback upon the salt. As I remarked just now, to carry out that idea, when the duty on salt was entirely repealed, all the bounties and allowances fell with it, and no bounties or allowances were made to these fisheries from 1807 to 1813. Now, I do not know what the condition of the cod fishery was during those six years. I am not informed whether the trade languished for the want of the bounty.

Mr. COLLAMER. That was shown here yesterday.

Mr. MALLORY. That may or may not have been the case; but certain it is, that the whole country, all parties of the country, gentlemen representing the fishing districts as well as others, concurred in the withdrawal of the bounty at that time. In 1813, I find that the duty on salt was revived as a war measure, twenty per cent.; and then the bounty was extended to fish; but salted provisions were struck out. Here gentlemen point to this act and say this created a school for seamen. Why, sir, the act was limited to the war. That was a very novel way of creating seamen for a war, when there could be but very little fishing done.

As the law now stands, after the alteration was made requiring a certain portion of the crew to be Americans, or persons owing no allegiance to any foreign prince, potentate, or Power, I presume the bounty is not withheld because the crews of those vessels may not be Americans. I presume that, as the law now stands, all on board, exclusive of the officers, may be persons who are not citizens of the United States. They may have one fourth foreigners who claim not to be citizens, either by the common American protection issued to the seamen, or by a certificate of naturalization. As long as they can show that they are not the subjects of any foreign prince, potentate, or Power; that is, that they are foreign-born persons who owe no allegiance to any foreign country, but who have not acquired a residence in the United States, the bounty is given to them. I presume there is no law in existence now requiring, absolutely, that any portion of the crews of these vessels should be American. I do not know of any. I know how our seamen are made Americans; that is very well understood, and I shall come to it presently.

Had the laws on this subject subsequent to 1807 regarded this exclusively as a nursery for seamen, they would have confined it to American seamen, and they would have given the bounty to the employment of American seamen, and would not have made it depend at all upon the amount of fish caught, but upon the time employed in the catching. It is not the catching of the fish that constitutes the seaman, but it is the length of the voyage, and the manipulation of the vessel. I am ready to concede that this is a school and nursery for seamen, and a very important one, indeed. I differ with my friend from Alabama in that respect. I think he underrates the value of these men. I know that the impression among some of the leading officers of our service is, that they would rather have a crew of these men, ignorant as they are of the management of square-rigged vessels, than such a crew as you pick up from the receiving ships, generally made up of men of all nations, because they have overcome the repugnance to sea of a landsman; they have accustomed themselves to the sea; they know how to do all the little odd jobs about a vessel; they have gone through such an apprenticeship that a very little tuition on board a square-rigged vessel will develop what they have learned into usefulness; and they are nearly all American seamen.

Thirteen thousand of these men are employed in the fisheries. I have made an estimate of our seamen now. I know of no accurate way the Government has prescribed for reaching exactly the number of American seamen employed. We have no means of determining those who are bona fide American seamen; but I speak now of those who claim the protection of the American flag, sailing in American vessels. I make the calculation in this way: Great Britain has at this day in her merchant service, 4,211,048 tons; we have in our merchant service, 4,840,843 tons, exceeding her by about seven hundred thousand. She has this day, according to the best registers which I have been able to consult, 179,387 seamen employed in her merchant service. I make the calculation in this way, that as her tonnage is to her merchant seamen, so will our tonnage be to our merchant seamen. That is not entirely accurate, because we sail our ships with smaller crews than the British merchant vessels; we have a great many appliances which they have not. Our merchant vessels are the finest in the world, far exceeding theirs in every point. We use patent roller blocks; we use windlasses with a thousand contrivances; we use patent braces to our yards, and we use other appliances to dispense with men. The calculation, therefore, is not exactly accurate; but it approximates to correctness; and, according to this calculation, we find that we have 210,405 seamen, of which number 13,000 are employed in the cod fisheries.

The Senate will perceive at once how small a proportion of this entire aggregate of seamen we get from these fisheries. Here let me say, that the seamen of these fisheries never go into our Navy or merchant service. Search the merchant service from Maine to Texas to-day, and you will find no cod fishermen in it. They are far too intelligent for that. There are very few pursuits in this country which do not yield to the industrious hand a greater remuneration for his labor than going to sea. These cod fishermen are men of families. They make a short voyage of four months, and before the system of railroads grew up, many of them were stage-drivers. You found them everywhere as stage-drivers; it was a favorite pursuit with them. They are useful men in almost every walk of society; men elevated, by intelligence, far above the ordinary sailor, and who command a greater price for their wages everywhere over the world. You do not find them in the Navy and merchant marine; but you find them about the localities from whence they come. Therefore, although I concede that this is a school and nursery for seamen, I say it is not one that deserves exclusive bounties to keep it up. The oyster boats of the Chesapeake and Delaware bay, the fishermen all along the coast of Florida, where they have been shipping salted fish to Havana, cured with foreign salt, for twenty-five or thirty years—before the change of flag, and since that time—the smacks employed in carrying live fish from the coast of Florida to Cuba, the boatmen along shore, all those who supply oysters and scale and shell fish to our large cities, are all schools for seamen. These thirteen thousand men bear a small proportion to the merchant seamen, and, in my judgment, the time has passed when they merit any exclusive support.

The Senator from New Hampshire contends—and I understand that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] maintains the same idea—that, without these bounties, this fishery will decline, perhaps become extinct. They say it cannot maintain itself in the face of the importations from the British Provinces, under our reciprocity treaty. That may be so; but I undertake to say that, if you will take the bounties that you give to this fishery, and give the amount as an addition to the wages of your seamen, you will have the choice seamen of the whole world, in peace and in war. Apply the amount of these allowances directly to compensating seamen, and what better bounty could you have for a nursery for seamen?

The idea that we have American seamen to navigate our merchant marine or our Navy is fallacious. We have no such thing; we never have had, and we never can have, and for the reason that we cannot get them; because, in this country, as I have said, almost every branch of industry affords a greater remuneration than going to sea, and no man will go to sea who can stay ashore. We have known this so well that we have paid the highest wages in the world, and therefore we get the choice of seamen.

Now, let me show you what the British pay for their seamen, and they have put the wages up after encountering this difficulty; a frigate would sometimes lie in a British port, in an emergency, three months without being able to get a crew; and they have given the highest rate of wages their treasury would afford. They give their leading seamen—certain men who have proved of fine character and long service—$12 93 a month; they give their able seamen $11 70 a month; their ordinary seamen $9 24 a month; their ordinary seamen of the second class $7 39 a month; their boys of the first class $4 31; and boys of the second class $3 69. We have but two classes of seamen, able seamen and ordinary seamen. To an able seaman we give $18 00; to our ordinary seamen $14 00; and to landsmen $12 00; we give our boys eight, nine, and ten dollars. In other words, we give to our seamen fifty per cent. more than the highest commercial nation in the world, and we give to our boys one hundred per cent. more. France, Russia, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, all the commercial Powers upon the northern seas give far less than Great Britain. She gives the highest wages next to ourselves. We have adhered to this policy thus far, and it enabled us to get the pick of seamen in 1812. We had more seamen than we wanted. When we went into the war of 1812 we had one hundred thousand registered seamen. We got more than we wanted. Great Britain, in her recent difficulties with Russia, has found that she was unable to get seamen. It is because of the superior treatment of the seaman, his higher character, in our service, and the higher social position he enjoys relatively to other classes of society, that we get the best.

I say, as long as this policy is pursued of giving liberal wages—and they are only in accordance with the rates of compensation to other branches of industry in our country; and in Great Britain her wages to seamen are in proportion to her compensation to other branches of industry—as long as we pursue this policy we shall get the best seamen; and, if it is necessary to give a bounty, let us give it to men who go into the service. Let us give it to them after going into the merchant service or Navy. Give it directly, but not indirectly; for it now goes into the hands of ship-owners. Gentlemen, I presume, will say that a portion of this bounty, which is received by the fishing vessels, is divided out to the seamen in proportion to their several merits. Well, sir, the inquiries I have made on this subject lead me to the conclusion, that, whenever money goes into the hands of a ship-owner, to be divided among his crew, to be retained till the settlement of accounts, his advance to them will always liquidate the amount to be advanced. In other words, the pipes and tobacco that Jack has drawn—those are the common terms he uses—from the purser or clerk of the vessel, always counterbalance any advance he is to receive. That is the universal custom among seamen, and I presume these cod fishermen are like all the rest.

It would be well if any mercantile Power like ourselves could, in the event of a war, rely upon having our national vessels manned by native or naturalized seamen; but that is a chimera; we cannot expect it; we cannot offer them inducements enough to go into the business; they get higher inducements on shore. In the event of a war to-morrow, if we adopted the privateering system, our native and naturalized citizens would rush into the privateers, because there a different discipline, the hopes of larger reward, and the prospect of office and promotion, hold out greater inducements. In the war of 1812, it is well known that we had a very large proportion of foreign seamen. It was charged upon us repeatedly that we were using extraordinary devices to entice seamen from the ships of Great Britain; and it has been correctly remarked by the Senator from New Hampshire, that the impressment of those men from our vessels brought on hostilities. We all recollect or have read the incident of the ship Baltimore, from which five seamen were taken, and there were other similar cases which preceded the war. The hostility of British and Irish and Scotch seamen to their own service was very great, indeed; it broke out on all occasions. Whenever an American ship went alongside an English ship she received deserters night and day.

I will only allude here to the case of the Essex. Gentlemen may possibly recollect that Captain Smith was in the Essex, at Portsmouth, in 1811. The commodore of the port sent an officer on board, notifying him that he had British seamen in his vessel who were deserters, and the officer identified one. The man claimed that he was an American; but he could produce no proof of that; and on the other hand it was proved that he was a Scotchman. This man, rather than give up, took the carpenter's hatchet, and deliberately cut off his left hand, and holding it up in his right hand, gave it to the officer who came after him. That is not a solitary instance; but it shows the repugnance the British seamen had at that time to going into their own service. The Constitution subsequently went into an English port and surrendered a seaman to a British officer because the seaman acknowledged that he was an Englishman. Our officer undertook to prove by the rolls that he was an American, and they had no proof that he was an Englishman except his own acknowledgment; but the commodore of the British station said they must take that proof. On the following day an Irishman, whose language would betray him anywhere, swam on board the Constitution, and when he was demanded the next day, and was called up, he told the British commodore to his face, in the broadest Irish brogue, that he was an American, and Commodore Hull immediately said he must take the declaration of the man, as he had been served so on the previous day; and there the matter ended.

If it were necessary, I could go into an investigation of this matter, and show that a very large proportion of the men who fought in our national vessels were men picked up from all parts of the world. Your veritable seaman is a cosmopolitan. He goes where he can get the most wages and the best service; and the very moment he becomes identified with a locality like these Cape Cod men, he ceases to be a seaman; he will not go to sea if he can get money enough to buy a farm, and stay on shore. Your true seaman is a man who has no home but the sea; who seeks the highest prize-money, the largest wages, and the best treatment all over the world. I have taken some pains to poll our ships to prove this fact. We all recollect Commander Ingraham's difficulty at Smyrna. When he came home, he polled his ship; and he found that he had nineteen Americans out of one hundred and seventy seamen. I have had several ships polled myself to show this fact; and before the increase of wages to eighteen dollars a month, there generally proved to be one American in five seamen. Since the increase of wages, the proportion is about one in three; and we are getting a better class of American seamen every day since the increase of wages.

The merchant service in our country is the true nursery for seamen. It is the nursery because it gives them the highest rewards; it treats them best; it attracts them. The wages out of New York now to other ports than San Francisco—for sailors are all anxious to get to California—average from nineteen to twenty-five dollars a month. That makes the general income of the merchant sailor about equal to that of one in the Navy. When they get from twenty-three to twenty-four dollars in the merchant service, the sailor will make more by going into the Navy at eighteen dollars, because the voyage is longer; he preserves his money, and has no temptation to spend it. But the Senate will see that the merchant service of the United States, with its regulated discipline, its excellent rations, superior to those of any other country, its short voyages, its rapid promotions, and the facility with which naturalization papers may be obtained, and an interest in the voyage taken, must necessarily attract the choice seamen of the whole world to it. The merchant service of the country is the nursery of seamen; and of the number of our seamen, two hundred thousand, the cod fishermen, who are only thirteen thousand, are but a small proportion; and I do not think that at this day they deserve any peculiar encouragement. I will not say anything now on the question of bounty. I would not vote for any bounty; but I am meeting the argument that this is a nursery for seamen.

The Senator from New Hampshire, in connection with this matter, has alluded particularly to this disposition to cherish the Navy. He says he is its best friend, having warred against its abuses. Well, sir, I suppose that those whom we love we chasten most; and on that principle, no doubt, the Senator from New Hampshire is a good friend of the Navy, because he has brought in a proposition to abolish it altogether, and to employ naval officers as we employ other men, when we want them, and pay them, and get them from the merchant service, or otherwise—in other words, to have a navy on the spur of the moment, to fee a naval officer as you would a lawyer—hire him for a special service.

I do not suppose that any bounty we could give to any particular branch of industry would work any better than the present system does by producing American seamen. I presume that, under our existing trade, we shall get the choice seamen in the world. Now, to show how our tonnage has increased, let me refer to a few facts. In 1815, we had but 1,368,127 tons; and I see by the return of registered tonnage this year we have 4,940,843 tons. In other words, without any particular bounties, except those to the cod fishery, we have outstripped all the nations of the world in our tonnage and in our seamen; we have the best seamen in the world. If you take a seaman from the northern coast of Europe, where many of our men come from, and put him on board an American vessel with the improvements in navigation, under American officers, and he is known in twelve months to become another man. The French seaman, the seaman of the Baltic, the seaman of the British Channel, the Fin, the Scotchman, the Irishman, who engages in sea service, is nothing but a seaman. Poets have immortalized this idea. Every poet of the sea has told you that the home of the sailor is upon the deep, and Barry Cornwall, in his celebrated song of the sea, has made his hero say that the moment he is on the shore he sighs for the deep blue sea. So it is, sir. The boy, when he is six or seven years of age, is put to sea. He thrives upon kicks and cuffs, and he comes, in the course of time to such a condition that nothing but kicks and cuffs and rough usage will answer. These Cape Cod men that you talk about, are more or less gentlemen; they are men who have families on shore, a home, kindred, friends, ties—all binding them down to their native coasts. They will not subject themselves to the rough usages of seamen, and you never find them in the merchant marine, or in the Navy. If we had a privateer service they would go into it, and they would be captains, mates, and owners of vessels, and get prize-money; but they do not go into our Navy or our merchant service.

In 1812, I know well that the fight which gave the American Navy a history to write, which created the greatest éclat, which tore the trident of invincibility from Great Britain at once, and reared us up into a first-class naval Power, was fought principally by Marblehead and northern fishermen. If you take the pay-roll of the Constitution to-day, you will find Yankee names on it prevailing throughout the whole roll. But I would say that, however necessary it might be in the commencement of a war to continue this bounty, the wisdom of Congress was just at that time, for they only continued it during the war. When the bounty was repealed, as I said before, the whole common sense of the country concurred in it; and I find that, in the House of Representatives, the vote stood 125 for the repeal to only 5 against it. Here in this enlightened day, (1858,) with all these facts before us, with free-trade principles afloat, with protection surrendered, not finding an advocate on this floor, I think the time has come when gentlemen representing the districts which enjoy this bounty should rise gracefully and say: "We want it no more; we have profited by it; but now we will agree to give the $300,000 a year we receive as fishing bounty as an addition to the wages of seamen in the merchant and naval service."

I shall not detain the Senate longer. I have already said more than I intended. I may have gone over ground that has been occupied by others; but my apology is, that I have not heard the debates heretofore on this bill.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I did wish, at the close of the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire, to say something; but he is not in his seat, and I will say nothing now in relation to that allusion which he made to me, and which, I hope, is more in accordance with the courtesy of the Senate and the sentiments of a gentleman than my judgment would decide.

The question which is before the Senate, though it is an amendment, involves in the debate the whole subject of the proposition to repeal the bounties paid to the cod fishermen. The question has two views, to which I propose generally to refer, for my physical condition will not enable me to go into the details, and my friend from Alabama has so ably covered the whole ground, that it would be quite superfluous for me to attempt it, if my condition were other than what it is.

The division, I think, is between the power and the policy. The Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] in his argument yesterday, called on the Senator from Alabama to show what clause in the Constitution prohibited it. That is not the rule, sir. It rests upon the other party to show what clause in the Constitution grants it. The Federal Government is made up of grants. It has no inherent power; it possesses nothing per se; and has now only what the Constitution gave to it; and it therefore devolves on those who claim any particular legislation, that they shall show whence they derive the authority; not call upon those who object to show that it is prohibited in the Constitution. I can very well perceive from what clause of the Constitution the power was originally drawn. When it was in the form of a drawback upon the foreign salt which was used in curing fish, it was easily referable to the power to regulate commerce. When, however, it was made to rest upon a different basis, that of cheap food for the poor, it had no clause in the Constitution to which it could be referred. When it assumed the form which it now occupies, that of a means of providing sailors for the Navy, it would have to be referable to the naval power; and when you reach that point, the power to maintain a Navy, it immediately becomes a question of policy whether this is the best mode of maintaining a Navy or not. Now, if gentlemen on the other side of this question will prove to me that this is the best mode of maintaining a navy, I concede the policy.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator will excuse me for interrupting him, as he has alluded to me.

Mr. DAVIS. Certainly.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think he could not have attended to my remarks. I might have put such a question as he states; but I went on to take the same ground he is now taking in reference to the derivation of the power.

Mr. DAVIS. Unfortunately I have not been able to read the Senator's remarks; I only get at them as I listened to them. I thought he put the argument as I stated it; but I am glad to be corrected. I say, then, that if they can establish that this is the best and cheapest way of maintaining a navy, I have no constitutional objection to this mode of appropriating money, though, as a matter of policy, I should say it was an indirect, and therefore an objectionable mode. It is within the power, but still bad policy. But if that be true, then you should include all fishermen; and you must largely increase the number, besides those fishing for cod. Or is it, on the other hand, true that fishing for cod peculiarly trains a seaman? Is it true, as has been drawn from the argument, that they were found on our ships in the war of 1812; that their pursuit drew them there; or is it not referable to the fact that that war was waged with Great Britain, the great maritime Power that owned the banks; that our fishermen were driven off; that their employment was gone; and that, therefore, they were forced into our privateers and ships of war? If the war had been waged with France, then the French fishermen would have been driven off the banks—driven off by the courage and skill of our own fishermen. It was because of the power of the British navy, and because of their proximity to the banks, that our fishermen were driven away; and being driven away, I say they were to be found in our vessels, public and private, that were engaged in armed service.

But I observe that the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] in his argument, seemed to refer all the naval power of every country, our own included, to their nursery of fishermen. I should wholly dissent from this. That fishing is one of those aquatic occupations that fit a man to go to sea, is true, whatever the character of the fishing may be. That it is to that extent a sort of training for the Navy, is true. But the cases which were cited of Holland and of Spain, are cases which I think are referable to a totally different cause. They had fishermen and they had, to some extent, seamen; but when Holland lost the Dutch East Indies, and when Spain lost the American colonies, their naval power declined, but their fisheries remain still. Why have not the fishermen, if they were the cause of their naval power, maintained it? Why has Great Britain, on the other hand, maintaining her colonies all over the globe, maintained her naval power in the face of every opposition?

Then again, sir, there are other causes. The Greeks and Venetians were great naval Powers, because of their harbors, because the people looked out on the seas. The people of Maine are, because that portion of our coast, more than any other, is indented with deep and fine harbors. The people of Indiana are not so; their State touches at one point on a lake where nature made no harbor, and art has not yet made one. We go to Maine to find seamen, not to Indiana; and it is the result of natural causes, geographical causes. Our own country, I think fortunately, has had no colonial possessions. Early, therefore, she sought to encourage seamanship by fishing bounties and by navigation laws. They are of the same character of class legislation, and to my mind objectionable. They are, I say, unequal, because they are class legislation, not because one portion of the country gets the advantage of them, and another cannot. Though that is the answer which has been made to the argument, I hold it to be no answer at all.

Neither do I admit that the men who live in the neighborhood of these fisheries, and point to their prowess in the war of 1812, have any right to appropriate that glory to themselves. It is mine as an American—mine as much as that of any other man; and, sir, I am sure my friend from Alabama, as little as myself, would wish to detract in any degree from the gallantry and the enterprise and the glory of the Yankee sailors who won so many battles in the war of 1812. As much as those who live nearer to them, do I honor the hardihood, the energy, and courage which have carried them into every sea where there is water enough to float a ship, and have made our emblematic flag respected and known all over the globe. And, sir, it is the high attributes they have exemplified in so many pursuits where they were not fostered by the hand of the Government, which encourages me to believe that they will stand alone in this as in others, if you put them all on the same general level. Every duty which is imposed as protection, I put on the same footing of class legislation as the fishing bounties—not those duties, however, which are imposed for revenue, so long as the policy of our Government is to collect the money with which the Government is supported, by duties on imports. I think our present system objectionable; I would prefer a radical change; and if that radical change is not to be made, I think a very great variation of duties is due to justice and equality. They should be laid simply for the purpose of revenue, and that should be a mere calculation of revenue, beyond the extent to which the encouragement of certain articles is necessary as a means of national defense. Wherever that is shown, to that extent I am willing to go.

If, then, Mr. President, this is not shown to be the best means of maintaining a Navy, (and I do not think it can be, and I do not think it has been,) I say upon the mere question of policy the proposition falls, and the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama should be adopted. But it may be asked why, if you say this is not the best means of maintaining a Navy, you do not suggest some other. Very well; I will. Suppose the two hundred and fifty or three hundred thousand dollars a year now paid in bounties were paid to vessels carrying a certain number of apprentices in proportion to their tonnage; suppose every merchantman was offered an inducement for carrying a proportion of apprentices: the boys then that lie around your wharves, the boys that are penniless and homeless and parentless in your great commercial cities, would become apprentices under masters of merchant vessels, and thus you would build up American seamen, step by step, to displace the foreigners who are now found both in the merchant service and in the public vessels. This, I hold, would be a legitimate step; for these foreigners are not only found as the seamen upon your public vessels, but the petty officers of the great armed ships of the United States are, to a great extent, foreigners also, and for the reason that they are educated from their youth to the profession of sailors, and therefore are better competent to perform the duties. But, sir, if an American vessel were engaged in battle, with your guns in the hands of foreigners, what assurance have you that these foreigners might not prove faithless to the flag to which they were bound by no tie of allegiance? How easy it would be for the captain of a gun to cripple the gun, to overshoot or undershoot the enemy, and thus to render you powerless by the mere action of the men to whom you intrust these small charges that must belong to the deck of every armed vessel.

Nor would it be necessary to pay out this money to the captains and the apprentices. You could manage that readily under your regulations. You could do it by remitting port charges, clearance duties, and entrance duties to merchant ships that carried a certain number of apprentices; and thus, without paying out a dollar, or incurring your expense a single cent more than is now incurred, you could obtain a number of apprentices, who, step by step, would give you American seamen. They would more than supply the places of all your fishermen, if all the fishermen were to be taken from your vessels in any contingency; and they would leave the fishing business to rest, as justly it ought, on its own bottom, and to seek its reward as other pursuits of industry do.

But, sir, it has been further argued that the raising of seamen for the Navy in this way rests upon the same footing as the public schools at West Point or Annapolis. If any one will prove to me that the appropriations made for the Military Academy are made to educate men for the Army, I say away with them; and, on the other hand, I claim of those who urge this argument, that if they see, as they must see if they will examine, that these appropriations are made to educate the warrant officers of the Army, and that it is a mere question of economy and advantage whether they shall be thus educated, or in some other mode; then, I say, they must admit it does not stand at all on the same footing as a bounty paid to persons who owe no obligations to serve the United States.

The cadets in the Military Academy enter into an obligation to serve the United States for a term of years, greatly beyond that in which they are at the Academy—three years longer; and that absorbs a period of eight years in the life of a young man, which carries him so far forward that if he has any military taste the probability is, unless some accident which he cannot foresee happens, that he will die in the service of the United States in the Army. Being a warrant officer of the United States, the question then is, shall you send him to a regiment to be educated, or shall you send him to the Military Academy, where he will receive a regular course of instruction under able professors, and advance rapidly towards the attainment of those elements which he probably will never acquire serving in a regiment? You must educate your officer somewhere. You must educate him in the regiment or in the Academy. If you educate him in the regiment you must educate him with the pay of a commissioned officer, and you must take a long term of years, because his studies are broken up by constant intervals of duty. If you send him to the Academy you there confine him to his studies; you direct his studies; you furnish him the books; and you lead him on step by step in that regular succession of elementary studies which no man can mark out for himself. I say, then, they are educated in the Army, as much as if they were sent to the regiments, there to learn their profession by performing duty, with this great advantage: you compel them to learn elements which, in the other case, they could not do; and you only give them the right to command men when they have learned to obey and know how to exercise the functions of an officer. The Naval School I do not know so much about; but I find myself so far exhausted that I will not enter upon a new topic. I do not know that I should have been tempted to say so much but for the strange propositions, as it strikes me, which have been introduced into the argument.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to say a few words merely in explanation of the vote I shall give against this amendment. I shall vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire when it is in order, and also against the amendment which postpones the operation of this bill. The Senator from New Hampshire says that he is opposed to monopolies. Without questioning the sincerity of his statement, I must say that he takes the most effectual method to perpetuate them; for whenever an abuse becomes so gross that it can no longer be defended, nor any pretext invented for it, the sure way to prevent its abolition is to introduce a variety of collateral questions. Now, sir, I am not satisfied with the present system under which the Military Academy and the Naval School are conducted; I do not believe they are as efficient as they might be, in proportion to the amount of public money expended on them; but I have no idea of defeating this bill by attaching provisions upon any collateral questions to it.

Mr. President, what is this case before us? Here are a few thousand men in several of the New England States who go out in the course of the year to catch cod fish and other fish. It is a very honest business; I have nothing to say against it, and I have nothing to say against them; I presume they are useful citizens of the United States, and they have my thanks for being useful and industrious; but they go out to catch fish in their own boats; they bring the fish home; they sell them either salted or dried; and they put the money in their pockets. That is the sum total of their services; and you and I, sir, are asked to levy a tax on our constituents who till the soil, who engage in employments equally honorable and industrious—I am asked to impose a tax on the thousands of my constituents who live along Lake Erie, and catch fish on which no bounty is paid—for what? What elevates these gentlemen to the rank of aristocrats, that they are to be supported at the expense of all the other laboring men of the United States? It is a question that must come home to us. How can we justify it? What is the excuse for it? There has none been made that can stand the test of a moment's examination.

I am satisfied, on examining these various statutes, that this was originally a free-trade proposition. It was intended in all cases of salted fish and salted provisions exported, to give a drawback, or a bounty equivalent to the drawback, on the foreign salt used in curing them. I think it was a good doctrine. It is a doctrine I am willing to see applied to a very large extent in our revenue laws. I have no doubt that some arguments were thrown in as make-weights about the same time, to the effect that it might encourage seamen, or prove a nursery of seamen, and all that sort of thing; but the language of the law, the manifest purpose of this drawback originally was to give the party a compensation for the duty on the salt, as he exported the provisions and imported the salt. The only difficulty that has arisen in my mind has been upon the act of 1813, the one now in force. The first three sections of that act plainly contemplate a drawback in the case of salted fish: The last sections, those which are now in force, giving a bounty on the vessel, hardly seem, in their language, to carry out that design; but when I consider that the tenth section of the act continued these bounties in force only during the war with Great Britain and her dependencies, I am satisfied that it was a measure of hostility, that it was intended to stimulate the men engaged in these fisheries in New England to drive the English colonists out of the fisheries near the English dominions. The last section says:

"This act shall continue in force until the termination of the war in which the United States are now engaged with the United Kingdoms of Great Britain and Ireland, and the dependencies thereof, and for one year thereafter, and no longer."

I am satisfied that it was intended to encourage the fishermen to take possession of the fisheries in time of war.

Well, sir, we come down to the tariff of 1816; and we all know that in those days the argument was made that during the war certain branches of industry, manufactures, and many others, had grown up under the protection of the war by the exclusion of foreign goods and the products of foreign industry, and that, therefore there ought not to be an immediate reduction; and I believe that was the excuse given by Mr. Calhoun and many others who voted for the tariff of 1816; and under that, these bounties were continued.

But, sir, we have revised all that system; we have struck this element of protection out of every other department of industry. This is the last relic of the system. It has survived the reason on which it was founded; it has survived all the circumstances out of which it originated; and it remains now as a single, solitary abuse, for which no apology can be given. Talk about a nursery of seamen! Why, sir, it is a premium not to be seamen. Tell me that, when you give these gentlemen a bounty for going in their fishing smacks, and fishing along the coast, they will quit that business to go into the Navy, where they get no bounty! It is a bounty to them to stay out of the Navy; it is a bounty to go into their own profitable employment, and be paid to remain there, and to remain out of the Navy. If, however, this allegation were true, I would say, with the Senator from Florida, increase the pay of the seaman; pay the man who goes into the Navy; and not pay a man to learn how to go into the Navy, and then not go into it. Are we to go upon such doctrines as these? Why, I suppose the Senator from Delaware will next want us to pay a bounty to his constituents for manufacturing gunpowder, in order that we may have a good article of gunpowder by the time of the next war; and so we shall go on. Every field of industrial pursuit, which may contribute to the common defense by land or by sea in time of hostilities, is to be stimulated and protected during all the years of peace. No, sir. If this is a legitimate business; if it is a business which ought to engage the industry of these gentlemen, it will pay them well. If it does not pay them, they had better betake themselves to some other employment. I am satisfied, as I said before, that the whole reason, whether you consider it as a drawback or a protection, of these bounties, has long since ceased, and that they now stand as the last relic of the protective system, whereby the industry of two thirds of this nation has been plundered for the aggrandizement of a few persons in the eastern States.

I said I should vote against the proposition to defer the repeal, because I think the last day of December, 1859, is sufficient. They get two years bounty under the bill, and that is time enough for them to quit. There was no mercy shown to anybody else at the time we set up here a whole night, at the last session of Congress, to pass the tariff bill, when, by one fell swoop, in twenty-four hours you struck down the duties upon a great variety of articles. When my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BIGLER] stood up here with his then colleague, [Mr. BRODHEAD], and implored us to protect the iron interest, we did not give them a year, or two years, or any other period in which to bring their account to a settlement; we cut them off square. Now, we give these gentlemen eighteen months' notice, and we are asked to give them six years more than that. The amount of it will be that the system will be perpetual.

I understand there is another amendment, which has been offered, though it has not been read from the desk, by the Senator from Rhode Island, [Mr. ALLEN,] and that is to repeal the duty on salt as an additional section. I would be inclined to vote for that proposition, as at present advised, in a separate bill; but I am satisfied that to attach it to this bill will hazard the success of the bill; and, inasmuch as we are likely to have a general revision of the tariff before long, I think the salt duty may remain; and especially as, under a section of the tariff act of 1846, which is yet in force, there is a drawback allowed on all pickled or salted fish exported equal to the whole amount of the salt duty. I say the fifth section of the tariff act of 1846 allows these fishermen a drawback on all the exported fish equal to the amount of the salt duty; and that section, I presume, it is not the design of my friend from Alabama to affect; but, lest there may be any difficulty on that point, I will suggest to him to add a proviso to his bill that nothing contained in it shall interfere with that section. Then, surely, these men are better off than anybody else; for my constituents, who cure beef and pork, have no drawback on exportation on account of the salt they use; and I think that allowing the drawback on the salted fish exported to remain, under the act of 1846, will be sufficient. Therefore, although I might be inclined, and would be inclined, as at present advised, to vote for an abolition or reduction of the salt duty, I am satisfied that this bill is not the place to put it, and that it had better wait until we have a revision of the tariff.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, the honorable Senator from New Hampshire has committed what I think is a very grave error, calculated to mislead the Senate and the country in regard to an important collateral point in this discussion. He has done so without excuse. He has magnified his ability and qualifications to instruct the Senate in the taking of fish by boasting of his education, and of his location within ten miles of the seashore; nevertheless, in the lecture which he has given us on the subject of the taking of cod and halibut, he has left the Senate under the belief that it is an affair perfectly easy and simple to take a halibut with a cod hook. Now, whoever shall attempt that will find himself mistaken, unless he has the gaffs ready to seize the halibut when brought to the water's edge, so as to prevent him breaking the hook and making off again into his deep-sea home.

He has misled the Senate in regard to another important point. He has encouraged landmen to expect that they can take mackerel with a hook and line, if the hook be delicate enough. This is an idea that is peculiar to the British fishermen in the lower Province of Canada. Whoever will go upon those fishing grounds will discover that there is nobody who can maintain a mackerel voyage successfully and prosperously except a Yankee; and that the reason why he is successful is, that he takes a mill with him on board his vessel, and a supply of herring and other materials for bait, and he grinds them in his idle hours in the evenings and mornings, and when no schools are about. When you see a vessel that is engaged in the mackerel fishing, if it be a mile, or two or three or four or five miles from you, and you attempt to board it, you find yourself in a very short time in a sea that is covered with what appears to be offal, refuse matter, which is thrown overboard by the mackerel fishermen, after having been ground in that mill. In that way the mackerel which go in shoals are attracted and baited. Then, if he is a shrewd fisherman, he draws them on nearer to the land, and then a seine will take more mackerel in one hour than my honorable friend from New Hampshire would take in all his life with hooks, however small, and lines however delicate. I have thought it proper to amend my honorable friend's instructions and omissions in regard to this important art and interest.

Mr. President, I shall not undertake to demonstrate the power of Congress to continue these bounties to the fishermen. It is enough for my present purpose that, when the constitutional Government of the United States went into operation, and the First Congress was held in the year 1789, those who constituted that Congress understood as well as we how to interpret the constitutional powers to regulate commerce, and how to exercise the power to establish and maintain a Navy; and that that Congress, and all succeeding Congresses from that time, with the exception of a period of four years, maintained this system of bounties to the cod fisheries.

I have but a word to say in regard to the prejudice that is sought to be raised against this system because it is local. It is true that the fisheries of the United States are in one sense local. The fields of the cod fish and mackerel fisheries are local, and near to our own shores and the shores of the British Provinces. It is necessary to go where the fish inhabit, if you mean to take them; but they inhabit the waters in high latitudes. It is no more local than the whale fishery; for the enterprise of the whale fishery is pursued in substantially the same region; although the whale are chased under the north and south poles. The men who harpoon them, and the vessels which bring them in, and the merchants who sell them, are all found in three of the New England States, and those of the New England States that are directly on the ocean, Maine, New Hampshire, and Massachusetts. This system of industry benefits first, perhaps benefits most, the citizens living in that locality; but it is no more a local interest than the gold mining of California. That is peculiarly local; and yet upon the prosperity and success of gold mining for a single year may depend the solvency of the Government and of the whole country. A misfortune, an accident, or a calamity that could arrest it for a single year might embarrass the whole commercial, and even the political world. It is no more local than the raising of cotton and of sugar, which must be raised in certain latitudes under or near the tropics. For all that, cotton, we have heard here, is king in commerce; king in the commerce not only of this continent, but universal monarch in the commerce of the whole world.

Mr. President, if the United States were confined in their settlements and population to New England alone, there would probably be no necessity for bounty on fisheries for the support of commerce and the establishment of naval power. It is precisely because the United States is a great Power, reaching over an extended country, developing the varied resources of a continent that it was found necessary originally, and in my judgment has continued ever since to be necessary, to encourage and sustain the fisheries as a nursery for the mercantile and the national marine—an institution to promote the commerce of the country, and to increase the power of the country. To establish this institution it was necessary to go to where these fisheries were, in order to sustain them; because they were in that sense local. But when the Government of the United States, with an immense western domain, reaching at the earliest day to the Mississippi, and since extended to the Pacific ocean, opened all that vast domain to agriculture, inviting and tempting immigration from the sea-coast into the interior, by the distribution of that land at prices practically nominal to all the undergrowth of American population and to population from Europe, the Government of the United States thereby powerfully protected and stimulated agriculture. The United States have ever since continued to protect agriculture in that way, with a force, with an energy, with a munificence, such as the world has never before seen applied to such a purpose. It is owing to that protection that the United States have become a great agricultural people—already one of the greatest, and soon to become the greatest of all agricultural nations.

The United States were not content to be merely an agricultural people, for they were ambitious. They knew that no nation can be truly great that keeps in operation only one wheel of industry. There are three of these wheels in a perfect national engine, and they must all three be kept in activity and in motion. They mutually interlock and work with each other. These are, agriculture, manufactures, and commerce. The Government found in 1789, that, although an agricultural people, with this vast domain, we were incapable of maintaining a Government, and were even incapable of discharging the debt of the Revolution. It was necessary that they should become a commercial people, that they should become a maritime Power, or else they could have no revenues adequate to sustaining and maintaining the dignity of the Government, to say nothing of paying its national debt. Imposts on foreign commerce, and not direct taxes, are the resources, the system, by which Governments are maintained throughout the world in this age. In order to provide for our national debt, besides appropriating the proceeds of the sales of the public lands, it was necessary to foster and encourage commerce. The United States at that time furnished comparatively no merchants, no trade; and it was necessary to call that trade into being. For that purpose, two institutions or systems were adopted. One was the establishment of navigation laws, which practically gave bounties to our ship-builders, by preferences in trade, amounting almost to exclusion, in favor of vessels navigating the waters of the United States which were built within the United States. This act was copied from the great policy of Cromwell, when at the head of the Commonwealth of England, from which dated the downfall of its great adversary, the Republic of the Netherlands, and the subsequent growth and now perfect development of the British Empire.

The other of these institutions was a nursery for seamen. This nursery, like any other, in order to be prolific, in order to be successful, must be established in a climate congenial with it; and that climate which was congenial with it was the rocky shores of New England, where agriculture and trade offered the smallest seductions. The Government of the United States, in 1789, probably did not mistake and make an erroneous calculation on that subject, because they built upon the policy of the British Government—a policy which had already secured to the colonies of Great Britain the advantages and resources and strength by which they were enabled to emancipate themselves from the mother country.

The manner in which the system worked was simple enough. Landsmen were tempted by bounties to enter into the cod fisheries. It was, as stated by my excellent friend from New Hampshire, immaterial whether they took cod or mackerel, provided they became watermen, and became accustomed to the enterprises and dangers of a seafaring life. In that way the system of commerce was established, and upon that basis the naval power of the United States was established. For these purposes the bounties have continued; and why shall they now be abandoned? Have they been unfruitful in their results? The cod fisheries of the United States alone, to-day, exceed five times in tonnage the cod fisheries of the United States in 1789. There has been only a period of four years during that long time in which the bounties were withdrawn, and during those four years the tonnage fell off from twenty-five thousand tons to seventeen thousand tons. The very first year after the bounties were restored the tonnage rose from seventeen thousand tons to thirty-four thousand tons, and has gone on increasing ever since.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to correct an error in the Senator from New York. He said, if I understood him aright, a moment ago, that the tonnage in the cod fisheries, at this time, exceeded by more than fivefold the tonnage in 1789.

Mr. SEWARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAY. Well, sir, the tonnage in the fisheries, in 1790, was represented by Mr. Ames, at that day, to be thirty-one thousand eight hundred and forty-two tons. The average tonnage during the last decade, in the same fisheries, has been about ninety thousand—not three times as great as it was at that day, according to the representation of Mr. Ames, in his speech of 1792.

Mr. SEWARD. I am obliged to my honorable friend; but I am substantially right, I think. I did not say more than five times; but five times the tonnage in 1789. By the official report before me, it appears that the tonnage employed in the fisheries in that year was nineteen thousand eight hundred and ninety tons, and in 1851 the tonnage was ninety thousand—practically, five times as much. Besides the objects, as we all know, were not the taking of cod fish, or the taking of any other fish; but the objects were the collateral ones, the national ones, the great public purposes of the increase of commerce, and of strengthening and increasing the national power.

Now, what has been the practical result? Why, sir, in ten years from the time this policy of the United States was adopted, we became a great carrying nation; and, during the wars of the French Revolution, we maintained and secured to ourselves, and enjoyed, until it was prostrated by the hostility of the belligerents, the carrying trade of the whole of Europe.

When those wars culminated in a war of our own, what was that war for but to maintain these two great interests—to vindicate with the power of the nation, at the hazard of the existence of the nation itself, these two great interests of commerce and of naval power? We staked our very existence as a nation on the defense of these two great interests. It was a war for free trade and sailors' rights; and the bounty given to the fishermen was the elementary lesson, the A, B, C, in the great science of establishing free trade and sailors' rights. Having vindicated this policy in a war with Great Britain, we have gone on until we have reached the point when, although we are inferior to two or three other naval Powers, and only to two or three, in the world, in our public marine, we have already outstripped all nations in the amount of our commercial navigation.

Mr. President, I think it is too late in the day to be called upon to demonstrate that this success is due to the policy of those who aimed at these objects, and who, in the year 1789, adopted these means to secure them. I listen, not merely with distrust, but with serious apprehension, to those who give us theories of government contradictory and hostile to the maxims by which these great national objects have been attained. I grant that there is abstract truth in all the theories that the less Government does to protect industry the better; or, in other words, that Government may do too much, and that Government may, and often does, injuriously substitute monopolies for judicious protection.

I only say that I find this encouragement of the fisheries constituting one of the pillars of the greatness of the country. When I am asked to dash that pillar to the earth, I must have time to think; I must hear arguments more satisfactory than the enunciation of theories which were just as true, and just as popular in the world when this system was adopted, and which theories were overruled in its adoption, as they are now.

Upon what ground will it be safe for us to abandon the system? Have we reached the point when we have more of commerce, and more of navigation, and more of naval strength and energy than we need, or ought to have? Certainly not. Shall we say that it is unprofitable? It is as profitable to-day as the day it was established; for then the cod fisheries constituted one ninth of the tonnage of the United States, and now they constitute one fiftieth part of the tonnage of the United States. When you consider the local position of the fisheries, and consider the small number of the population of the United States in 1789, and how they were gathered along the sea-coast, and then reflect that they have extended from ocean to ocean, I say that these fisheries maintain relatively their importance, and their success in comparison with the development of the other resources and interests of the Republic.

Shall we be told that the fisheries will support themselves? That is one of the theories which have been advanced very often. Well, why did not the fisheries support themselves in 1789? Why was it necessary to resort to a bounty at all? For the simple reason that not only is a sea-faring life the most hazardous, and the worst rewarded in all countries, and in all ages, and therefore the least seductive and the least attractive, but in this country it is peculiarly so, because you give a bounty in one hundred acres of the public lands at $125 to every American, and to every immigrant, if he will go into agriculture, when you give him nothing but poverty and privations if he will take to the sea.

This bounty is given to the cod fisheries only. Is that a reason for abolishing it? It is so insisted by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Commerce. He argues that bounties might as well be given to the mackerel and the whaling fisheries. Well, sir, they are practically given to all these classes of fishermen. The mackerel fishermen and the whalers are educated and trained in the cod fisheries. They do not discriminate in their pursuits; they go from one to the other. What sustains the one, what furnishes men and materials, vigor and sinews to one branch, sustains all the rest. What trains a man to the love of the sea, or the habit of going down to the sea for a livelihood, and the taking of one kind of fish, equally trains him for the others, as well as for the commercial marine of the United States, and for the Navy. In this respect we have seen the trouble which not only ourselves but all other nations have had. We have been truly told by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire that the British Government, in the absence of bounties, and when they gave up bounties, resorted to impressment, and found it so difficult to secure seamen for the navy that they hazarded war with the United States for the purpose of maintaining their alleged right to impress seamen from our service. We all recollect when the Japan expedition was fitted out, how that expedition lay in the port of New York for a period of six or eight months, more or less, waiting, and unable to depart upon its important mission, for the reason that an adequate crew could not be enlisted during that time.

The necessity then was never greater than it is now; the expense was never less; the object was never more important; never more real, because we have been extending our possessions across the continent until we have added a sea-coast on the Pacific as long, or nearly so, as our sea-coast on the Atlantic. I suppose none of us calculate that it will be long before our sea-coast on the other side of the continent will be as long as our Atlantic coast. With this great extension of commerce and of trade and of mining upon the Pacific coast, with our determination to grasp for a share of commerce, and even of political influence and control, in Australia, and in the islands and continents of the East, it is as important as it ever was to maintain in all its strength and in all its vigor the naval force of the United States. When I look at the mighty interests that are put at hazard in this measure, and consider how small the object is which it is proposed to attain, the saving of two or three hundred thousand dollars a year, (less than the cost of maintaining a single ship at sea,) I am surprised, I am more than surprised, when I find that an argument for it is drawn from the fact that the burdens of these three hundred thousand dollars fall unequally upon different portions of the country; that the bounties go to New England fishermen, and the cost falls on the consumers of the country. I apprehend that the result will be found equalized very soon after the bounty is abolished. For myself, I have no sympathy in these calculations. I believe there is not, within the State which I represent, now a single fisherman engaged in this arduous pursuit; but the commerce of the country is concentrated there. Whatever commerce shall gain or lose, its first benefits, and its first losses will accrue to those whom I represent.

It is because, representing them, I think I see that the striking down of this system will have an injurious effect upon the interests of the whole country if it be persisted in, and will be a means of undermining the present commercial and naval power of the country, that I have chosen to make my protest that I may stand right upon the record in case the deed shall be done.

Mr. BRIGHT. There is an urgent necessity for an executive session, and as I understand the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Wilson] wishes to speak on this subject, I move now that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SIMMONS. I desire to say a word before that is done.

Mr. BRIGHT. I withdraw the motion if the Senator desires to speak now.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to correct an error that I fell into yesterday; but I will wait.

Mr. BRIGHT. I renew the motion.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator will permit me first to move to postpone this bill until a certain hour to-morrow. I trust we shall have a vote by one o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BRIGHT. It will be left as unfinished business if we now go into executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor.) The Chair would suggest to the Senator from Alabama that if this bill be left as unfinished business, it will take precedence to-morrow.

Mr. CLAY. Very well.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, announcing that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions; and they were signed by the Vice President:

An act (S. No. 286) to enlarge the Detroit and Saginaw land districts in Michigan;

An act (S. No. 296) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to establish two additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota," approved July 8, 1856;

An act (S. No. 300) for the relief of the Hungarian settlers upon certain tracts of land in Iowa, hitherto reserved from sale by order of the President, dated January 22, 1855;

An act (S. No. 307) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old custom-house and site at Bath, Maine, and for other purposes;

An act (S. No. 313) to amend an act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims of California," approved March 3, 1851;

A resolution (S. No. 33) authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities of Jamaica, for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever;

A resolution (S. No. 30) to extend for a further term the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 10, 1858, in relation to certain dropped and retired naval officers; and

An act (S. No. 86) for the admission of Minnesota into the Union.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The motion of Mr. BRIGHT was agreed to; and after some time spent in the consideration of executive business, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, May 11, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. JOHN LANAHAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

APPOINTMENT ON A COMMITTEE.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. BRANCH a member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in place of Mr. CLINGMAN.

SALE OF FORT SNELLING.

Mr. BURNETT. I would ask the consent of the House to permit the day set apart for the consideration of the report of the special committee on the sale of the military reservation at Fort Snelling to be changed from the 18th to the 19th instant. I have consulted the honorable member from Indiana [Mr. PETTIT] who made the majority report, and he agreed that I should make the motion. I am compelled to leave the city, and that is the reason why I ask the House to postpone the consideration of the report until the 19th instead of the 18th.

There being no objection, it was so ordered.

NIAGARA SHIP CANAL.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to have printed informally the report of the select committee on the Niagara ship canal, for the convenience of members.

Leave was granted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed the following bills; in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (S. No. 47) confirming locations of land warrants under certain circumstances; and

An act (S. No. 222) for the relief of Jeremiah Moors.

LYDIA FLETCHER.

Mr. ATKINS, by unanimous consent, and in pursuance of previous notice, introduced a bill for the relief of Lydia Fletcher; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. COMINS. I ask the unanimous consent of the House that the Committee on Commerce may be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of citizens of Galveston, Texas, for an appropriation for light-boats; and that it be referred to the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I object, and insist upon the regular order of business.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled the following bills and joint resolutions; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 300) for the relief of the Hungarian settlers upon certain tracts of land in Iowa, hitherto reserved from sale by order of the President, dated January 22, 1855;

An act (S. No. 286) to enlarge the Detroit and Saginaw land districts in Michigan;

An act (S. No. 296) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to establish two additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota," approved July 8, 1856;

An act (S. No. 313) to amend an act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," passed March 3, 1851;

A resolution (S. No. 30) to extend for a further term the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 10, 1858, in relation to certain dropped and retired officers of the Navy; and

A resolution (S. No. 33) authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities at Jamaica, for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever.

TERRITORY OF NEVADA.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to allow me to have printed, for the convenience of members, a bill and report.

Mr. CLEMENS. What bill is it?

The Clerk read the title of the bill as follows: A bill to organize the Territory of Nevada.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I insist on the regular order of business.

LIABILITIES OF SHIP-OWNERS.

The SPEAKER stated that the question first in order was on the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] to lay upon the table House bill (No. 32) to amend an act entitled "An act to limit the liability of ship-owners, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1851.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Did the gentleman from Ohio demand the previous question?

The SPEAKER. The previous question was seconded. And the main question ordered upon the bill yesterday; and thereupon the gentleman from Kentucky moved to lay it upon the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is it competent for the gentleman to withdraw the previous question now?

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the main question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is it not competent for the House, by unanimous consent, to set aside the order for the main question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes it is competent by unanimous consent.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Well, sir, I ask the unanimous consent for that purpose. I want to state my objections to the bill; and then, if the House chooses to pass it, I have nothing to say.

Several MEMBERS objected.

The motion to lay on the table was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to explain the bill, and to claim that the exemptions which now exist under the law of 1851 upon ship-owners engaged in foreign commerce should be extended to those interested in our lake tonnage, inasmuch as Congress has already extended the whole body of our admiralty law to our inland commerce, and the United States courts have decided that it was the same in feature and substance.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman may make his explanation by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEAN. I object, and ask for the reading of the bill.

The bill was again read.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 81; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Bingham, Bliss, Bratton, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burroughs, Case, Chaffee, Clawson, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Indiana, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Giddings, Gilman, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hickman, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Lovejoy, Matteson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Robbins, Royce, Russell, Scott, John Sherman, Robert Smith, Spinner, William Stewart, George Taylor, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, and Wood—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Boeck, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Burnett, Caskie, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Cockrell, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Garrett, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, J. Morris Harris, Hill, Board, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Hancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Maclay, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Milson, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phillips, Powell, Purviance, Qutman, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Ritchie, Ruffin, Sandiego, Savage, Scales, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Waldron, Whiteley, John V. Wright, and Zollieffer—81.

So the bill was rejected.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. JACKSON stated that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] and his colleague, Mr. SEWARD, were detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. COLFAX stated that Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE had paired off on this bill with Mr. Cox.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. As only ten minutes are remaining before the hour for the consideration of the special order will arrive, I hope we shall proceed to that at once.

Mr. ENGLISH. There is a little bill upon the Speaker's table, which ought to be disposed of. It will take but a minute.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the bill to which the gentleman refers will come up as soon as this special order is disposed of.

Mr. ENGLISH. Very well. Then I will not call it up now.

THREE-REGIMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES, from the Committee of Ways and Means, by unanimous consent, reported a bill making appropriations for the support of the three regiments of volunteers authorized by act of Congress, approved April 7, 1858; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

HEIRS OF STEPHEN PORTER.

Mr. RICAUD. I ask the unanimous consent of the House for leave to withdraw from the files of the House the papers in the case of Stephen Porter. I will state that these papers have been here for more than fifty years, and the petitioners ask leave to withdraw them from the files of the House, for the purpose of preserving them as an heir-loom. As early as 1805 a report was made in favor of the claim; but the petitioners, despairing of ever being able to obtain justice at the hands of Congress, now desire that the papers may be returned.

Mr. LETCHER. Let copies be left.

Mr. RICAUD. I have no objection to that.

There being no objection, leave was accordingly granted.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Military Affairs, House bill (No. 549) to provide for the completion of a military road from Fort Union to Santa Fé, in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported back House bill (No. 422) making appropriations for the repair of certain military roads in the Territory of Kansas, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute. The bill and substitute were referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, by unanimous consent, reported a bill for the completion of a road from Council Bluffs to New Fort Kearny, in the Territory of Nebraska; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, made an adverse report upon a memorial relative to a military road from Steilacoom to Vancouver; which was laid on the table.

DANIEL WHITNEY.

On motion of Mr. HARLAN, by unanimous consent, the bill of the House (No. 72) for the relief of Daniel Whitney, which had been previously laid on the table, was recommitted to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

Mr. GROW, from the Committee on Territories, reported back House bill (No. 414) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend an act to establish the territorial government of Oregon," and an act establishing the territorial government of Minnesota, to the Territory of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

BASIL MIGNAULT.

Mr. HICKMAN, from the Committee on Revolutionary Pensions, reported a bill for the relief of the surviving children of Basil Mignault; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

WISCONSIN RESOLUTIONS.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, by unanimous consent, presented the joint resolutions of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, relative to the Niagara ship canal, which were referred to the select committee on the subject.

DEBATE IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Mr. SINGLETON asked the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That for the remainder of the present session of this body, the debate in Committee of the Whole House shall be confined strictly to the bill, resolution, or subject matter immediately before the committee; and no member shall be allowed to speak more than thirty minutes upon any one subject, except by the unanimous consent of the House.

Several MEMBERS objected.

STENOGRAPHERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. STANTON, from the tariff investigating select committee, reported a joint resolution for paying the compensation of stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives; which was read for information.

It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the compensation of stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives, as audited under the direction of said House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the special order of the day takes precedence, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. JEWETT objected.

CHARLES H. MASON.

Mr. BRANCH, from the Committee on Territories, by unanimous consent, reported back, with a substitute, a bill for the relief of Charles H. Mason; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the substitute, ordered to be printed.

ADMISSION OF MINNESOTA.

The SPEAKER stated that the business first in order was Senate bill (No. 86) for the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union; on which the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] was entitled to the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have consented to allow the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RICAUD] to occupy twenty minutes of my time.

Mr. RICAUD. I am much obliged to my friend from Georgia for giving me a portion of his time to discuss the question now under the consideration of the House. I regret exceedingly that my time should be so limited as to prevent me from fully discussing the objections which I think exist to the powers claimed by Minnesota, in the constitution under which she asks admission into the Union.

If I have read aright the Constitution of the United States, I understand it to be a political Government, created by the several States of this Union, possessing powers derived by concession from the several States. To understand this question, we must look at the condition of things as they existed at the time the Constitution of the United States was adopted. It was at the termination of our war. We had just successfully declared ourselves free from foreign government. We were free and independent States, bound together by a Confederacy; and the Constitution was, in its own language, adopted for the government and protection of these States. The very preamble of the Constitution states that the Government which they were about to establish was to create a more perfect system of union for the people of the United States. What powers were possessed by the different States at the time of the adoption of the Federal Constitution? As I said before, they were sovereign and independent States, each one exercising and claiming to exercise for itself every right of sovereignty which a sovereign Power could exercise. They had the right to declare what should constitute citizenship in their respective States. They had the power, then, by general laws of naturalization, to admit to the rights of citizenship any and all persons whom they thought proper to clothe with the sacred garb of citizenship. I find, by looking at the old constitutions of the different States, that in two of them—New York and North Carolina—the mode of naturalizing citizens was expressly provided in them.

Now, the question occurs, did the State governments, in the formation of the Government of the United States, part with any portion of their sovereignty? If the States parted with their power to naturalize citizens of foreign birth, I ask how were the citizens of a State to be increased? By two modes only. Not by any act of naturalization passed by the State itself, because it had parted with that power, and given to the General Government the right to pass uniform laws of naturalization. It was a power exclusively vested in the General Government; and, therefore, no increase in the citizens of a State could be made by the exercise of any power of naturalization by a State. It was only to be done by the natural increase of the then resident people or citizens of the State, and of such citizens as might be added in virtue of the uniform rules of naturalization prescribed by the Government of the United States. The language of the Constitution of the United States is:

"We, the people of the United States, in order to form a more perfect union, establish justice," &c.

And section two, of article one, provides:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

Now, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case, it is laid down that the word "people" of the United States is synonymous with the word "citizens;" that both terms mean the same thing. I propose to read this part of the Constitution, according to my interpretation of it, by the rule thus laid down by the Supreme Court—the tribunal recognized by the Constitution itself for the interpretation of the instrument. "We, the citizens of the United States," would be the first words in the preamble, and the second section of the first article would read thus: "The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year, by the citizens of the United States and citizens of the several States; and the electors in each State shall have the qualifications necessary for the most numerous branch of the General Assembly." Why was that power given? It was that the representation might be distributed more generally among the people. If gentlemen will take the trouble of looking over the old constitutions of the original thirteen States, they will find that in every constitution existing at that time, qualifications were required for the exercise of the rights of suffrage for members of the Council, as it was called in some States, or of the Senate, as it was generally known under more recent amendments of the constitutions. These qualifications were much higher than those required for voting for members of the more numerous branch of the General Assembly.

That my reading of the Constitution of the United States, in that respect, is correct, will be plain, from an examination of the various State constitutions as they now exist. I have taken the trouble to examine and compare most of the constitutions, down as far as 1848; and I find that in every State, with but very few exceptions, this distinction is kept up by the States themselves—first in declaring what portion of their citizens shall be their Representatives in the General Assembly of the States, and what portion shall be electors in their General Assembly. A much the larger number of the States of this Union require, that, to be a member of either branch of the State Legislature, the person shall be a citizen of the United States, and to be elected or chosen by persons who are citizens of the United States. In some of the States they go so far as to require that he shall have been a citizen, and have resided in the State for some years previous to his election. In the State of South Carolina—your own State, sir—I believe five years' residence is required for the Senate, and three years for the House of Representatives.

Then, sir, there is no war made on the doctrine of State-rights by any construction which I give to the Constitution of the United States; for, if the question of State-rights was involved in the matter, to what portion of the country would you look for the more securely guarding of that doctrine? Is it not a principle cherished in the South more than in any other portion of the country? Have not all our southern statesmen gone far to vindicate the great doctrine of State-rights, and to claim, as reserved to the States, all powers not delegated to the United States? And yet, in confirmation of this interpretation of the power delegated to the United States, you find the principle is carried out in the various southern States; and by their constitutions they have decided that Senators and Representatives in the State Legislatures shall be composed of citizens of the United States, residents of the States, to be chosen by electors who are citizens of the United States, residents of the States, and possessing the other necessary qualifications.

Now, on this point, I refer to the doctrine laid down by Mr. Calhoun, in the matter of the admission of the State of Michigan. I take it for granted that those who are familiar with the history and public life of Mr. Calhoun, will recognize in him an ardent friend of the doctrine of State-rights. And yet, Mr. Calhoun says, in the speech made by him on the admission of Michigan into the Union, that the Constitution confers on Congress authority to pass uniform laws of naturalization. He says:

"I do not deem it necessary to follow my colleague and the Senator from Kentucky in their attempt to define or describe a citizen. Nothing is more difficult than the definition or even description of so complex an idea; and hence all arguments resting on one definition, in such cases, almost necessarily lead to uncertainty and doubt. But though we may not be able to say with precision what a citizen is, we may say with the utmost certainty what he is not. He is not an alien. Alien and citizen are correlative terms, and stand in contradistinction to each other. They, of course, cannot coexist. They are, in fact, so opposite in their nature that we conceive of the one but in contradistinction to the other. Thus far all must be agreed." * * * "To remove alienage is simply to put the foreigner in the condition of the native born. To this extent the act of naturalization goes, and no further. The next position I assume is no less certain: that, when Congress has exercised its authority by passing a uniform law of naturalization, (as it has,) it excludes the right of exercising a similar authority on the part of the State. To suppose that the States could pass naturalization acts of their own, after Congress had passed a uniform law of naturalization, would be to make the provision of the Constitution nugatory. I have shown that a citizen is not an alien, and that alienage is an insuperable barrier, till removed, to citizenship; and that it can only be removed by complying with the act of Congress. It follows, of course, that a State cannot, of its own authority, make an alien a citizen without such compliance."

This same doctrine is laid down by the Supreme Court of the United States in the Dred Scott case:

"The words 'people of the United States' and 'citizens' are synonymous terms and mean the same thing." * * *

* * * "The Constitution has conferred on Congress the right to establish a uniform rule of naturalization, and it has always been held by this Supreme Court to be a power exclusively vested in Congress, and to be practiced under the uniform rules to be laid down by Congress."

Mr. Curtis, in arguing on the same question, says:

"Again, it has been objected that if the Constitution has left to the several States the rightful power to determine who, of their inhabitants, shall be citizens of the United States, the States may make aliens citizens."

"The answer is obvious. The Constitution has left to the States the determination which persons, born within their respective limits, shall acquire by birth citizenship of the United States; it has not left to them any power to prescribe any rule for the removal of the disabilities of alienage."

My time is drawing to a close, and I promised my friend [Mr. STEPHENS] that I should not overrun the twenty minutes which he has kindly allowed me. I wish I had time to argue out these points fully. I think the time is fast approaching, and is almost here now, when those coming here from foreign shores, and acquiring property and the right of voting and holding office, will beardown and override the native-born of the land.

I would like to show that, according to the ratio of immigration in 1853, in every six weeks' time there is poured upon our shores a population equal to the entire population of Florida; that in every two years there is poured upon our shores a population equal to that of Virginia; and that, in every thirteen years, according to that ratio, there is poured upon our shores a population equal to the population of the whole southern States of the Union. I would like to show that the very thing Mr. Calhoun dreaded, and which his prophetic eye foresaw, is likely to come to pass, unless some check is placed upon the power now claimed to confer the rights of citizenship upon unnaturalized foreigners.

There is another point which I will mention; and that is, that the State of Minnesota, in the constitution which she has sent here, has, in another instance, violated the Constitution of the United States in spirit, if not in letter, by undertaking to elect her three Representatives upon this floor by the State at large. The power to prescribe the time, place, and manner of electing the Representatives, has been vested in the Congress of the United States, and the Congress has exercised this power by the law of 1844, chapter forty-seven, section two, which requires States entitled to more than one Representative to elect them by districts, composed of contiguous territory, equal in number to the number of Representatives, and no one district to elect more than one Representative.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia. I rise to a question of order. Has not the time expired which the gentleman was to occupy, according to the agreement?

Mr. RICAUD. I believe it has.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Georgia. Then it is but just that my colleague [Mr. STEPHENS] should be permitted to proceed.

Mr. RICAUD. I yield the floor.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, my time will not allow me to answer all the objections that have been made to the admission of Minnesota. I do not think it necessary, however, to consume time, or to exhaust my feeble strength in answering all the objections that have been raised. Many of them are of small import, while some of them are grave, important, and go to the very foundation principles of our Government. This latter class of objections are not new; they are not novel; they involve principles coeval with our institutions. In reply to them, I must be brief in the forty minutes allotted to me. They involve two inquiries. The first question in reference to them is, whether they be well taken in fact; and the second is, whether, if well founded, they amount, in themselves, to a good and valid ground for the rejection of a State.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARNETT] objects because of the State boundaries violating the stipulation between Virginia and the United States in the cession of the Northwest Territory. In point of fact, I do not consider that objection well taken; but if it were good, it ought to have been taken when the enabling act was passed last Congress, fixing the boundaries of Minnesota. That portion of the old Northwestern Territory now included in the State of Minnesota was included then, and the objection should have been taken then, if at all. There is, however, but a small portion of the old cession of Virginia included in this State. Twenty-odd thousand square miles of that cession, it is true, have been added to the ninety-odd thousand square miles constituting the main body of Minnesota. This was for convenience. Only a small portion, therefore, of the original Virginia cession has been taken off and added to the large extent of country that makes the State of Minnesota, for the public convenience. There has been no injury resulting anywhere, and no breach of faith, in my judgment.

It was stated, also, that the number of delegates who formed the State constitution was larger than that ordered in the enabling act. That objection has been well answered by the gentleman's colleague, [Mr. JENKINS.] The act of Congress provided that as many delegates should be chosen as there were representatives in the Territorial Legislature. Well, sir, the people of Minnesota construed that to embrace their Senators or Councilmen as well as Representatives in the lower House. The bill admitted of a doubt. I do not conceive that that objection has much force in it.

But I must pass on to notice the other objections of a graver character. It was stated by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who opened this debate, and has been repeated by several other gentlemen, that the constitution of Minnesota is violative of the Constitution of the United States—in this, that it permits aliens to vote, or other than citizens of the United States to vote, in State elections.

Mr. Speaker, before arguing the point whether this clause of the constitution of Minnesota does or does not violate the Constitution of the United States, let me ask right here this question: suppose it be true that that feature of their constitution does violate the Constitution of the United States, or is inconsistent with it: is that a good ground for her rejection? I put it strongly and broadly in the fore front of the argument—suppose that be conceded: is it a legitimate ground of objection to the admission of a State that a provision of its constitution is inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States? I say, sir, not. I say it as a State-rights man; advocating the principles of the State-rights school. We can only look into the constitution of a new State applying for admission, to see that it is republican in form, and that it legally and fairly expresses the will of the people. If there be conflicts, the Constitution of the United States points out how those conflicts are to be settled. After coming into the Union, such clause, if it be in, will of course have to yield to the supreme law of the land. Sir, the case of Minnesota, if this be true of her constitution, will not be a singular one.

The constitution of Illinois declares that no man shall be eligible to a Federal office who has been elected to and has accepted a judgeship in that State within two years after the expiration of the term for which he accepted it. A Senator from that State, now holding a seat in the other wing of the Capitol, [Mr. TRUMBULL,] was elected to that body during the term of a judgeship of a State court, which he had been elected to and had accepted. In the Senate of the United States, the question was raised as to his eligibility, and as to whether the constitution of Illinois could, under the Constitution of the United States, impose such a qualification; in other words, whether the qualifications for Senators set forth in the Constitution of the United States were not absolute and binding, and did not supersede the provision of the constitution of Illinois. The Senate so determined; and that Senator now holds his seat in the face, in the teeth, and against that constitutional provision of his own State.

Whether that decision of the United States Senate was right or wrong, I will not now stop to inquire, or to express an opinion.

I cannot take up my time in citing other analogous cases. Many instances might be adduced from decisions of the courts. It is enough for me to affirm that the Constitution of the United States declares that "this Constitution, and the laws of the United States which shall be made in pursuance thereof, and all treaties made, or which shall be made, under the authority of the United States, shall be the supreme law of the land; and the judges in every State shall be bound thereby, anything in the constitution or laws of any State to the contrary notwithstanding." I say, therefore, in answer to all that has been said in reference to the constitution of Minnesota being in violation of the Constitution of the United States, that even conceding the point for argument's sake, (which I do not concede in fact,) this would not be a just and valid ground on which to reject her admission. It is a question which can be properly decided when it arises, if ever, by the proper judicial tribunal before which it may arise. We, on the question of admission, can only look into a constitution to see that it is republican in form.

Mr. TRIPPE. I desire to ask my colleague whether he concurs in the Green amendment to the Kansas bill, which asserts the right of Congress to inquire into the constitution of any State applying for admission into the Union, in order to see whether it is consistent with the Constitution of the United States?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. My time is short, and I want to argue other questions; but I will say to my colleague that there was nothing in the original Green amendment which did not meet my cordial and hearty approval. There was nothing in it which inquired into a constitution. It was altogether negative in its character.

Mr. TRIPPE. If my colleague will allow me, I think that right was directly asserted in the Green amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to suggest that the constitution of Kansas is not before the House.

Mr. TRIPPE. The same principle involved in the amendment to the Kansas bill, to which I have referred, is contained in this bill.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I cannot discuss that question now. There were words added to the original Green amendment that I considered liable to objection; but, being negative, were not insuperable with me. Now, Mr. Speaker, I lay down this proposition; that there is nothing, in my judgment, in the constitution of Minnesota, inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States.

The gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] who led off in this debate, argued that there was no clause in the constitution of Minnesota by which the present elected members of the Legislature could be prevented from holding for life. Well, sir, suppose the gentleman was correct—but I do not concede the fact: the constitution would not therefore be anti-republican. I would not vote for such a constitution if I were there. But, sir, what constitutes a republican form of government? It is, as I understand it, a division of the three great branches of government—the executive, the judicial, and the law-making powers. That division is certainly in this constitution. Several of the States have made the judiciary elective, or holding office for life. Does that make their constitutions anti-republican? The Constitution of the United States does this. If the judiciary can hold office for life, why not the executive? and why may not representatives as well, if the people see fit to make such a constitution? It would not cease to be republican in consequence. It might and would be, in my judgment, a very bad constitution; but I say that of that we cannot rightfully judge.

I now come to the main question in this debate—the alien suffrage clause, as it is called, in this constitution. I have said that it was no new question. It is a grave and important one, but it is coeval with the Government. Mr. Speaker, if there was any subject which was seriously watched and guarded, in the formation of the Constitution of the United States, above all others, it was that the Federal Government should not touch the right of suffrage in the States. The question of who should vote in the several States was left for each State to settle for itself. And so far as I am concerned, I say for myself that there is nothing in the doctrine of State-rights that I would defend and stand by longer, and fight for harder, than that which denies the right of the Federal Government, by its encroachments, to interfere with the right of suffrage in my State. The ballot-box—that is what each State must guard and protect for itself; that is what the people of the several States never delegated to this Government, and of course it was expressly, under the Constitution, reserved to the people of the States. Upon the subject of alien suffrage, about which we have heard so much lately, I wish in this connection to give a brief history. I state to this House that the principle was recognized by the ordinance of 1787, which was before the Government was formed.

It was recognized by the act of 7th August, 1789, soon after the Government was formed, one of the first acts signed by Washington—an act making provisions for carrying out that ordinance.

It was recognized in the territory South in the cession by North Carolina, on the 2d April, 1790.

It was again recognized in the bill creating a government for the Territory of Tennessee, on the 26th May, 1790.

It was recognized in the act of settling the limits of the State of Georgia, and creating the Mississippi Territory, on the 7th April, 1798.

It was recognized in a supplemental act to the last, on the 10th May, 1800.

It was recognized in the division of Indiana Territory, on the 3d February, 1809.

It was recognized in an act for Illinois Territory, on the 20th May, 1812.

It was recognized in the act organizing the Michigan territorial government: the date of this I do not recollect.

But I cannot take up my time by referring to other instances in their order. I know that in some cases voting in the Territories was restricted to citizens. This was the case in the Territories of Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin, Utah, and New Mexico; while alien suffrage was again recognized, in express terms, in the Territories of Oregon, Minnesota, Washington, Kansas, and Nebraska.

Of the Presidents of the United States who, in some form or other, gave the principle their sanction either in the Territories or States, may be mentioned Washington, the elder Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Polk, Fillmore, and Pierce.

Reference, sir, has been made in this debate to a speech made by Mr. Calhoun on this subject, in the Senate, in 1836, on the act providing for the admission of Michigan, upon which comments have been made by several gentlemen. The views of that distinguished statesman have been presented as authority on their side. I have simply this to say about that speech: I cannot find it in the Globe. I cannot find it in the debates of the day.

MR. RICAUD. I think it is in his published speeches.

MR. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have seen it in his published works, but I cannot find it in the published reports of Congress. It is stated to have been made in 1836, on the bill authorizing Michigan to form a constitution. Michigan was admitted with alien suffrage in her constitution, on the 3d March, 1837; and Mr. Calhoun does not appear to have made any objection to her admission on that ground. I find speeches made by him upon that bill, but none objecting to this clause. I find he offered a substitute for the bill admitting Michigan without objection to the alien suffrage clause in her constitution. Still, it is stated that this speech of his was made the year before, on the occasion referred to, and I do not wish to be understood as questioning it. That was on Congress conferring the right. He did not raise any objection to the admission of the State as far as I can find, because of alien suffrage being allowed in her constitution.

Again: on the 26th of July, 1848, the Clayton compromise bill for the organization of certain territorial governments passed the Senate. The fifth section of the act provides—

"That every free white male inhabitant, above the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of said Territory at the time of the passage of this act, shall be entitled to vote at the first election, and shall be eligible to any office in said Territory; but the qualification of voters, and of holding office, at all subsequent elections, shall be such as shall be prescribed by the Legislative Assembly: Provided, That the right of suffrage, and of holding office, shall be exercised only by citizens of the United States; and those who shall have declared on oath their intention to become such, and shall have taken an oath to support the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act."

On the engrossment of this bill, the vote was—

YEA—Messrs. Atchison, Atherton, Benton, Berrien, Borland, Breese, Bright, Butler, Calhoun, Clayton, Davis of Mississippi, Dickinson, Douglas, Downs, Foote, Hannegan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Maryland, Johnson of Louisiana, Johnson of Georgia, King, Lewis, Mangum, Mason, Phelps, Rusk, Sebastian, Spruance, Sturgeon, Turner, Westcott, and Yulee—33.

NAY—Messrs. Allen, Baker, Baldwin, Bell, Bradbury, Clark, Corwin, Davis of Massachusetts, Dayton, Dix, Dodge, Felch, Fitzgerald, Greene, Hale, Hamlin, Metcalfe, Miller, Niles, Underwood, Upham, and Walker—22."

Mr. Calhoun was on the committee which reported this provision, and he does not appear as having objected to it. And though he may have made that speech in 1836, yet it is equally certain and true that twelve years afterwards he voted for the very principle he had previously opposed. His vote for the principle in 1848, in my opinion, is a sufficient answer to his speech against it in 1836. This is, therefore, Mr. Speaker, no new question.

The same principle, as I have said, was incorporated in the same words, I think, in the bill for the organization of Washington Territory in 1853, and in the Kansas-Nebraska bill in 1854.

The gentleman from Tennessee [MR. MAYNARD] put this question to some gentleman the other day: whether, if this bill should pass, Minnesota might not confer the right of voting upon an alien enemy? By no means, sir; the person of foreign birth, who is entitled to vote under this constitution, has first to purge himself of his allegiance to other Powers. He must have declared his intention to become a citizen of the United States, and sworn to support the Constitution of the same. This is the condition precedent. By no possibility, therefore, could an alien enemy legally vote in Minnesota.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States has been read and commented on by the gentleman from Maryland, [MR. DAVIS,] who led off in this discussion, and whose speech I listened to with a great deal of interest—an argument as well got up and made on that side of the question as I think it possible for ingenuity, ability, and talent, united with eloquence, to present. He rested his argument mainly on the decision of the Supreme Court in the Dred Scott case, where Judge Taney says that the words "people of the United States," in the Constitution, are synonymous with "citizens." After reading that part of the decision, the gentleman quoted an article in the Constitution which says that "the House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States;" and his argument was, that as the Supreme Court had defined that the word "people" was synonymous, in the Constitution of the United States, to "citizens," therefore members of this House could be elected by none but "citizens of the United States." That was the gentleman's argument; but I am far from concurring with him in it. His argument rests upon the assumption that the Constitution of the United States, in the clause quoted, intended to define the class of voters in the several States, and to limit suffrage. I think that it will take me but a moment, by recurring to that clause of the Constitution and comparing it with others, to show that the object of that clause was simply to point out the mode of the election of the members of this House in contradistinction from the mode of electing Senators, and not the class of voters. The House was to be elected by the people by a popular vote, by the masses; while the Senate was to be elected by the State Legislatures. That is all that is meant in that clause. The Constitution is in these words:

"The House of Representatives shall be composed of members chosen every second year by the people of the several States;"—

There the gentleman stopped. What follows?

—And the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature."

There, coupled with what the gentleman read, is the right which I say that the people insisted upon beyond all others—the reserved right that the General Government should never interfere with suffrage in the States; not even for members of this House. Immediately after the words he read, sir, without a semicolon separating them, is the express declaration that the States shall fix the qualification of electors or voters. Who shall say to each State in this particular, thus far mayest thou go, and no further? Who shall say to the sovereignties where they shall stop? The States, over this subject, have never parted with any of their sovereignty. It is their right, therefore, to fix the qualifications of voters unrestrictedly and absolutely. If they say an alien may vote, it is their right to do so.

The other clause of the Constitution to which

I referred, showing what was meant in the first part of the one read by the gentleman, is in these words:

"The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof."

The first clause the gentleman read the other day refers simply, as it clearly appears, to the manner of the election, the mode of the election, the constituency of those elected—to distinguish them from the constituency of the Senators. The one was to be the people, contra-distinguished from the Legislatures of the States; this was one of the points of difficulty in forming the Federal Constitution. It was finally determined that the House should represent the people and the Senate should represent the States.

I will refer briefly to the same authority on that point. I read from Yates's Minutes of the Debates in the Federal convention, the fourth resolve:

"That the members of the first branch of the national Legislature ought to be elected by the people of the several States was opposed; and, strange to tell, by Massachusetts and Connecticut, who supposed they ought to be chosen by the Legislatures; and Virginia supported the resolve, alleging that this ought to be the democratic branch of the government, and, as such, immediately vested in the people."

Again, Mr. Pinckney moved:

"That the members of the first branch, (that is, this House,) be appointed in such manner as the several State Legislatures shall direct."

Mr. Madison said:

"I oppose the motion."

Mr. Mason said:

"I am for preserving inviolably the democratic branch of the Government. True, we have found inconveniences from pure democracies; but if we mean to preserve peace and real freedom, they must necessarily become a component part of a national Government. Change this necessary principle, and if the Government proceeds to taxation the States will oppose your power."

The idea that prevailed at the formation of our Constitution was, that representation and taxation should go together. It was mainly upon that ground that the men of that day went to the war with the mother country; it was because the colonies were taxed and not allowed representation; and if you trace the history of this Government down, you will find this great American idea running throughout—that taxation and representation should go together. Whoever pays taxes should vote—that is the idea.

Great confusion seems to exist in the minds of gentlemen from the association of the words citizen and suffrage. Some seem to think that rights of citizenship and rights of suffrage necessarily go together; that one is dependent upon the other. There never was a greater mistake. Suffrage, or the right to vote, is the creature of law. There are citizens in every State of this Union, I doubt not, who are not entitled to vote. So, in several of the States there are persons who by law are entitled to vote, though they be not citizens. If there be citizens who cannot vote, why may there not be individuals, who are not citizens, who may nevertheless be allowed to vote, if the sovereign will of the State shall so determine? In all the States nearly there are other qualifications for voting, even with the native-born, besides citizenship. Residence for a certain length of time. Virginia, for instance, requires of all citizens of other States, native-born citizens of Maryland or North Carolina, a certain term of residence. They shall not vote in Virginia unless they have been there twelve months. In Alabama, I think, the provision is the same.

Why, sir, in my own State, where we have universal suffrage, as it is called, no man can vote unless he has paid his taxes, and resided in the county six months. There are thousands of citizens in Georgia, and I suppose in every other State, who are not entitled to the right of suffrage under our Constitution and laws. Citizenship and suffrage by no means go together in all cases. My time will not allow me to enlarge on that idea. I will only refer briefly again to what was said in the Federal convention on the subject of the States retaining the control over the subject of suffrage, showing how vigilantly this was watched and guarded by the State-rights men. Gouverneur Morris had proposed to restrain the right of suffrage to freeholders. This gave rise to a long debate. Mr. Ellsworth said:

"The qualification of electors stood on the most proper footing. The right of suffrage was a tender point, and strongly guarded by most of the State constitutions. The people will not readily subscribe to the national Constitution if it should subject them to be disfranchised. The States are the best judges of the circumstances and temper of their own people."

Again, he says, (I read from the Madison Papers:)

"Ought not every man who pays a tax to vote for the Representative who is to levy and dispose of his money? Taxation and representation ought to go together."

I barely refer to this to show that I am sustained in my view by the highest authority. This subject of the qualification of electors, and who should determine it, was mooted at the settlement of the Government; and it was left to the State Legislatures, under State constitutions.

Now, sir, a few moments on the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Judge Taney, in my judgment, fully confirms everything I have said. He says:

"The words 'people of the United States,' and 'citizens,' are synonymous terms, and mean the same thing. They both describe the political body who, according to our republican institutions, form the sovereignty, and who hold the power and conduct the Government through their Representatives. They are what are familiarly called the sovereign people; and every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of this sovereignty. The question before us is, whether the class of persons described in the plea in abatement [Dred Scott was a negro] compose a portion of this people, and are constituent members of this sovereignty. We think they are not; and were not intended to be included under the word 'citizens' in the constitution, and can therefore claim none of the rights and privileges which that instrument provides for, and secures to citizens of the United States."

It was the first words of this clause of the decision the gentleman from Maryland relied on, but he did not pursue the argument far enough.

The object of the Chief Justice was to show that persons of the African race descended from those who were bought and sold as slaves, were not in the original body-politic, and could not, by State laws, be incorporated into that body-politic. But now mark what immediately follows that part of his decision:

"In discussing this question, we must not confound the rights of citizenship which a State may confer within its own limits, and the rights of citizenship as a member of the Union."

Here is the distinction. By naturalization, Congress can confer citizenship throughout the Union. What are the rights created by that? Three in all. The right to hold land is one; the right to sue in the Federal courts is another; and the right to claim the protection of this Government, or the right of passport abroad, is the other. No State can confer these rights throughout the Union; but each State may confer them within her limits. Each State may confer upon an alien the right to hold lands. No man can question that; but if Indiana or Georgia confers this right upon an alien, he cannot go into South Carolina and hold land there by virtue of that. If he were naturalized he could. So each State may give the right to an alien to sue in its own courts; but, therefore, he does not acquire a right to sue in any other State court or the Federal courts. Each State may guaranty her protection within her limits, but not throughout the Union. She cannot pledge the protection of the common Government.

But the court goes right on with this language:

"It does not by any means follow, because he has the rights and privileges of a citizen of a State, that he must be a citizen of the United States. He may have all the rights and privileges of a citizen of a State, and yet not be entitled to the rights and privileges of a citizen in any other State; for, previous to the adoption of the Constitution of the United States, every State had the undoubted right to confer on whomsoever it pleased the character of citizen, and to endow him with all its rights; but this character, of course, was confined to the boundaries of the State, and gave him no rights or privileges in other States beyond those secured to him by the laws of nations and the comity of States. Nor have the several States surrendered the power of conferring these rights and privileges by adopting the Constitution of the United States. Each State may still confer them upon an alien, or any one it thinks proper, or upon any class or description of persons; yet he would not be a citizen in the sense in which that word is used in the Constitution of the United States, nor entitled to sue as such in one of its courts, nor to the privileges and immunities of a citizen in the other States. The rights which he would acquire would be restricted to the State which gave them."

I ask, then, if the constitution of Minnesota, according to this Dred Scott decision, has an iota, or a single clause in it, so far as alien suffrage is concerned, which Chief Justice Taney has not said she has a right under the Constitution of the United States to put in it? This is a right none of the States have ever surrendered. Every State in this Union has the right of fixing the status of all its constituent elements absolutely, as each State may determine for itself, and also the right of determining who may and who may not vote at elections for public officers under her authority. What part of the constitution of Minnesota, then, is in violation of the Constitution of the United States? Why, then, should she not be admitted?

Let me say, in conclusion, that the constitution of Illinois has such a clause. Is not she an equal in this Union? Why not rule her out? Indiana has such a clause. Why not rule her out? Michigan has such a clause. Why not rule her out? Wisconsin has such a clause. I have the Journal here. When Wisconsin was admitted, in 1848, Mr. Calhoun was in his seat and he did not even call the yeas and nays on it. And yet we are told that this is a great and a dangerous example we are setting, if we admit Minnesota on an equal footing with Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Wisconsin, and all of the States. Deprive her of this great right, would she be equal? Are Illinois and South Carolina now equal? Are Indiana and Massachusetts now equal? Why, then, if you deny Minnesota the power that Illinois and Indiana have, will she be equal to them? Things equal to one another are equal to each other. If those in the Union now are equal, will not Minnesota be unequal if you deprive her of this right? If you put upon her a condition you have never put upon these others, will not you make her unequal? and if you bring her in, would she be upon an equal footing with her sister States? If she confers suffrage upon those born abroad, who purge themselves of their foreign allegiance and swear to support the Constitution of the United States, she has the right to do so. Any State in the Union now has the same right, if any see fit to exercise it. The several States cannot confer citizenship of the United States upon any body or class of persons; but every State, in her sovereign capacity, has a right to say who shall vote at elections in that State. Let us, then, drop this objection; let us admit Minnesota, and let her come in clothed with all the sovereignty that the other States possess. My time is out.

One word about the amendment I have offered. I thought that by this time Minnesota would be entitled to three members. The enabling act entitled her to one, with additional Representatives, according to her population under the last apportionment. The information I have received since I offered my amendment has led me to believe that her population at this time would not entitle her to three members, but will to two; and therefore I withdraw my amendment, and hope the House will pass the bill as it came from the Senate. I call for the previous question.

Mr. GARNETT. I rise to a question of order. I had moved an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, and I wish to inquire whether it is competent for him to withdraw his amendment, the effect of which will be that my amendment will fall?

The SPEAKER. Perfectly competent.

Mr. GARNETT. Well, I hope that, under the circumstances, the gentleman from Georgia will permit me to get in my amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will allow the gentleman to offer his amendment. I did not know that it would fall with the withdrawal of my amendment.

The SPEAKER. It was an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman's amendment may be offered, but I hope it will be voted down.

Mr. GARNETT. I hope it will be voted in. I move to amend the second section of the bill by striking out "two Representatives" and inserting "one Representative," so that it will read:

Said State shall be entitled to one Representative in Congress, until the next apportionment of Representatives amongst the several States.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I now move the previous question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Georgia will allow us to have a vote upon a proposition to give the State three Representatives.

[Cries of "No!" "No!"]

Mr. GROW. I hope the gentleman will allow an amendment to be offered, providing that the Representatives shall be elected by districts.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered, being first upon Mr. GARNETT's amendment.

Mr. GARNETT demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 72, nays 117; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Andrews, Barksdale, Bingham, Bocoek, Branch, Bryan, Burlingame, Case, Caskie, Horace F. Clark, Clay, Cobb, Burton, Craig, Curry, Danrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Iowa, Dick, Dodd, Dowdell, Edie, Enstis, Faulkner, Garnett, Gilmer, Goode, Granger, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Howard, Kelsey, John C. Kunkel, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Milton, Moore, Morgan, Freeman H. Morse, Olin, Powell, Purviance, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ricard, Ritchie, Ruffin, Seales, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, William Smith, Stanton, William Stewart, Tripp, Underwood, Walbridge, Waldron, Whiteley, Winslow, and Zollicoffer—72.

NAYS.—Messrs. Adrain, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bliss, Bowie, Boyce, Buffinton, Burnett, Burns, Campbell, Chaffee, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clawson, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Colfax, Comins, Covode, James Craig, Crawford, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dean, Dewar, Dimmick, Durfee, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garrett, Giddings, Gillis, Gilman, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hickman, Hoard, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Kilgore, Knapp, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Maclay, Mason, Miller, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Reilly, Robbins, Royce, Russell, Sandidge, Scott, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Wade, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, White, Wilson, Wood, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright—117.

So the amendment was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. CLEMENS stated that he had paired off, upon this question, with Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts.

Mr. WHITELEY stated that Mr. CORNING had paired off upon this question with Mr. MURRAY.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Tennessee, stated that Mr. BISHOP had gone home on account of ill health, and had paired off, upon all party questions, with Mr. THOMPSON, and upon the New York fire bill with him, (Mr. WRIGHT.)

Mr. LAWRENCE stated that Mr. Cox was absent from the city, but had paired off with some gentleman on the opposite side of the House.

Mr. MOORE stated that Mr. STALLWORTH was confined to his room by sickness.

Mr. PETTIT said: I was absent when my name was called, in attendance on a committee, and I ask leave to vote.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman a member of the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. PETTIT. I am not. I was on the Library Committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana not having been within the bar when his name was called, asks leave to vote.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. WINSLOW. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

The objection was not withdrawn.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, stated that if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted "no."

Mr. HOARD stated that he believed Mr. BURROUGHS had paired this morning.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

The question recurred upon agreeing to the substitute for the Senate bill proposed by Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, which is as follows:

Whereas, an act was passed February 26, 1857, entitled "An act to authorize the people of the Territory of Minnesota to form a constitution and State government, preparatory to their admission into the Union on an equal footing with the original States;" and whereas, delegates of the people did, on the 29th day of August, A. D. 1857, frame a constitution which does not conform to the Constitution and laws of the United States: Therefore,

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the State of Minnesota shall be one of the United States of America, and shall be admitted into the Union on an equal footing with the original States in all respects whatever, after a full compliance with the following fundamental condition precedent, to wit: That the constitution framed at Saint Paul, in the Territory of Minnesota, on the 29th day of August, A. D. 1857, shall be submitted to a convention of the people of the said Territory of Minnesota, to be composed of the number of delegates and to be apportioned and elected in the mode and manner prescribed by the act of February 26, 1856, said election to be held on the first Monday of August next, and said delegates to assemble at the hall of the House of Representatives at the capital of said Territory on the first Monday of September next, at twelve o'clock, m.; and said convention shall conform said constitution to the Constitution and laws of the United States, or, at its discretion, shall frame a new constitution in conformity with the Federal Constitution; and said convention shall have the same powers, perform the same duties, be subject to the same qualifications, and the same propositions are hereby offered for its free acceptance or rejection, as are prescribed by said act; and the action of said convention shall be subject to the approval and ratification of the people of the proposed State.

Sec. 2. And he it further enacted, That after said condition is complied with, the said State shall be entitled to two Representatives in Congress, to be elected in single districts, to be prescribed by the convention.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suppose it would not be in order to move to amend the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The previous question having been seconded, and the main question ordered, no amendment is in order.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 51, nays 141; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Bingham, Blair, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Covode, Dainrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edlie, Foster, Giddings, Gilmer, Granger, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Horton, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Morgan, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Olin, Pettit, Purviance, Ready, Ricard, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Stanton, William Stewart, Tompkins, Trippe, Underwood, Wade, Walton, Wilson, Wood, Woodson, and Zollcoffer—51.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bliss, Bockcock, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burnett, Burns, Campbell, Caskie, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, James Craig, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dewar, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fulton, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Garrett, Gillis, Gilman, Goode, Goodwin, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hatch, Hickman, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Howard, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, Mason, Matteson, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Ritchie, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Spinner, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Walbridge, Waldron, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright—141.

So the substitute was rejected.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. WOODSON said: I desire to remark that I was under a misapprehension as to the hour when this question was to be taken up, and was not here to vote on the amendment restricting Minnesota to one Representative. If I had been here, I should have voted for the amendment. On this proposition I vote "ay."

The bill was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, demanded the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. KELSEY demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 157, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bliss, Bockcock, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burnett, Burns, Campbell, Caruthers, Case, Caskie, Chaffee, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, James Craig, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Dainrell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dewar, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fulton, Florence, Foley, Garrett, Gillis, Gilman, Goode, Goodwin, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hatch, Hickman, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Howard, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelly, Kilgore, Knapp, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Matteson, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morrill, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Powell, Purviance, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Ritchie, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Spinner, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader

C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Winslow, Wood, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright—157.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Bingham, Blair, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dodd, Edlie, Eustis, Foster, Garnett, Giddings, Gilmer, Granger, J. Morrison Harris, Hill, Horton, Kelsey, John C. Kunkel, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Morgan, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Olin, Ready, Ricard, Robbins, Ruffin, John Sherman, William Smith, Stanton, Trippe, Underwood, Woodson, and Zollcoffer—38.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. SHORTER stated that he had paired off for to-day, upon the Minnesota question, with Mr. HUGHES, of Indiana; otherwise he should certainly have voted "no."

Mr. CAMPBELL said: In the hope that the constitution may soon be changed, so as to exclude foreigners from the right of suffrage, I vote "ay."

Mr. COVODE voted "ay," with a protest.

Mr. KILGORE changed his vote from "no" to "ay," with a protest.

Mr. AHL stated that he had paired off, upon all questions, with Mr. BURROUGHS, or he should have voted "ay."

Mr. PURVIANCE stated that he wished to be understood, in voting "ay," as disapproving of the constitution.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POSTMASTERS' QUARTERLY RETURNS.

The SPEAKER stated that the business next in order was the bill (H. R. No. 207) to prevent the inconvenient accumulation in the Post Office Department of postmasters' quarterly returns.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Is it in order to move to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the order of the House yesterday operates as a special order.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. How many bills are there on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. Only two.

Mr. ENGLISH. The object of the bill now before the House is clearly indicated by its title; and I suppose it is not necessary to make any explanation of it.

The bill having, at a former period of the session, been ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and being now engrossed, received its third reading.

Mr. ENGLISH. There are now about twenty-eight thousand post offices in the United States. The law requires that each post office shall make quarterly returns to the Department here. These returns, in the aggregate, make a very large bulk—about two thousand bushels per quarter, or eight thousand bushels per annum. In 1854, a provision was adopted similar to this, providing for disposing of the returns up to 1850. Since 1850 there have accumulated no less than fifty thousand bushels of these returns in the Post Office Department, and they are a great annoyance to the business of the Department. There is no necessity for preserving a portion of these returns. Another portion it is desirable to preserve. This bill, therefore, simply authorizes the Postmaster General to retain that portion which will be useful for reference, and to dispose of the balance. The House will see that it is absolutely necessary that there should be some provision of this sort; otherwise, these returns will occupy the whole of the building for the Post Office Department. I demand the previous question.

Mr. MORGAN. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for a moment.

Mr. ENGLISH. I will, if the gentleman desires any explanation.

Mr. MORGAN. I am opposed to this bill, unless it shall make provision for retaining these papers five years instead of two years. We propose, in the next Administration, to investigate these matters, [laughter;] and, if the gentleman will require that they shall be retained for five years, I have no objection.

Mr. ENGLISH. I suppose the gentleman does not make the objection seriously.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir, I do; and I move that amendment. You have erected fire-proof buildings, so that they cannot burn up these papers accidentally; and therefore, it is now proposed to do it by law.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, the joint resolution is not amendable in its present stage. It has been ordered to be engrossed.

Mr. MORGAN. Will it be if the demand for the previous question is voted down?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ENGLISH. I withdraw the demand for the previous question long enough to have a letter from the Postmaster General read, which will explain the whole matter.

The following letter from the Postmaster General was read:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, January 15, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you that the accumulation of postmasters' "quarterly returns" is so great that there is not sufficient room for their proper preservation in the General Post Office building, and that many are consequently exposed in the halls, liable to be injured, if not lost.

Similar exigencies having heretofore occurred, Congress provided relief by authorizing the sale of the older transcripts of accounts of mails sent and received, constituting the bulk of the returns, reserving the accounts current and vouchers; and I would suggest that such authority be now given, not merely with reference to the existing exigency, but that the Postmaster General may, from time to time, dispose of transcripts as may be deemed necessary in future.

I submit, for your consideration, a clause to meet this case, similar to a provision contained in an act of Congress, approved June 22, 1854, entitled "An act regulating the pay of deputy postmasters." (Statutes at Large, vol. x, p. 399.)

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AARON V. BROWN,

Postmaster General.

Hon. W. H. ENGLISH, Chairman Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I desire to ask the gentleman from Indiana, how many of these twenty-eight thousand quarterly returns are under five dollars?

Mr. ENGLISH. I cannot inform the gentleman.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose about fifteen thousand of them.

Mr. RUSSELL. I ask whether it would be in order to refer these whole returns to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MORGAN,] for examination?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. ENGLISH. I now insist on my demand for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

The bill was then passed.

Mr. ENGLISH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY.

The SPEAKER stated the business next in order to be the seconding of the demand for the previous question upon the preamble to the joint resolution of the House (No. 28) concerning the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. WHITELEY. Will it be in order, while the demand for the previous question is pending, to move to postpone this subject to a day certain?

The SPEAKER. It would not.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay the whole subject upon the table, and upon that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SICKLES. I hope the gentleman will withdraw that motion and allow me to submit a motion that the subject be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I prefer to have a vote upon my motion.

Mr. MAYNARD. What will be the effect of laying the preamble on the table?

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair, it will carry the joint resolution with it.

Mr. QUITMAN. Then laying the preamble on the table disposes of the subject for the session?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would inquire whether the motion to lay upon the table is not strictly confined to the preamble?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SICKLES. I understand that a division was called of the preamble and resolutions; and if that be so, then is not the only question now on the preamble?

The SPEAKER. The motion to lay the preamble upon the table carries the resolution with it, just as a motion to lay upon the table a motion to recommit would carry a bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. My proposition was to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is it in order to move to strike out the preamble before the question is taken on the motion to lay on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The motion to lay upon the table takes precedence of an amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. If the motion to lay upon the table is not agreed to, then a motion will be in order to amend.

The SPEAKER. It will; if the previous question be not seconded.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Has not the resolution been agreed to by a vote of the House on the yeas and nays?

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered the resolution to be engrossed, and read a third time. The question then recurred on ordering the preamble to be engrossed and read a third time. On that the resolution went to the Speaker's table.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 84, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Arnold, Bennett, Bingham, Bliss, Branch, Bufinton, Burns, Case, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Cobb, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Garnett, Gilman, Gillis, Granger, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, Horton, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Matteson, Milton, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Powell, Purviance, Reilly, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Samuel A. Smith, Stanton, William Stewart, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Winslow, and Wood—84.

NAYS—Messrs. Adrain, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Blair, Boccock, Bowie, Bryan, Burnett, Caruthers, Case, Chaffee, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, John Cochran, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davis of Mississippi, Dewart, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eastie, Foley, Gartrell, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, J. Morrison Harris, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, Kellogg, Lawrence, Lovejoy, McKibbin, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miller, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, Phelps, Quitman, Ready, Ricard, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Scales, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Shorter, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, Spinner, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, George Taylor, Thayer, Trippie, Wade, Watkins, Woodson, Worleudvke, Augustus R. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—88.

So the House refused to lay the subject upon the table.

Pending the above call,

Mr. KILGORE said: Mr. Speaker is it in order for me to propound an interrogatory?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent. Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know from the Committee on Foreign Affairs whether the resolution meets with the approbation of the President?

Mr. BARKSDALE. We did not inquire what were the President's views on the subject.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, said: Wishing to leave this matter where it belongs, with the treaty-making power, I vote in the affirmative.

The question recurred on seconding the demand for the previous question on ordering the preamble to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I move that the preamble and resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion is not in order. If the previous question be not seconded, it will be in order to amend the preamble.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. When the preamble is disposed of, and the question comes up on the passage, will it not be in order then to move to refer the subject to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. BOCKOCK. I shall then move to recommit it to the same committee from which it came.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Is it in order to move to lay the preamble upon the table?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. CLEMENS. I demand the yeas and nays on ordering the preamble to be engrossed and read a third time.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MILLSON. Is the motion to lay upon the table now in order?

The SPEAKER. It is at this time.

Mr. MILLSON. We have already been too long engaged in a matter with which, under the Constitution, we have no proper business; and I therefore move that the subject be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 65, nays 102; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Arnold, Billingham, Bingham, Bliss, Bufinton, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Cobb, Colfax, Cragin, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dimmick, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Garnett, Gilman, Gilmer, Granger, Robert B. Hall, Horton, Houston, Huyler, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Matteson, Edward Joy Morris, Parker, Phillips, Pike, Powell, Ready, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Stanton, Tappan, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Walton, Ellihu B. Washburne, White, Whiteley, and Wilson—65.

So the House refused to lay the subject upon the table.

Pending the above call,

Mr. BRANCH stated that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, being unwell, and desiring to leave the Hall, had paired off with him.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, said: If the resolution authorized, in case of refusal, the employment of force, I would vote for it; but believing it to be a half measure, I vote against it.

Mr. SICKLES. I move to commit the joint resolution and preamble to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER. The main question is ordered on it.

Mr. SICKLES. I call the Speaker's attention to the 120th rule, which says that a bill may be recommitted at any time before its passage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That motion is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair, in response to an inquiry made by the gentleman from Mississippi, stated that the motion to commit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union could not be entertained. On examining the Manual and the rule, the Chair is of opinion that the joint resolution may be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, or to a standing committee, at any time before its passage, but not in its present state. The House having ordered the main question to be put on agreeing to the preamble, that must be first disposed of.

Mr. SICKLES. And then the motion to refer to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will be in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it will. The 120th rule provides for a recommitment of a bill or joint resolution at any time before its passage. The Chair, in reading the rule casually, construed it as requiring the recommitment to be made to the same committee that reported the measure. The Manual would seem to indicate that that interpretation of the Chair is incorrect:

"After a bill has been committed and reported it ought not, in an ordinary course, to be recommitted; but, in cases of importance, and for special reasons, it is sometimes recommended, and usually to the same committee."

Implying that it may be sent to another committee than that from which it was reported.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would like to know the precise condition both of the preamble and the resolution. I understand that the main question has been ordered on the preamble.

The SPEAKER. That is true.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I understand further that the main question was ordered on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution, so soon as the preamble is disposed of, will be read a third time, having been engrossed. The order of the House, taken at a preceding sitting, was, that the resolution should be engrossed and read a third time. It has been engrossed, and will be read a third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Has not the House ordered the main question to be put on the passage of the resolution?

The SPEAKER. The House has not reached that stage.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I think that at the stage it has reached, no motion to commit is in order.

Mr. GROW. Supposing that the House shall adopt the preamble, how will the resolution stand?

The SPEAKER. The question will then be, "Shall the joint resolution pass?"

Mr. GROW. Was not the resolution rejected the other day?

The SPEAKER. The resolution was not rejected. It was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

The question was taken on the preamble; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 67, nays 99; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Boccock, Burnett, Caske, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, James Craig, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Foley, Gartrell, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hoard, Houston, Jackson, Jenkins, Kelly, Lawrence, Letcher, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miller, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Rufin, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, James A. Stewart, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, White, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright—67.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billingham, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bryan, Bufinton, Burlingame, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, John Cochran, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dimmick, Dodd, Durfee, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Giddings, Gilman, Gilmer, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hill, Horton, Howard, Huyler, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Purviance, Ready, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Sickles, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Wilson, and Zollcoffer—99.

So the preamble was rejected.

Pending the vote,

Mr. McQUEEN stated that his colleague, Mr. BONHAM, had come into the House in time to vote, but had paired off till to-morrow.

Mr. CLARK, of New York said: As I understand the question in the form in which it is presented, I shall vote "no."

Mr. HOUSTON said: I had voted before I read the preamble. I am willing to vote for it, and against the resolution. I vote "ay."

Mr. BOWIE asked leave to vote, not having been in the Hall when his name was called.

Mr. MORGAN objected.

Mr. BOWIE. I would have voted "ay."

Mr. ADRAIN asked the same privilege.

Mr. MORGAN objected.

Mr. ADRAIN. Had I been in the Hall when my name was called, I would have voted "ay."

After the announcement of the vote, Mr. CLAY asked the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has not been read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble was rejected; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. CLEMENS asked for the yeas and nays on the latter motion.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the latter motion was agreed to.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

Mr. SICKLES. I move to refer the joint resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. CLAY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the commitment. I had not withdrawn the call for the previous question; but I understood, from a remark made by the Speaker, that the demand would be in order.

The SPEAKER. In the opinion of the Chair it is in order.

Mr. CLAY. Then I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. STANTON. Is it in order, after the call for the previous question, to move to recommit to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. STANTON. I understood that that motion was made.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] rose and proposed to submit the demand for the previous question; but the joint resolution had not been read the third time, and the gentleman from Kentucky was notified that the demand for the previous question was not in order. The demand for the previous question is in order now.

Mr. CLAY. Then I make that demand.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. That cuts off the motion of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SICKLES. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Kentucky had not the floor to move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from New York had not resigned the floor he is entitled to it, and the gentleman from Kentucky cannot be recognized. The Chair supposed that the gentleman from New York had made his motion, and surrendered the floor.

Mr. SICKLES. I had not.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor, and the motion for the previous question cannot be entertained so long as the gentleman from New York has the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. I believe the gentleman from New York had taken his seat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York says he had not resigned the floor. The Chair was under the impression that he had surrendered the floor.

Mr. MORGAN. The gentleman had resumed his seat, and it was to be supposed he had surrendered the floor.

Mr. SICKLES. I certainly had not resigned the floor. There was some conversation pending between the Speaker and several other gentlemen, to which I gave way.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rose to demand the previous question; and the Chair supposing that the gentleman from New York had surrendered the floor, recognized the gentleman from Kentucky. The gentleman from New York rises in his place, and says that he had not resigned the floor, and of course it cannot be taken from him.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. If the Speaker assigned the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky, can he now take it from him and give it back to the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The assignment of the floor to the gentleman from Kentucky was under a misapprehension of facts in the mind of the Speaker.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. That may be true; but still the Speaker recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, and gave him the floor.

The SPEAKER. Under a misapprehension.

Mr. CLAY. My motion was entertained by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair entertained it on the supposition that the gentleman from New York had surrendered the floor.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SICKLES] rose to a question of order. What was the question of order?

The SPEAKER. The question of order was that he was entitled to the floor; and that it could not be taken from him by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I thought he rose to contend against the previous question being moved.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand the question of order.

Mr. SICKLES. I rose to claim the floor, not having surrendered it.

Mr. CLAY. Does an appeal from the decision of the Chair, as to whether the previous question is before the House, lie?

The SPEAKER. It does.

Mr. CLAY. Then I make that appeal.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky appeals from the decision of the Chair in declining to receive his motion for the previous question.

Mr. CLAY. No, sir. I understood that the demand for the previous question was entertained by the Chair; and now the Chair overrules it, and assigns the floor to another gentleman. From that decision of the Chair I appeal.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state the facts, so that the gentleman from Kentucky will have the benefit of them. The gentleman from New York rose and moved to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. The gentleman from Kentucky rose and demanded the previous question. The Chair, under the supposition that the gentleman from New York had surrendered the floor, recognized the gentleman from Kentucky, and entertained his demand for the previous question. The gentleman from New York rising subsequently, or standing on his feet all the while, claims his right to be heard on his motion to recommit, on the ground that he had not surrendered the floor so as to enable the gentlemen from Kentucky to make his motion; and the Chair, acting under a misapprehension of the facts in receiving, in the first instance, the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky, assigns the floor to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. I desire to make one statement. After the vote by which the preamble was rejected had been announced by the Speaker, I endeavored to get the floor to move the previous question; but the floor was assigned to the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CLAY], who then demanded the previous question, as I had intended to do. Then, after he had demanded it, I made the privileged motion to reconsider, and lay on the table. I understood that, at that time, the gentleman from Kentucky had demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has misapprehended the state of the facts.

Mr. CLAY. I withdraw the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to correct the erroneous impression of the gentleman from Illinois. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CLAY] was recognized by the Chair, and stated that he proposed to demand the previous question on the passage of the resolution. The Chair stated that it was not in order at that time, inasmuch as the joint resolution had not been read a third time, pursuant to the order of the House. So that the demand for the previous question could not have been pending.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I desire to inquire of the Chair if a motion to recommit the preamble and resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs is in order?

The SPEAKER. A motion to recommit the preamble would not be in order, because the House has rejected the preamble and has no further control over it. A motion to recommit the joint resolution would be in order if the gentleman had the floor to make the motion; but the gentleman from New York is entitled to the floor.

WITHDRAWAL OF A PAPER.

Mr. ENGLISH. I ask the gentleman from New York to yield me the floor for a moment.

Mr. SICKLES. I do so, sir.

Mr. ENGLISH. I ask the consent of the House to withdraw from the files of the House, for the use of the Post Office Department, the affidavit of William Fuller, who is now being prosecuted by the Post Office Department for some offense. It is highly important that the paper should be withdrawn to-day, as they will need it to-morrow.

Leave was granted for the withdrawal of the paper.

THE CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY—AGAIN.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I ask the gentleman from New York to allow me to submit a motion to recommit the joint resolution to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. SICKLES. I must decline to yield for that purpose.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I am satisfied that the House is not prepared to vote on the resolution now.

Mr. SICKLES. I think so too, and I want to prove it. I should have been glad if the gentleman had voted with me to give the House more time.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Will my colleague give way to me for a moment, to permit me to bring to the attention of the House a matter in respect to which I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to ask the direction of the House?

Mr. SICKLES yielded.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Judiciary Committee to ask that they be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I ask that the matter before the House be disposed of before anything else is brought up.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I believe that my colleague has yielded me the floor, and that I am entitled to it.

The SPEAKER. It is competent for any gentleman upon the floor to object.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I hope the objection will not be insisted on. My purpose is to facilitate the business of the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Let us dispose of the business before the House; and then the gentleman can bring his case up.

ENROLLED BILL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 86) to admit the State of Minnesota into the Union; when the Speaker signed the same.

CLAYTON-BULWER TREATY RESUMED.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. Speaker, I am too well aware of the impatience with which the House, at this period of the session, regards any extended discussion, to trespass long upon its attention, even upon so important a topic as I regard this to be. But, sir, I do believe that a brief discussion, a few minutes devoted to a question of this character, will not be appropriated in vain. I think the House will concur with me in saying that the record we have exhibited for the last few days, and the votes that have been taken on this question, afford the most conclusive proof that I can refer to to show that the question is not correctly understood in many quarters of the House.

It is well understood that negotiations are now pending, and have been pending for some time, under favorable auspices, with a view to bringing the two countries to an amicable understanding in reference to the controversies that have grown out of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How is that known?

Mr. SICKLES. It is known from the President's message of December last. I have heard the same inquiry put many times, and I am surprised that this fact is not more generally known. I will read a very brief extract from the message. After giving his views upon the British construction of the treaty, the President says, at page 12:

"Whilst entertaining these sentiments, I shall, nevertheless, not refuse to contribute to any reasonable adjustment of the Central American question which is not practically inconsistent with the American interpretation of the treaty. Overtures for this purpose have been recently made by the British Government in a friendly spirit, which I cordially reciprocate."

Mr. CLAY. That relates to Central American affairs.

Mr. SICKLES. What I have read is in relation to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and nothing else, as I will prove if there is any dispute about it. The passage immediately preceding what I have read removes all doubt as to what is referred to. It is as follows:

"The time spent in discussing the meaning of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty would have been devoted to this praiseworthy purpose, and the task would have been the more easily accomplished, because the interest of the two countries in Central America is identical, being confined to securing safe transits over all the routes across the isthmus."

Then follows the passage which I have just read, stating that overtures have been made by the British Government of a friendly character, which are cordially reciprocated by the Executive, and that negotiations are now pending.

Now, I do say, Mr. Speaker, that when it is known to the House and the country that negotiations are pending in reference to a most grave and delicate public question—a question that has given rise to a great deal of asperity of feeling between the two countries, that has been a subject of controversy for a number of years, and a topic upon which all must desire that there shall be, if possible, a friendly understanding and a removal of differences—it is a most extraordinary proceeding on the part of the House of Representatives to interpose, without any knowledge of the present state of the negotiations, whether it be favorable or unfavorable, without any intimation from any quarter of a desire on the part of the coordinate branch of the Government, or of the treaty-making power, for any action—I say it is without precedent in the history of this Government for a resolution like this to be pressed through the House.

It is well known that one of the chief obstacles to an understanding between the two countries in reference to the Central America question, so far as it had reference to the Bay Islands and the Mosquito protectorate, out of which this question of interpretation arises, was the fixed and settled views of the late Premier of England, Lord Palmerston, who had adhered tenaciously, during the whole of his official career, to a line of policy which committed the Government of Great Britain to intervention in Central America, and the acquisition of territory there; looking ever, as he did, with a jealous eye to our obtaining a foothold in that region which would give us control over the commerce of the East by that channel of communication. And what renders any hostile action on our part, either in the House of Representatives or elsewhere at this time, not at all to be desired, is the consideration that this obstacle no longer exists. Lord Palmerston has retired for a period (we cannot tell how long) from power; and the Minister now in office is one whose party has in no former period shown a disposition to interpose those obstacles to an adjustment which Lord Palmerston always has clung to, whenever he has been in office, whether as Premier or as Minister of Foreign Affairs.

The leader of the House of Commons, Mr. Disraeli, Chancellor of the Exchequer, has acknowledged, and he is the first Minister of the Crown who has recognized the fact, that there is such a thing as an American policy—a policy of progress, a policy of territorial and commercial development, a policy which must be respected.

Mr. QUITMAN. Will the gentleman from New York permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SICKLES. With pleasure.

Mr. QUITMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is any reliable information that Great Britain, with her present Ministry, is about abandoning, or has abandoned, her policy upon the subject of the construction of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty? In other words, whether she is ready to abandon her possessions in Central America?

Mr. SICKLES. I will say to the gentleman from Mississippi that a sufficient time has not yet elapsed since the present Ministry came into office to ascertain precisely the opinion they are prepared to express upon that point. Lord Aberdeen, who occupied a position precisely identical with that of the Ministry, was prepared, as was well understood at the time, to go for a fair adjustment of this question with the United States, to surrender the Mosquito protectorate, and to retire from the Bay Islands; the proof of which is contained in the correspondence which is already before Congress.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to ask the gentleman from New York if a treaty has not already been ratified with Honduras by which Great Britain agrees to surrender the Mosquito protectorate and the Bay Islands?

Mr. SICKLES. I will answer the gentleman from Missouri. He is correct in saying that a treaty was negotiated, but he is not correct in supposing that it has been ratified. It was negotiated, with the understanding that this country should be a party; but it was rejected in the form in which it was negotiated, by the Senate, and so amended that it was not satisfactory to Great Britain. Great Britain has not concurred in our amendment, nor has the treaty been ratified by Honduras. It is obvious that that treaty can never be ratified, because in fact it deprives Honduras of her sovereignty over her own territory. We have not claimed this as our territory, but we have protested against her wresting it from Honduras.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. If the gentleman will permit me, the House will bear in mind that this message of President Buchanan, in reference to this question, is the annual message of December last. After stating that it is the true policy to abolish this treaty, he says:

"The fact is, that when two nations like Great Britain and the United States, mutually desirous, as they are, and I trust ever may be, of maintaining the most friendly relations with each other, have unfortunately concluded a treaty which they understand in senses directly opposite, the wisest course is to abrogate such a treaty by mutual consent, and to commence anew. Had this been done promptly, all difficulties in Central America would, most probably, ere this have been adjusted to the satisfaction of both parties. The time spent in discussing the meaning of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty would have been devoted to this praiseworthy purpose, and the task would have been the more easily accomplished because the interest of the two countries in Central America is identical, being confined to securing safe transits over all the routes across the isthmus."

"Whilst entertaining these sentiments, I shall, nevertheless, not refuse to contribute to any reasonable adjustment of the Central American questions which is not practically inconsistent with the American interpretation of the treaty. Overtures for this purpose have been recently made by the British Government in a friendly spirit, which I cordially reciprocate; but whether this renewed effort will result in success, I am not yet prepared to express an opinion. A brief period will determine."

This was in December last. "A brief period" has since intervened, and yet nothing has been done.

Mr. SICKLES. "A brief period" in the progress of a negotiation between the United States and Great Britain, upon a complicated and difficult question like this, is a relative term. It is not five minutes, nor five days, nor five months. Negotiations, as we know, have been pending with that nation upon this subject for several years. But my friend from Virginia misconstrues, I think, entirely the first paragraph which he reads. It is very evident, from the context, that the President does not recommend to this House anything like legislation with a view of abrogating that treaty; but he expresses what is a very palpable truth, that it would have been far better, looking back to the difficulties which have surrounded this controversy, and looking to the fact that the constructions placed upon the treaty by the two Powers are wholly irreconcilable, that it would have been far better if the treaty had been abrogated "by mutual consent" in the early part of the controversy.

Mr. Speaker, there is but one precedent in the history of this country, in which a step of this kind has been taken with a view of the abrogation of a treaty. I call the attention of the gentleman from Virginia to a part of the extract, from which he read, to show that it was not the intention of the President to recommend action upon the part of Congress. The President says it would have been better to have abrogated the treaty by mutual consent. About that there is no difficulty or question. There could be no cause of complaint upon the part of any one if it had been done by mutual consent. But, sir, this legislation proposes nothing of that kind. This resolution declares in the preamble reasons which are wholly irreconcilable in the idea of abrogation by mutual consent.

To abrogate the treaty in the manner indicated by this resolution would be an initiatory step in a war policy; and the question for the House to consider is, whether it is prepared, without a knowledge of the present state of the question, without a knowledge of the condition of the negotiations, of its own mere motion, not itself a part of the treaty-making power, to take an initiatory step in a war policy on this question?

Mr. QUITMAN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will correct what I think is a misapprehension on his part of the object of this resolution. The resolution is not to abrogate this treaty, but is a mere modest recommendation to the President as a part of the treaty-making power—a recommendation from the Representatives of the people. And, sir, let me say that, in my opinion, this House has as much right under the Constitution, in shaping the great foreign policy of this country, to express its views, as any other department of the Government. This is not an attempt to abrogate the treaty, but is simply a recommendation to the President and the treaty-making power to take the proper means to abrogate it.

Mr. SICKLES. I am the last person in the world to detract from the respect and consideration due to any opinion which this House might express on any subject. Any opinion which it may express is entitled to great weight; and just for that reason it ought not to express an opinion on a question the state of which it is impossible that it can understand, because it is not in the possession of the facts on which alone a safe and reliable and prudent judgment can be formed. And I would suggest to my friend from Mississippi that it is in this that we see the wisdom of the constitutional adjustment of the treaty-making power. The treaty-making power, as we know, is the President and Senate. For the Senate to entertain a resolution of this kind, to express opinions on this class of questions, would be entirely consistent with its functions, because the Senate has it in its power, as a branch of the treaty-making power, to ascertain at any time the state of the pending negotiations.

Sir, the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RICHIE,] my colleague on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, thought the other day that it was entirely proper for the House of Representatives to take action on a question of this kind; and I may add, that the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] then a member of this House, but now in the other branch of Congress, took the same view, in analogy, to the opinions which are often expressed by the House of Commons on questions of foreign policy. Gentlemen will at once see the wide distinction between the functions of the House of Commons in reference to matters of foreign policy and the appropriate limitations of duty prescribed by the Constitution upon the House of Representatives.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do I understand the gentleman to say that there is but one precedent for this sort of action in the history of the country?

Mr. SICKLES. I said that I was aware of but one precedent in the history of the country where legislative action was invoked to abrogate treaties. I referred to the precedent of 1798, in the case of the French treaties.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I thought the gentleman referred to the resolutions about Oregon—the joint occupancy resolutions, so called. That was a different sort of case.

Mr. SICKLES. That was a recommendation to give notice, by the terms of the treaty, where either party was at liberty to give a notice of twelve months, terminating a joint occupation of territory.

Mr. QUITMAN. I pledge the honorable gentleman from New York that I can furnish him with half a dozen precedents, from the most distinguished men who have ever been in the House of Representatives, where they have expressed their wishes, or their hopes, or their disposition, to check the treaty-making power. In reference to Spain, I recollect when Mr. Clay presented in this House resolutions in regard to the Executive duties on the subject of certain treaties. I have not the precedents with me now, but I can furnish them.

Mr. SICKLES. I do not mean to say, Mr. Speaker, and I have not said, that there is no precedent for an expression of opinion by this House with reference to the foreign policy of the country. I am quite aware that there are several instances in which such views have been expressed. But what I said then, and what I adhere to now is, that there is but one instance in which an attempt was made, successfully or unsuccessfully, to induce the House of Representatives, as a branch of Congress, to pass a resolution or a bill abrogating a treaty, or demanding its abrogation; but one instance prior to this, and that was, as I have said, in 1798, in reference to our treaties with France; that was a war measure, and adopted as such. It was a part of a programme of warlike legislation, embracing an act of non-intercourse with France, followed soon afterwards by authority to our cruisers to make reprisals on French vessels at sea.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1st Session.

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 130.

I admit that a state of things might exist where it would be proper for the House, either in the expression of its own views of policy, or where it saw fit to make an issue with the Executive, or where it desired to cooperate with the Executive after the termination of all negotiation, after the abandonment, by each side, of all attempt at reconciliation. I can well understand, sir, that a state of things might thus arise in which it would be entirely proper for the House of Representatives to express, by resolution, its views as to what should be done. But that would be with full knowledge of all that had passed, and in view of the fact that negotiations having terminated, the time for action had begun.

I agree with the suggestion which was thrown out to-day while we were voting on the preamble, that if negotiations had terminated, and all hope of an adjustment was at an end, and action was proposed, there would then be no objection to our taking the initiative. If such were the case I would go as far as any gentleman upon this floor in recommending and advising such action as might be necessary to vindicate the honor and protect the interests of the country, and to enforce that conformity to treaty obligations, that all Administrations, this Administration included, since the formation of this treaty, have insisted on with reference to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I am against the treaty on the British interpretation of it, as strongly as any gentleman in the House can be; but I do not believe, as the preamble asserts, that on the American construction of it there is no mutuality, and that on the American construction of it it ought to be abrogated. And I say that the expression of such an opinion by the House would stultify our Government, and place the House in conflict with the positions that have been heretofore taken by the executive branch of the Government in the conduct of all our negotiations with Great Britain. It would be occupying an entirely new ground on the whole question.

Sir, let me, for a moment, call the attention of the House to what must be the effect of abrogating this treaty by our own act, against the consent of England—and that is the measure proposed. The effect would be to leave Great Britain in possession of all that she has, or claims to have, in Central America; and I believe that such a course, in one point of view, would be far from objectionable to Great Britain. It could not be objectionable to her, so far as her interests in Central America are concerned. She could only regret it in one aspect—that she would be bound to regard it as an aggressive measure, and as the initiatory step in a war policy on the part of the United States. But if we would agree to abrogate this treaty by our own act, and stop there, I have no doubt that the policy of Great Britain would be promoted, if not wholly attained, by such a course.

Mr. BLAIR. I understood the gentleman from New York to state, in the first place, that the House has nothing to do with that treaty.

Mr. SICKLES. We have nothing to do with making or abrogating treaties.

Mr. BLAIR. And yet that this is a war measure if we do abrogate it. I believe that it is competent for this House to take war measures, and to declare war, if necessary, and to take all measures in regard to it; and I think this is an inconsistency on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. SICKLES. I have not questioned the power of the House to take an initiatory step in a war policy; but I have put it to the House whether it is prepared to take that step on this question while it does not know the condition of the question?

Mr. BLAIR. We know something about the condition of the question if we can rely upon the President's message, and the documents laid before us on the subject.

Mr. SICKLES. We understand, by the President's message, the condition in which the question was in December last; we know that at that time it was in a condition favorable to an adjustment with Great Britain; and we have no message from the President since, and no information or act, official or unofficial, from the treaty-making power, putting a different phase on the subject. We have no reason to believe that the hope expressed in December of an honorable and fair adjustment will not be realized; and I put it to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAIR] whether, in that state of the question, he and his friends are prepared to ask the House of Representatives to force war measures upon the Executive? If so, so be it: then he is prepared to vote for the resolution.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Will my friend permit me to put a question to him?

Mr. SICKLES. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. My colleague has spoken of the policy of the Administration in respect to Central American affairs. Is he at liberty to answer the question whether the House and the country are to understand that the Yrissarri treaty is an embodiment of the policy of the Administration in respect to Central America?

Mr. SICKLES. I am not authorized to answer that question for anybody but myself. I can only, as my colleague can do, draw my own inferences as to the policy of the Administration, so far as it relates to Central America, from its acts. It is understood that a treaty, commonly called the Cass-Yrissarri treaty, has been negotiated by the present Administration, and has been ratified by Nicaragua; and I take it for granted that the Administration would not negotiate a treaty that is not in conformity with its policy and views of the public interest.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I desire to know whether it was the view of my colleague that we should rid ourselves of the complications of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, by incurring the new ones imposed by the Cass-Yrissarri treaty?

Mr. SICKLES. I will answer the gentleman. I have not, and none of us have, any authentic official information as to the provisions of the Cass-Yrissarri treaty; but as I understand them unofficially and from rumor, I do not believe that that treaty, if ratified and carried out in good faith by both Governments in the spirit in which it has been negotiated, will involve our interests in Central America in any new complications.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I ask my colleague if the complications of the Yrissarri treaty do not come in direct conflict with those imposed by the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and if the abrogation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is not necessary in order that the hardships of the American people should be united to carry out the policy resulting from this new treaty?

Mr. SICKLES. I do not so understand it; and I think I may add that neither of the parties to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty—neither Great Britain nor the United States—understand the Cass-Yrissarri treaty as coming in conflict at all with the provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty.

Mr. QUITMAN. Does it not come into conflict in this: that it authorizes the occupation of a portion of Central America by American forces, while the Clayton-Bulwer treaty provides that we shall not occupy any portion of, or establish any possession in, Central America?

Mr. SICKLES. I think not. The Cass-Yrissarri treaty looks to the Americanization of Central America—if I may be allowed the expression—by emigration, by settlement—by intimate intercourse—the only true modes in which, in my humble opinion, Central America can be or ought to be Americanized. It looks to the extension of commercial intercourse and the cultivation of all the offices and duties of intimate and fraternal neighborhood between Nicaragua and the United States; and I should infer, from such currency as rumor has given to the provisions of this treaty, and the circumstances attending its negotiation, that it would be the policy of the Administration to extend our relations with the other Central American States in the same way, and by similar treaties. There is nothing in the Cass-Yrissarri treaty—not a line, as I understand it—which looks to a permanent occupation by the United States Government of any portion of the territory of Central America.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I will ask my friend another question. Is there not an understanding on the part of the United States, in the event that the Republic of Nicaragua shall be unable to maintain her own tranquillity and to maintain the rights which, by the contract she has conferred upon Central American citizens, to interfere by an armed occupation, or by fortifications if necessary, with the stipulation that the Americans shall withdraw the armed force whenever the necessity for its presence ceases?

Mr. SICKLES. The Cass-Yrissarri treaty contains precisely what the Clayton-Bulwer treaty contains: a stipulation to protect the route across the isthmus. In this respect, the two treaties are in perfect accord with each other. Neither treaty contemplates permanent occupation by either country or by any Power, or the exclusive possession by any one of the privileges of the transit routes. The Cass-Yrissarri treaty contemplates the inability, in a possible contingency, of Nicaragua to protect and keep free and open to all nations the privileges and opportunities of these transit routes; and the United States, for itself, undertakes to see that that protection is guaranteed. But the treaty involves in no way the assertion of any exclusive control over the routes. And, allow me to add, in further answer to the question of my colleague, that the treaty does not undertake to protect exclusively the rights of any one company to the disparagement or exclusion of another, but leaves to Nicaragua herself full power to make such grants to such companies as she may see fit, with reference to the transit routes across the isthmus.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Will my colleague inform me whether the navigation of the waters of Nicaragua is open to all the citizens of the United States, under the provisions of the Cass-Yrissarri treaty, or whether the right is restricted to a corporation created by the Republic of Nicaragua, whose exclusive right they have stipulated to defend, and this Government has stipulated to guaranty?

Mr. SICKLES. I will answer this question; and I hope, after I have done so, he will excuse me from going more fully into the details of a question which is, in some measure, foreign to the one that I have risen to discuss. The treaty with Nicaragua concedes to Nicaragua the right to act for herself in reference to all corporations she may create with a view to establish transit routes across the isthmus, whether by railroad, canal, or by any other mode. It concedes to her the prerogatives of self-government, "of popular sovereignty," which my colleague has always been foremost in claiming as the true principle to be observed among the States of our own Union, and which, I am sure, he would be the last to refuse to a young sister Republic like Nicaragua.

But, Mr. Speaker, I have already occupied more of the time of the House than I proposed to do when I rose this afternoon. I would have been pleased, at an earlier day in the session, and at a time when the House would be disposed to look more indulgently upon the consumption of time upon this or any other question, to have entered quite at large into the general merits of this subject, embracing as it does, the general questions of our relations with England with reference to Central America; and in that connection would have been pleased to discuss what I consider the bearing, as far as it is proper to discuss it in the present state of the matter, not only of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, but of the Cass-Yrissarri treaty to which my colleague has referred. But I will pass rapidly on, and present one or two additional considerations which, in my judgment, require that the House should reject this resolution.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. Will the gentleman indulge me with a question for information?

Mr. SICKLES. With pleasure.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The language of this resolution, as I remember it, directs the President to take measures for the abrogation of this treaty.

Mr. SICKLES. Yes, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. If the President initiates negotiations, and the parties concur in abrogating it, then no difficulty can ensue. But in the event that Great Britain refuses to concur in the abrogation, the resolution, if I understand it, does not allow the President to stop at that point.

Mr. SICKLES. No, sir, it does not; and there is the difficulty.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. The resolution, therefore, under a proper construction of it, directs the President, whether Great Britain is willing or unwilling, to abrogate the treaty; in other words, if Great Britain refuses to abrogate it, it is a declaration of war.

Mr. SICKLES. Inevitably; that must follow.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. I wished a declaration from the gentleman on that point.

Mr. SICKLES. I am obliged to the gentleman from Maryland for recalling my attention to the exact point in the discussion which I was considering when I yielded to the questions of my colleague.

I was proceeding to show that the inevitable effect of the course that the House is asked to pursue will be, that, if England does not consent to the abrogation of the treaty, we are forced then to abrogate it by our own act; and the result will be to leave her in the possession of all the territory which we claim that, under the treaty, she ought to relinquish. Prior to the Clayton and Bulwer treaty we found Great Britain claiming possession of an extent of coast of more than a thousand miles in length in Central America; we found her in possession of the Belize; we found her in possession of a number of islands, dependencies, as she claimed, of her possessions on the main land.

By the treaty as we negotiated it, as we understood it, and as we have always interpreted it since, Great Britain agreed to relinquish all her claims to possessions there, except to the Belize; and, in consideration of that, both Governments entered into a solemn compact with each other to abstain for all time in attempting to acquire any sovereignty or control over any portion of Central America; and both agreed that for all time, so far as they were concerned, Central America should be devoted to the commerce of the world, and that both Governments would exert their own influence and seek the cooperation of all other commercial nations for the establishment and maintenance of routes of communication across that isthmus for the advancement of the common commercial interests of mankind. That was the theory of the treaty, as we understood it. Great Britain has, however, since claimed that, according to her understanding, she was to keep what she had, but to acquire no more, and that we were to abstain from making any acquisitions at all.

Now, I entirely agree with the most zealous opponents of this treaty, that upon the British construction of it, there is no mutuality, and that it is disadvantageous to the United States. Nay, I insist that it is a preposterous treaty in that point of view—a treaty that never would have been negotiated by any President, that never would have been ratified by any Senate, and that it is impossible for the United States at this time, or at any future time, to agree that any such construction shall be established, or admitted as the true meaning of the treaty.

But, sir, if all negotiation was at an end; if the President had told us in December, or if he told us now, that negotiation was at an end, that it was impossible to come to any adjustment of this controversy with Great Britain, that she adhered to her construction, and that we ought to adhere to ours, and we were called upon to take measures to protect our rights and our honor, I would be willing to take part here in maturing the most effective means of redress.

But, happily for the peace of the world, such a condition of affairs does not exist. Negotiations are pending, under circumstances favorable to an adjustment upon terms consonant with the honor and interests of this country. It is apparent, therefore, that the effect of the passage by Congress of such resolutions as these would be in the highest degree prejudicial to the prospect of bringing the negotiations to a successful termination. I think that it will be agreed on all hands, that in view of the treaty that has been made with England, and in view of a treaty which it is understood has been made with Nicaragua, it would be exceedingly unwise to attempt to force any measure looking to the annexation of any portion of Central America. Such a course would be in conflict with our own interpretation of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and with what are understood to be the provisions of our treaty with Nicaragua, and in conflict with what are now generally believed to be the true interests of this country.

For the last four or five years, there have been various projects of annexation in Central America mooted in the United States; filibustering expeditions have been fitted out; the effect of which has been to alienate the feelings of the Central American States from us. The result has been to create impediments to the realization of the true policy of the United States with reference to the Republics of Central America. I believe the better portion of the people in the country concur in the opinion that all this was a mistake; that our true policy is to cultivate affectionate and intimate relations with these Republics, to protect them from aggression from other strong Powers, rather than to be ourselves the instrument, tacit or actual, by which outrage and aggression may be perpetrated upon them. I believe the general opinion of the day is, that in this mode our interests may be best promoted, and that thus the safest and fairest opportunity will be furnished, by which our people may colonize, in the true way of American colonization, that portion of the continent. Let us follow out this policy, and the time will not be far distant when Central America will fulfill its true office—that of being the great highway of commerce between the East and the West.

Mr. CLAY obtained the floor.

Mr. BLAIR. Will the gentleman give way for me to make a motion to adjourn?

Mr. CLAY. Unless it is the wish of the House now to adjourn, I would prefer to say what I have to say now. I was about to observe that I should not have risen on this occasion to have addressed the House upon the question before it, on the question presented by the late chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] except that that gentleman who was so much better qualified than I to have maintained and defended his own act in this House, has been translated to a higher sphere, and the measure seems to have been left in this House without a father or a mother. Sir, I propose to take up this orphan babe and to give some of my own opinions upon it in answer to the arguments advanced by my honorable friend from New York, [Mr. SICKLES.]

In the first place, Mr. Speaker, that this House and the country may understand this whole subject before us, I shall beg leave to read the first article of the celebrated Clayton-Bulwer treaty, promulgated in 1850; and I hope the House will indulge me for a short time while I do so; not that I believe any gentleman here has forgotten it, but because the country may have forgotten it, or may not fully understand it.

"The Governments of the United States and Great Britain hereby declare, that neither the one nor the other will ever obtain or maintain for itself any exclusive control over the said ship canal; agreeing that neither will ever erect or maintain any fortifications commanding the same or in the vicinity thereof, or occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion over Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America; nor will either make use of any protection which either affords or may afford, or any alliance which either has or may have, to or with any State or people, for the purpose of erecting or maintaining any such fortifications, or of occupying, fortifying, or colonizing Nicaragua, Costa Rica, the Mosquito coast, or any part of Central America, or of assuming or exercising dominion over the same; nor will the United States or Great Britain take advantage of any intimacy, or use any alliance, connection or influence that either may possess, with any State or Government through whose territory the said canal may pass, for the purpose of acquiring or holding, directly or indirectly, for the citizens or subjects of the one, any rights or advantages in regard to commerce or navigation through the said canal which shall not be offered on the same terms to the citizens or subjects of the other."

What have been the consequences following this treaty? England and the United States have both declared that they would never seek to plant colonies in, or in any way exercise dominion over, these Central American States. How does the matter stand at this day? England holds in her clutches more than two-thirds of the entire Central American coast.

Notwithstanding this article of this treaty, she holds this day, and will maintain that hold just so long as this treaty and her construction of it stands, more than two thirds of the whole Central American coast, while we have no foothold there except in one or two small localities, and for special and restricted purposes.

Now, in this state of things the President of the United States, at the assembling of Congress, sent us his annual message. Did he send that message to us to give us information? Did he send it to us that we might make up our opinion on the subject? Or did he desire us to do as my honorable friend from New York [Mr. SICKLES] desires us to do, to have no opinion at all on the question, because we do not know enough about the subsequent negotiations which may have taken place? I believe it was the purpose of the President of the United States that we should be informed on this question. I believe that it was his purpose that we should think on it. Whether it was his purpose or not that we should express an opinion on what he had reflected, I do not pretend to say; but I, for one, stand up in this House and say before the American people, that as a representative of the people of a distinguished district of this land, I feel free to express my opinion on any subject I have made up my mind on. What does the President say?

"Since the origin of the Government we have been employed in negotiating treaties with that Power, and afterwards in discussing their true intent and meaning. In this respect, the convention of April 19, 1853, commonly called the Clayton and Bulwer treaty, has been the most unfortunate of all; because the two Governments place directly opposite and contradictory constructions upon its first and most important article. Whilst, in the United States, we believed that this treaty would place both Powers upon an exact equality by the stipulation that neither will ever 'occupy, or fortify, or colonize, or assume or exercise any dominion' over, any part of Central America, it is contended by the British Government that the true construction of this language has left them in the rightful possession of all that portion of Central America which was in their occupancy at the date of the treaty; in fact, that the treaty is a virtual recognition on the part of the United States of the right of Great Britain, either as owner or protector, to the whole extensive coast of Central America, sweeping round from the Rio Honda to the port and harbor of San Juan de Nicaragua, together with the adjacent Bay Islands, except the comparatively small portion of this between the Sarston and Cape Honduras. According to their construction, the treaty does no more than simply prohibit them from extending their possessions in Central America beyond the present limits. It is not too much to assert, that if in the United States the treaty had been considered susceptible of such a construction, it never would have been negotiated under the authority of the President, nor would it have received the approbation of the Senate."

This message, when it was received here, was dissected, and its parts distributed to the appropriate committees. The portion I have read was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which committee I have the honor to be an humble member. Why was it referred there? Was not the committee to submit a report? Was it not to give some expression of opinion? Or was it, sir, submitted to that committee to be shelved, as many other matters have been shelved, and allowed to remain there until moth-eaten and forgotten?

Mr. SICKLES. I will answer the gentleman. I think it was sent to us for our information.

Mr. CLAY. What was the necessity of sending it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs if there was to be no action? It was already before the House and the country.

Mr. SICKLES. It was sent there for our information, and not with a view that we should report a resolution in direct conflict with it.

Mr. CLAY. That I will come to presently, and will call on the gentleman either to vote with the Administration or against it.

Mr. SICKLES. I want to vote with the country.

Mr. CLAY. And I want to vote with the country, and with the Administration which is the head of it.

Mr. BOWIE. And which embodies the spirit of the country.

Mr. CLAY. I thank the gentleman from Maryland—and which, sir, embodies the spirit of the country. This portion of the message was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. What did we do? We drew up a preamble and resolutions, offered by my colleague on the committee, [Mr. CLINGMAN,] now a Senator, in almost the very language of the President of the United States. What did the preamble tell us? Did it not tell us that the two Governments placed opposite and contradictory interpretations on the first and the most important article of the treaty? Did not the preamble state that? Did it not state that it was an entangling alliance? Did not the President say that it was an entangling alliance? And, sir, in opposing the preamble, I say that the gentleman opposes the views of the President of the United States, because that preamble was a mere reiteration of what had been said in the message.

Mr. SICKLES. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that whether I agree with the views of the President or not, is of much less importance than the inquiry whether what I have contended for is right. And I desire to correct my friend from Kentucky in one point of his statement. The preamble is in direct conflict with the view taken by the President of the treaty, for—

Mr. CLAY. Not with the views of the President as communicated to this House.

Mr. SICKLES. I will call the attention of my friend to a point which he mistakes. The preamble affirms that on the American construction of the treaty it is without mutuality, and ought to be abrogated.

Mr. CLAY. Precisely.

Mr. SICKLES. And no one has claimed that yet.

Mr. CLAY. Does the President or the Administration say that we have gained anything by this Clayton-Bulwer treaty? Where is the foot of ground we have gained by it? Where has it been mutual, when England has got two thirds of the whole Central American coast, and we have not gained a foot? Where is the mutuality, under any construction of it?

Mr. SICKLES. The gentleman confounds the state of things under the English construction, with the state of things under the American construction. The state of things under the American construction is, that neither party shall occupy, possess, hold, or fortify any portion of the country; but, under the British construction, it is entirely the reverse, and they do make the claim alleged.

Mr. CLAY. The British construction is, that they shall have two thirds of the Central American coast. We say that is wrong, and that we will never assent to it. Therefore, in the language of the President, the treaty ought to be abrogated.

Mr. SICKLES. He does not recommend its abrogation, except by mutual consent; and that is a different thing from what is recommended here.

Mr. CLAY. The preamble has been voted down. We are discussing, so far as that is concerned, a dead thing. Let us come to something that is not dead, and which I hope will not die, and that is the resolution itself. I think I have shown that the preamble, which was voted down, was in the language of the President of the United States, as contained in his annual message. Now, what does he say about abrogating the treaty? It has been read by gentlemen who have spoken, but as it is good I will read it again; for good things cannot be too often impressed upon our minds. He says:

"The fact is, that when two nations like Great Britain and the United States, mutually desirous as they are, and I trust ever may be, of maintaining the most friendly relations with each other, have unfortunately concluded a treaty which they understand in senses directly opposite, the wisest course is to abrogate such a treaty by mutual consent, and to commence anew. Had this been done promptly, all difficulties in Central America would most probably ere this have been adjusted to the satisfaction of both parties. The time spent in discussing the meaning of the Clayton and Bulwer treaty would have been devoted to this praiseworthy purpose, and the task would have been the more easily accomplished because the interest of the two countries in Central America is identical, being confined to securing safe transit over all the routes across the isthmus."

"Whilst entertaining these sentiments, I shall nevertheless not refuse to contribute to any reasonable adjustment of the Central American questions which is not practically inconsistent with the American interpretation of the treaty. Overtures for this purpose have been recently made by the British Government in a friendly spirit, which I cordially reprobate; but whether this renewed effort will result in success, I am not yet prepared to express an opinion. A brief period will determine."

Yes, sir, abrogate it and commence anew. It is just like two gentlemen having made a contract, one understanding it one way and the other another, and neither willing to yield. In the case of great States, there being no superior tribunal to which they can appeal for a settlement, it is far better for them, in the language of the President, to abrogate the thing on which they can never agree. The American people, I believe, never will agree to the English construction of the first article of this treaty; and as there is no tribunal to which the two nations can appeal for an arbitration of the differences between them, it would seem best to wipe it out, and begin new. Does not the President tell us that? Does the resolution desire to do anything more? I call for the reading of the resolution.

The Clerk read the preamble and resolution as follows:

Whereas, the treaty between the United States and Great Britain, designated as the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, is, under the interpretation placed upon it by Great Britain, a surrender of the rights of this country, and, upon the American construction, an entangling alliance, without mutuality, either in its benefits or restrictions, and has hitherto been productive only of misunderstandings and controversies between the two Governments: Therefore,

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be requested to take such steps as may be, in his judgment, best calculated to effect a speedy abrogation of such treaty.

Mr. CLAY. "That the President of the United States be requested to take such steps as in his judgment may be best, to effect the abrogation of that treaty"—is not that just what he says he wants to do?

Mr. SICKLES. Put in "by mutual consent," and it will do.

Mr. CLAY. Was not the gentleman one of the committee which reported this resolution, and why did he not suggest it there? And let me just here ask my honorable friend a question, if it be a proper one. My impression is, that in committee the gentleman was in favor of the resolution, though not of the preamble.

The SPEAKER. It is not in order to refer to what occurred in committee.

Mr. CLAY. If that be so, I will withdraw my question.

Mr. SICKLES. I will make a response which will not violate the rule. I will say to my friend that I was not present in the committee when the resolution was adopted.

Mr. CLAY. That does not answer the question. Well, sir, we have got to this state. This resolution has been reported. It is in direct conformity with the opinion of the President as contained in his annual message.

But, says the gentleman, there may have been negotiations going on at this time, which, if we were to adopt such a resolution as this—merely expressive of our opinion, not abrogating or intending to abrogate this treaty, and not looking that way, except so far as the treaty-making power is concerned—these negotiations might, perhaps, be embarrassed by this act on our part. How are they to be embarrassed? If the representatives of Great Britain here—either one of her two representatives here—were to have been embarrassed, or if the British Ministry at home, in its relations with our Minister there, were to be embarrassed by such an expression of opinion, it does appear to me that the negotiations should be far more embarrassed by the expression of opinion contained in the annual message of his Excellency the President of the United States. If the negotiations were to have been embarrassed by such a thing as we propose to do here—the passage of a simple resolution directly reiterating what the President himself has said—the person who first embarrassed the negotiations is the President himself, and not we.

Sir, there is no embarrassment about it. I believe that this resolution expresses only the sense of the country. I believe that even those gentlemen who are unwilling to see slavery extended to Central America, or anywhere else where it is not now, and those gentlemen who desire that, if at some future day it may be necessary for us, we may require more territory in the South, either with or without slaves—I believe that all these parties, in opinion, or a vast majority of them, will agree with me, that it is against the policy of the country to have such an entangling alliance—an alliance without mutuality and without benefit to us, which, while England has got all, requires us to tie our hands and take none. I believe that the sense of this whole country is opposed to any such doctrine.

But my friend says that the passage of the resolution would be the initiation of a war-policy. Did he not tell us at one moment, that Great Britain wanted this treaty to be abrogated, as it would leave her where she stood with her possessions as she now claims them? Granted that it would leave her where she stood, with her possessions as she claims them; she would still be claiming them against our protest. We believe she has no right to these possessions, and she would not be claiming them, as she now pretends to claim them, under a treaty made with us, and which we are prevented from violating in the least degree, so long as it stands a compact between the two countries. But when this treaty is abrogated, we can take up the subject anew, and can make a new treaty embodying what we believe to have been the intent and purport of that treaty; our hands would be untied; and if we could get no such treaty—if England would refuse to be just to us, if England wished to play the same game on this continent as she has played on other continents, taking the lion's share always, and saying to the rest of the world "stand back, you shall have none;" if she pretends to adopt such a policy as that, for this our America, I for one will say that the time for war has come, and my voice will be for it.

But, sir, the gentleman again says it is clear that England would not consent to abrogate this treaty. After having said that it was the very thing she wished, he goes on and says, in a subsequent part of his argument, that it is clear England will not consent to it. I understood my honorable friend to say so. If I am mistaken I will be happy to be corrected.

Mr. SICKLES. I said that undoubtedly the effect of the abrogation of the treaty, by our act alone, would be to facilitate the accomplishment of England's policy, because it would leave her in possession of all she now claims, and that the only exception that she could take, an exception which she doubtless would take, is that the act on our part would be construed as a war measure; but that if we would assure her that we abrogated the treaty and there stopped, I had not the least doubt in the world she would be very glad of it.

Mr. CLAY. As I remarked before, if it be a war measure, then the President of the United States has initiated it, and not we; for we have but attempted to take his ideas, and to reiterate his language; and I, for one, am willing to stand up for the Administration, at least by an expression of opinion.

Mr. Speaker, I regret to have detained the House so long when I knew it was tired already; but while I did not wish to consume much time on the matter, I felt it my duty to my colleague, and to myself, entertaining the opinion that I do, of utter abhorrence to this Clayton-Bulwer treaty, that I should refer, as I have done, and as briefly as possible, to the sentiments that I entertain on the subject.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE demanded the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think there is hardly a quorum present, and if the gentleman will withdraw his motion, I should like to submit a few remarks.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I should like to do so very much; but there are a great many here who wish to speak.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not desire to make a speech.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. Will the Chair state in what condition the resolution will be, if the House now adjourns?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution will come up after the special order of to-morrow or next day is disposed of, the first business in order the next morning.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to inquire whether, if the House adjourns now, the resolution does not go to the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. The order made on Monday, placed the resolution before the House in a condition different from what it would have occupied had it been taken up in the regular manner. The only reason why it does not take precedence of the special order to-morrow is, because the special order for to-morrow was made before this resolution was placed in the condition of a special order.

Mr. LETCHER. Then let me understand this matter. This resolution will come up after the special orders are all through until it is finally disposed of?

THE SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. QUITMAN's motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes to five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Interior, made in conformity to law, upon claims for depredations by Indians in the Territory of New Mexico; which, on motion of Mr. MASON, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, copies of Major William H. Bell's reports on Butterfield's priming apparatus; which, on motion of Mr. CAMERON, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia; and a motion by him to print was referred to the Committee on Printing.

LIME POINT, IN CALIFORNIA.

The VICE PRESIDENT also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, relative to the purchase of Lime Point, in California, for military purposes; which was read:

WAR DEPARTMENT, WASHINGTON, May 11, 1858.

SIR: In answer to the resolution adopted by the Senate on the 3d instant, asking "What contracts, if any, have been entered into by the Department for the purchase of Lime Point, in California, for military purposes?" I have the honor to transmit, herewith, a letter from P. Della Torre, Esq., United States attorney for the northern district of California; which contains the only evidence of a contract for the purchase of Lime Point within the knowledge of this Department.

The abstract of title and accompanying papers, inclosed by Mr. Della Torre, were referred to the Attorney General for his opinion as to their sufficiency to convey a title to the United States. The opinion of that officer, that the papers did not convey a perfect title, has, with the papers, been returned to Mr. Della Torre.

The distance of Lime Point from the seat of Government, and the difficulty of obtaining correct information on the subject, and of conferring with parties in California, induced me to intrust the negotiation to the skill and fidelity of Mr. Della Torre, and I am gratified to say that his conduct merits the approbation of the Department.

As soon as the papers relating to this transaction, which have been sent to California, shall be received, they will be transmitted for the use of the Senate.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN B. FLOYD,

Secretary of War.

Hon. J. C. BRECKINRIDGE, President of the Senate.

Mr. BRODERICK. I move that the communication be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to hear the other paper read.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY'S OFFICE,
SAN FRANCISCO, February 19, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of January 19, informing me that you were instructed by the honorable Secretary of War to request me to conclude the purchase for the United States of the tract of land on the north side of the entrance to the Bay of San Francisco, for which I have been negotiating under instructions from the War Department, at the lowest price at which it can be obtained, not exceeding that demanded by the reputed owner, Mr. S. R. Throckmorton, namely, $200,000.

In compliance with that instruction, I have concluded the purchase at the sum named, namely, $200,000.

In my many interviews with Mr. Throckmorton during a negotiation extending over several months, he has never deviated from his original terms, nor exhibited the slightest disposition to do so. Those terms were a sale of the tract at the price named, as I reported to the honorable Secretary of War, under date of July 20. He would listen to no other proposition than one having for its basis the price which he asked. He declined to sell, at any abatement of price, that portion which I was instructed, in the first instance, to treat for. He was willing to convey any portion which the United States might select; but for part or whole, the price was the same. Of course I have concluded the purchase for the whole tract offered, as shown by the sketch sent me in the Department's letter of 2d June last. I do not know the number of acres contained in it—that can be ascertained only by survey.

I inclose a brief abstract of title and accompanying papers, which I presume the Department will refer to the Attorney General.

There are outstanding incumbrances, which, of course, must be cleared off before the purchase is complete. For the present, I would beg to suggest that the final settlement should take place in the recorder's office of Marion county, in which the land lies. I propose this, as the county seat is at some little distance from this place, and not of very easy access. Any certificate of freedom from incumbrances sent to Washington would be two months behindhand by the time an answer could be received here. I would, therefore, propose that the disbursing officer who is to pay over the money, or honor the Government draft, should be instructed to do so only on my report to him that, at a certain time, there was no incumbrance of record in the proper office. This report I will consent to make only in the recorder's office, at the very moment of the final delivery of the title, and its deposit by me with the proper officer for the purpose of registry.

The heavy amount involved in the purchase of this site for a permanent first-class fortification, upon which such great outlay will be required, makes me necessarily determined that the title shall be as absolutely perfect as human precaution can make it. Any other mode, however, decided on by the Department or the Attorney General, for effecting the same purpose, will of course be pursued by me.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. DELLA TORRE,

United States Attorney.

H. G. WRIGHT, Captain of Engineers, in charge Engineer Department, Washington.

Mr. BRODERICK. This property which the Government is about to buy for $200,000 would not sell under the hammer to-morrow for $7,000. What the Government wants with twenty-three thousand acres of land for the purpose of erecting a fort, is a mystery to me. I hope that the communication will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, so that they can make an investigation at the next meeting of the committee.

Mr. GWIN. This is a question of very considerable importance to the State of California, and I wish to make a statement in regard to this whole transaction, so far as I know anything about it. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the quantity of the land. It is only about twenty-three hundred instead of twenty-three thousand acres. The owner of this land refuses to sell any portion of it except he sells the whole of it. It covers the entire entrance to the bay of San Francisco on the north, including a light-house site and a fortification site. I think the Senator from Mississippi, when he was Secretary of War, was aware of the fact that the Government has been trying for years to get this property at a less price. While he was Secretary of War an estimate was sent in to purchase the property at the price asked, because it was indispensable, but the owner refused to sell a smaller portion to the Government, because he insisted that that portion of the property which the Government desired was more desirable to him than the rest of it, and he has refused pertinaciously from the beginning up to the present time, so far as I know, to take anything less than the original price which, for years, he asked for this property for Government purposes. This appropriation was made during the last Congress, and it was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with a distinct understanding that this individual had refused to take less than the $200,000 asked for the purchase of this site: at the same time the chairman of the Military Committee, the Senator's predecessor, asked for an additional $100,000 for the purpose of commencing the work during the present fiscal year, but owing to the fact that it has been impossible to purchase the site, the owner of the property refusing to take less than $200,000, the work has not been commenced, and the appropriation has not been used. I believe that both the former and present Secretary of War have done everything they possibly could to get it at the lowest price, but it is private property, and the individual refuses to sell for less than the sum specified.

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer the reference which the Senator from California has made to myself. I think the point necessary for the entire protection of the entrance to the harbor of San Francisco, and I did try to obtain it. There was a difficulty as to the price which was asked; and the difficulty also, which the Senator mentioned, that the owner of the tract refused to sell the site which was required for military purposes unless the whole tract was purchased, a very small part of which only was necessary for military purposes. I have no recollection as to the amount which was asked, or the amount which was estimated. I do recollect that I sought to obtain so much as would be necessary for military purposes, at a much smaller amount than the owner of the tract claimed for the whole of it. I have no opinion, and express no judgment, as to the propriety of the amount to be paid when the land shall be purchased; but I am quite clear that the defense of San Francisco requires the possession of this point for military purposes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I was present at the time the appropriation was made, and heard, I believe, all that was said about it in the Senate. I had something to do with it, in connection with the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs of the last Congress—at least I paid some attention to it, because there was an appropriation for the erection of a fort in Maine in the same bill. I have no recollection—and if any such thing took place the debates will show it—that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs stated to the Senate any difficulty of this kind. An appropriation of $300,000 was recommended as necessary to commence the erection of this fortification.

Mr. GWIN. To purchase the site, and commence the work.

Mr. FESSENDEN. To purchase the site, and commence the work; but nothing was said about the price asked for the site. No exposition was made to the Senate, according to my recollection, and I think none at all was made of any difficulties in the way. I am very confident that had the Senate understood at that time that in order to commence this fortification it was necessary to give $200,000 for what the country ought to have for $5,000, they would have hesitated before making the appropriation. There can be no such absolute, pressing, immediate necessity as would compel Congress to submit to a gross imposition of this description from anybody; and for one I would not submit to it, unless in a case of absolute pressing necessity.

We have ample power under the Constitution to pass laws to condemn property needed for public use. There is no necessity for our submitting to exactions of this description in time of peace. If it is necessary absolutely to have a portion of this property sufficient to erect a fortification upon, we have the power and the time to pass the necessary law in order to get possession of it at a fair rate, and not submit to so gross and outrageous an imposition as this is said to be. Were I, with my views upon the subject, in the administration of any department of the Government, and had I the management of an appropriation of this description, I would suspend all action under it until I had communicated fully to Congress the objections and difficulties in the way. Why, sir, there is no end to it, if we are to submit to these things one after another, at any rate without being notified what the difficulty is. I am confident this matter was not known to Congress. I hope the Military Committee will take such action with reference to it as will direct the Secretary of War to suspend all further operations until something can be done to enable the Government to get possession of this property, if absolutely necessary at this time. This proceeding ought to call the attention of every member of the Senate to matters of this description when they see that such a gross imposition is attempted to be practiced, and yielded to on the part of the Government, under any circumstances.

Mr. BRODERICK. Mr. President—

Mr. GWIN. Will the Senator permit me a moment, in reply to the Senator from Maine? The statement I made in regard to the action of the Military Committee was not communicated to me by the late chairman of that committee, but I am informed that he has stated it, and it is on file in the Department, that this was a fact known to the committee at the time they acted upon it, that this site had to be purchased, and that the demand was for the sum I stated; and I think it would be ascertained (the Committee on Military Affairs of course will examine it) that the chairman so stated at the time. As to the use of the property, it is indispensable. There is no point in the United States at this juncture that is so absolutely necessary to be in the possession of the Government as the point indicated; because our system of fortifications never can be complete until we get that point. It is immediately on the opposite side of the Golden Gate, the entrance into the harbor of San Francisco; opposite which is one of the finest fortifications in the world, that we are now just completing; and it is indispensable to the defense of the harbor to have fortifications on this point. I am willing to adopt any course that Congress may indicate to get it at the least possible rate; but I do not think the mere consideration of what the amount may be ought to induce us to suspend for a series of years the fortifications of that harbor.

Mr. BRODERICK. My colleague, sir, is better informed in regard to this matter than I am. I had no knowledge of it until it was brought to my notice some three weeks since by a gentleman from California, who wrote to me in regard to it. I reiterate that the property—the whole ranch of twenty-three thousand acres—would not sell to-morrow for seven thousand dollars. I think my colleague is misinformed in regard to the quantity of land.

Mr. GWIN. The papers say that there are twenty-three hundred acres.

Mr. BRODERICK. Will the Secretary read that part of the papers again. Is it hundreds or thousands?

Mr. GWIN. Hundreds.

Mr. BRODERICK. I was informed that it was twenty-three thousand; but if it is twenty-three hundred it is much worse than I supposed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is stated in these papers that the amount of the land is not ascertained, and can only be ascertained by a survey.

Mr. BRODERICK. Well, sir, I was informed by a gentleman, whom I sent from the Senate Chamber to ascertain the fact, some three weeks since, that the quantity was twenty-three thousand acres. He was the clerk of the Committee on Military Affairs, Mr. Callan. I asked him if he was sure, and he said yes; but I believe he went again, and when he came back he repeated that the quantity was twenty-three thousand acres. Now, sir, this is an enormous fraud. I do not think it has a parallel in the history of legislation by Congress. I am very willing that the property should be taken by the Government, but I am not willing—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator pause for a moment? The Secretary will read that part of the letter of the district attorney which states the quantity of the land.

The Secretary read as follows:

"I do not know the number of acres contained in it. That can be ascertained only by survey."

Mr. BRODERICK. I hope, sir, that this subject will go to the committee, because it is a very important matter. If appropriations are made for the purpose of building fortifications in California, I hope that the money will not be squandered and given to a set of speculators. I hope the money will be used for the erection of a fort if one is required there. But, sir, to pay $200,000 for twenty-three hundred or twenty-three thousand acres of barren land shall never receive my sanction. I think it an outrage; and if there is any power in Congress to prevent it, I hope it will be exerted.

Mr. STUART. I believe this reference was made some time ago by the Senate. If it is disposed of, I wish to present a memorial.

The VICE PRESIDENT. These papers will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. STUART presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be laid out in farms or lots of limited size, for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented a memorial of the Agricultural Society of the State of Wisconsin, praying that a donation of land may be made to the State of Wisconsin, for the establishment and maintenance of a State agricultural college; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CRITTENDEN presented the petition of Joseph Vance, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. STUART, it was Ordered, That William Roddy have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the petition of Caleb Sherman, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 338) for the relief of Caleb Sherman. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 221) for the relief of Edward Ingersoll, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report on the subject; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas Lawrent, surviving partner of the firm of Benjamin and Thomas Lawrent, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 334) for the relief of Thomas Lawrent, surviving partner of the firm of Benjamin and Thomas Lawrent. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred papers in relation to the claim of Abner Merrill, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 335) for the relief of Abner Merrill, of the State of Maine. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the petition of Edward P. Vallum, reported a bill (S. No. 336) for the relief of Assistant Surgeon Edward P. Vallum, of the United States Army; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. HUNTER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859, reported it with amendments, and gave notice that he would ask the Senate to-morrow at twelve o'clock to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MASON. The Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the message of the President of the United States in answer to a resolution of the Senate calling for information relating to the seizure, in the valley of Litana, in Peru, by the authorities of Chili, of the proceeds of the cargo of the brig Macedonia, the property of citizens of the United States, have had it under consideration, and have instructed me to report the papers to the Senate with a recommendation that they be printed. They are voluminous in appearance, for they cover many years; and although the committee thought, at one time, that it might be practicable to do justice to the subject, and yet separate them and have a portion of them only printed, yet on reference to the Secretary of State, he advised, and gave strong and sufficient reasons why they should not be mutilated, but the whole should be printed. I ask, therefore, on the part of the committee, that they be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Does not that go to the Committee on Printing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No, sir. It is the report of a standing committee of the Senate; and therefore does not go to the Committee on Printing necessarily.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I move that the motion be referred to the Committee on Printing.

The motion to refer was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill received from the House of Representatives yesterday (H. R. No. 207) to prevent the inconvenient accumulation in the Post Office Department of postmasters' quarterly returns, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

LAND OFFICES.

Mr. PEARCE submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands be instructed to inquire into the propriety of abolishing the offices of register and receiver of public lands in those States where all the public lands have been sold, and providing for the custody of all the public land papers in such cases; also, into the expediency of diminishing the number of land offices in other States and Territories.

PRIVATE PROPERTY FOR PUBLIC USE.

Mr. BENJAMIN submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary be instructed to inquire into, and report on, the expediency of providing by law for the exercise of the power granted by the Constitution, of taking private property for public use, on allowing just compensation therefor; and that the said committee be instructed to report by bill or otherwise.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. STUART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 333) to establish an additional land district in the State of Minnesota; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HUNTER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 337) to amend the acts in relation to the Post Office Department; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRITTENDEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 339) granting a pension to Joseph Vance; which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 170) for extending the land laws east of the Cascade Mountains, in Oregon and Washington Territories.

A bill (No. 564) to create a land district in the Territory of New Mexico.

A bill to confirm land claims to certain towns in the Territory of New Mexico.

Also, that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 82) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds, or mixed-bloods, of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes," approved July 17, 1854, with an amendment.

ST. MARY'S RIVER.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to call up the joint resolution S. No. 31, and ask that it be acted upon immediately.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the resolution (S. No. 31) authorizing the Secretary of War to expend the appropriation made July 8, 1856, upon such channel of the St. Mary's river as he may select.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NIGHT SIGNALS ON SAILING VESSELS.

Mr. STUART. I ask the indulgence of the Senate to take up and act upon a bill of great interest and importance to business on the lakes, in regard to night signals on vessels. There will be no discussion upon the subject, I presume. The bill was very carefully prepared by the Committee on Commerce. It is the bill S. No. 84.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 84) to provide for the better regulation of night signals on board of sail vessels navigating the northwestern lakes and their tributaries, and for other purposes.

Mr. STUART. Unless some Senator desires the full reading of the bill, I think it is not necessary. It is simply a bill making regulations for carrying, and the positions of night signals. It is unnecessary to read it at length. I have some formal amendments which I desire to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection the reading will be dispensed with.

Mr. STUART. In lines eight and nine, I propose to strike out the words, "the first day of April, anno Domini 1858," and insert, "the passage of this act." This relates to the time at which the act shall go into operation.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. In line fifteen, of section two, between the words, "wind" and "large," I move to insert the word, "or." That is a mere verbal amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. Between the words "large" and "at anchor," in the same line, I move to insert the words, "a white light when."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STUART. At the end of the sixteenth line, after the words, "white light," I move to insert the words, "in the fore rigging."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will call the attention of the Senator to the fifteenth and sixteenth lines. I ask the Secretary to read these two lines now as amended, I do not exactly understand them.

The Secretary read the lines, as amended, as follows:

"When sailing before the wind or large, a white light; when at anchor, or in tow, a white light in the fore rigging."

Mr. BENJAMIN. It appears to me to be confused. I do not understand it.

Mr. STUART. I am not much of a nautical man myself, but this has been explained to me by a gentleman who is. As the bill was reported it read: "When sailing 'before the wind,' 'large,' 'at anchor,' or 'in tow,' a white light." Now it reads: "When sailing before the wind or large a white light when at anchor, or in tow a white light in the fore rigging."

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suppose the meaning is this: "When sailing before the wind or large a white light."

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir.

Mr. BENJAMIN. "When at anchor or in tow a white light in the fore rigging."

Mr. STUART. That is it. That is the way it does read now, only the punctuation needs changing. The word "when" in the fifteenth line before the word "at" is the commencement of a sentence—"When at anchor or in tow a white light in the fore rigging." The language is right, only there should be a period at the end of the fifteenth line as it now stands after the words "white light."

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection that modification will be made.

Mr. POLK. If I understand the Senator, when before the wind or at large, the white light may be at any other place than in the fore rigging.

Mr. STUART. Yes, sir. These are the only amendments I have to offer.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The attention of the Chair is called to a small amendment reported by the committee, which has not been acted upon. It is in section one, line eleven, to strike out the words, "ninth district," and insert the words, "district in which said vessel is enrolled or registered."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will move, as a further amendment, to strike out from line ninety-six to one hundred and ten. Those lines contain the construction of the law relative to collisions. The rules, as laid down, are the correct admiralty rules; but I do not think we ought to put a set of admiralty rules into a bill providing for the navigation of vessels on the northern lakes. I think they had better be left to the general law.

Mr. STUART. I have no objection to that. The Senator is undoubtedly correct. The law is properly stated here governing cases of this character, but I have no objection to its being stricken out.

The amendment was agreed to; and therefore the following was stricken out:

"Construction of the law relative to collisions of vessels.

"First. Loss or damage arising from a collision of two vessels without blame being imputable to either party. The misfortune must be borne by the party on whom it happens to light.

"Second. Loss or damage arising from collision when both parties are to blame. The loss may be apportioned between them.

"Third. Loss or damage arising from collision where it happens by the misconduct of the suffering party. The sufferer in such cases must bear his own burden.

"Fourth. Loss or damage arising from collision where it is the fault of the vessel that ran 'foul of' the other. In such cases the injured party will be entitled to an entire compensation from the other who 'ran him down.'"

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Secretary, announcing that the President had approved and signed, on the 11th instant, the following acts and resolutions:

An act for the admission of the State of Minnesota into the Union;

An act to enlarge the Detroit and Saginaw land districts, in Michigan;

An act amendatory of an act entitled "An act to establish two additional land districts in the Territory of Minnesota," approved July 8, 1856;

A resolution to extend for a further term the provisions of the joint resolution, approved March 10, 1853, in relation to certain dropped and retired officers of the Navy;

A resolution authorizing suitable acknowledgments to be made by the President to the British naval authorities at Jamaica for the relief extended to the officers and crew of the United States ship Susquehanna, disabled by yellow fever;

An act for the relief of the Hungarian settlers upon certain tracts of land in Iowa, hitherto reserved from sale by order of the President, dated January 22, 1855;

An act to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to sell the old custom-house and site in Bath, Maine, and for other purposes;

An act to amend the act entitled "An act to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the State of California," passed March 3, 1851; and

A resolution to extend the operation of the act approved January 16, 1857, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to promote the efficiency of the Navy.'"

SAN FRANCISCO POST OFFICE.

Mr. BRODERICK. I move to take up from the table the resolutions of inquiry I introduced on Monday, in regard to the charges against the San Francisco postmaster. They are resolutions to which the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. Brown] objected at the time.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolutions:

Whereas, there has been charged to the Government up to date recently, the sum of $18,600 per annum for the rent of the building occupied as a post office at San Francisco; and whereas, large sums of money have been realized from the rent of the lobby of said post office, which sums, it is generally reported, amounted to some seven thousand dollars per annum; and whereas, postmasters are required by law to make return, under oath, of all sums by them collected; and are prohibited from retaining, in the aggregate, more than $1,000 per year, "including salary, commissions, boxes, and all other fees, perquisites, and emoluments of any name or character whatsoever:"

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to inform the Senate whether any sums, and if so, what sums have been returned by the postmaster of San Francisco, as rents received for the use of the post office lobby, from July 1st, 1854, to December 31, 1857.

And whereas, there was placed on the files of the Post Office Department, in April, 1857, specific charges, duly sworn to, of malfeasance in office, of neglect of official duty, and of violations not only of the laws, but also of the regulations of the Post Office Department, on the part of the postmaster at San Francisco—which said charges are substantiated by the sworn testimony of some thirty or forty witnesses—a copy of the leading features of which testimony was also placed on file at the same time; and whereas, in February last, other evidence, duly sworn to—charging the San Francisco postmaster with other acts of malfeasance in office—was placed upon the files of the Post Office Department; and whereas, the law, which is mandatory, says: "The Postmaster General shall prosecute offenses against the Post Office establishment:" Therefore,

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be directed to furnish the Senate with a statement showing the nature of the charges preferred against the postmaster of San Francisco, and the specific sections of the law which it is alleged he has violated, and showing also what action, if any, has been taken in regard to said charges; and in case no action has been taken, that the Postmaster General inform the Senate why the law has not been complied with, and why prosecution has not been made.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. YULEE arose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is the duty of the Chair at this time to call up the special order, the hour for its consideration having arrived. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, however, to continue the consideration of these resolutions, it can be done by a vote of the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I hope we shall proceed to the consideration of the unfinished business of yesterday. I presume, from the demonstrations already made, that these resolutions will not pass without some debate, and some motion to amend in some particulars; and if so, I do not know what time it will take; and hence I trust the Senator will not press his motion now. He can bring it up to-morrow morning.

Mr. BRODERICK. I care very little what disposition the Senate makes of these resolutions. I should like the Postmaster General to answer the resolutions, but if it is the pleasure of the Senate to dispose of them by keeping them on the table this session, I have no objection to make.

Mr. YULEE. One word.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before the Senator proceeds, the Chair must, at this time, under the rule, call up the special order, which, if it is the pleasure of the Senate to proceed with these resolutions, they must postpone for that purpose.

Mr. YULEE. With the permission of the Senate, I desire to say, simply for the information of the Senator from California, that there is no disposition whatever in any quarter to oppose a call for any information which can be useful to the Senate; but there are portions of his resolutions which I shall be obliged to move to strike out. I have every disposition to facilitate every inquiry on his part for such information as he may think useful, but a different form to his resolutions would, I think, be advisable and proper, and I shall be obliged to suggest that, if his resolutions be now pressed, I think it very probable we can reform them.

Mr. BRODERICK. If the resolutions can be considered to-morrow morning, I have no objection to let them go over at this time, and not interfere with the regular business.

The resolutions were accordingly postponed.

COMMODORE PAULDING.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first special order this morning, is the joint resolution for the presentation of a medal to Commodore Hiram Paulding.

Mr. FOOT. Let that be suspended for the present.

FISHING BOUNTIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If it be the pleasure of the Senate, the Chair will call up the next special order, which is the bill (S. No. 10) repealing all laws, or parts of laws, allowing bounties to vessels employed in the bank or other cod fisheries, which is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole; the pending question being on the amendment offered by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. Hamlin,] to strike out "1859," and insert "1865."

Mr. SIMMONS. Yesterday, when this bill was laid aside, I desired to say a word, as I perceived that in the printed report of the remarks I made the day before there was some mistake. I stated in a few words what the effect would have been of an outlay of thirty-five dollars in 1812 if the money had been invested in four months' paper at two and a half per cent. a month, the ruling rate; and that some time in the year 1861 it would amount to $330,000,000, which, at thirty per cent., would yield an annual sum equal to the interest of the national debt of England, which, the last time I read the accounts of the English exchequer, was about twenty-two million pounds sterling, per annum—say one hundred million dollars. I see by the report of the speech, that where I said that was as much as the English nation could pay with a population of two hundred million, it was reported as two hundred million dollars. I want that to be corrected, because, as I understand it, the English flag is the acknowledged banner of about two hundred million people; and I stated that if they had that interest to pay to any other than their own citizens it would bankrupt them. This was said in reference to what the Senator from Alabama stated as to the fishing business yielding a profit of about thirty per cent. per annum.

While I am up, I want to have read from the Secretary's table a quotation from the speech of the Senator from Alabama that I adverted to in my remarks, and in which he said I was mistaken about the bounties paid by the English and French Governments. I want to correct that too.

The Secretary read the following extract from Mr. CLAY's speech, delivered on the 4th instant:

"Mr. President, according to the experience of England, of France, and of Holland, such bounties are wholly inexpedient. They have endeavored, by a system of bounties, to build up their herring and whale fisheries, and they have signally failed. But I need not go abroad to prove the inexpediency of these bounties. Let any Senator compare the increase of the whale and herring fisheries with the cod fisheries, and he will say at once that these bounties have not redounded to the advantage of the cod fisheries. Our whale fishermen, without any bounty whatever from the Government, though competing with the fishermen of the greatest commercial countries of Europe—though competing with the fishermen of England, of Holland, and of France, who were paid large premiums and large bounties on this interest, have outstripped them all. A few fishing towns in New England, without bounty, without Government patronage or aid, have more tonnage and seamen in the whale fishery than England, with all the bounties and premiums and remissions of duties extended to her whale fishermen through a series of years."

Mr. SIMMONS. Having read that paragraph in the Senator's speech, I undertook to illustrate that the bounties to the cod fishermen, as the nursery of these seamen, had resulted thus beneficially against a competition where bounties prevailed. The Senator from Alabama immediately corrected me, and said that these bounties on the part of England had been repealed some twenty-eight years ago, and that I was mistaken. I have had this read merely to show that it is a fair inference, from his argument, that our whale fishery has been carried on and succeeded so that it has outstripped the English in spite of their bounties. The Senator corrected me, and said that they had given no bounties for the last twenty-eight years; since 1830. Am I not correct?

Mr. CLAY. That is my recollection.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think it is a fair inference, from what I have read from the Senator's speech, that he argued that our whalers had succeeded against the English whale fishermen, receiving a bounty from their Government. Now, he says that for the last twenty-eight years England has paid no bounty to any branch of her fisheries. The Senator alluded to the large increase in our whaling tonnage; and that increase has been going on during the last twenty-eight years. His argument was, that without having a bounty, our fishermen have outstripped those of England after she had repealed her bounties. But I ask if it is not fair to suppose that the bounties of our cod fishermen have had something to do with these successes. That is the way I should read it, after he has corrected his own speech. The speech, as I understood it, gave the idea that they were giving bounties all the time. I should now conclude that England, since she has repealed the bounties, either from that cause or some other, has suffered us to outstrip her altogether in this department of industry. Whether that is the cause or not, I do not pretend to say.

Mr. CLAY. In reply to the Senator, I have simply to state that while the bounty system of England existed we beat her in the whale fishery. If he will go back and investigate this subject, as I have done, he will find that, even shortly after our Revolution, or perhaps pending the Revolution, Mr. Burke, in a speech in the British Parliament, alluded to the fact that a few fishing towns on the coast of New England were excelling the English whale fishery, with all the bounties conferred on them. If it were necessary to substantiate this assertion I could produce proof, and show that, even at so early a day as that, he said we were excelling them in the whale fishery, and we have been continuously and progressively doing it ever since. I stated that the English bounties were repealed in 1830. I may not be correct as to the exact time; but I know it has been some time since.

Mr. SIMMONS. All I ask is, that the Senator shall not use that as an argument both ways; he may take either horn. If he says we have beaten them after they repealed the bounties—

Mr. CLAY. And before too.

Mr. SIMMONS. Did we not have bounties when we were British colonies?

Mr. CLAY. Not on the whale fishery—never.

Mr. SIMMONS. But we have had on the cod fishery ever since we have been a Government.

Mr. CLAY. Ah!

Mr. WILSON. I shall not, Mr. President, detain the Senate with an elaborate argument in opposition to this proposition, presented with so much zeal by the Senator from Alabama. I am content to rest the case, and I am sure the people of my State are content to rest the case upon the elaborate and exhaustive speech of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] a member of the committee that reported back the bill introduced by the Senator from Alabama. Indeed, sir, I speak upon this bill with no little reluctance, for it is a question in which the people I represent have a large interest, a pecuniary interest; and I am not insensible to the fact that prejudices exist in the Senate and the country against what is regarded as a system of bounties by the Government. I do not stand here to ask special favors for any portion of the people I represent. The people of Massachusetts are not beggars, and I am not the man to beg for them if they were beggars. I do not look upon this bounty upon the cod fisheries, which the Senator from Alabama now proposes to repeal, in the light of a gratuity. I look upon it as a part of what has been and now is the settled policy of the country, to promote the commercial and naval power of the nation. I repeat here, sir, what the Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] said, when he opened the debate on this question, that if it is not for the interest of the Government of the United States, for the commerce of the United States, and for the commercial and naval marine of the United States to continue this policy of bounties; if it is not for the general interest of the whole country to continue this system of bounties to the cod fisheries, then I say repeal these bounties at once.

The people I represent, sir, are largely engaged in the cod fisheries. I believe they have about half the vessels, half the number of persons, and about half the capital, employed in the cod fisheries of the whole country. These fisheries have always been to the people of Massachusetts a question of the deepest interest. Twenty-five years after the landing at Plymouth, the people of the colony engaged in the fisheries on the banks of Newfoundland—two hundred and thirteen years ago—and at the beginning of the seventeenth century, Massachusetts alone exported more than one hundred thousand quintals of fish, worth four hundred thousand dollars, of the products of her fisheries. In fact, at the opening of the Revolution, nearly half of the importations into the country were paid for by the fisheries of New England. Josiah Quincy—a statesman who is now occupying the years of a green old age in writing the life of his illustrious compeer, John Quincy Adams, and who has left on the records of the country speeches unsurpassed for power and eloquence, unless we except the speeches of Mr. Webster—says, in a speech made in 1808 on our foreign relations, that the policy of England concerning the fisheries tended to produce the Revolution. Mr. Adams was instructed, in September, 1779, “that the common right of fishing should in no case be given up;” and Elbridge Gerry, born in Marblehead, the great fishing town of Massachusetts at that period, submitted a resolution to Congress concerning the terms of peace; that the fisheries, under no circumstances, were to be surrendered up; and history tells us of the struggles of John Adams, in 1782 and 1783, to secure to the country the right to the fisheries. We all know that at the treaty of 1814, there was a contest between this Government and England to secure the rights of the fisheries at that day; and that the son of John Adams then maintained the doctrines his father had maintained in 1783. In 1814, when John Quincy Adams was contending at Ghent for the rights of the fisheries, that old patriot, John Adams, filled with the fires of the Revolution, wrote to Mr. Madison that “I would continue this war forever rather than surrender one acre of our territory, one iota of the fisheries, as established by the third article of the treaty of 1783, or one sailor impressed from any merchant ship.”

Senators tell us now that these bounties were not given to encourage the commercial interests and the interests of navigation by fostering seamen, but that they were given in consideration of the duties on salt and other articles upon which duties were paid. Exempting the fishermen from the burdens imposed upon articles used in their pursuits, was a mode adopted to encourage the fisheries. In the First Congress Fisher Ames, in advocating the policy of encouraging the fisheries, declared that,

“They form a nursery for seamen, and this will be the source from which we are to derive our maritime importance.”

Mr. Gerry, at or near the same period, referring to the importance of the fisheries and the necessity of their being protected and encouraged by the Government, said:

“I will not reiterate the arguments respecting the fishery. It is well known to be the best nursery for seamen.”

This opinion was uttered by a man as well qualified to pronounce an opinion entitled to the consideration of statesmen as any man who ever occupied a seat in the national councils.

In 1790, Washington, in his speech to Congress, remarked that “our fisheries and the transportation of our own produce offer us abundant means for guarding ourselves against” the evil of depending upon foreign vessels. The Senate waited upon the President and Vice President with an address, in which they say: “The navigation and the fisheries of the United States are objects too interesting not to inspire a disposition to promote them by all the means which shall appear to us consistent with their natural progress and permanent prosperity;” and in the report to which Senators have referred of Mr. Jefferson, made in 1791, he says that the fisheries, in their very nature, are so poor that they cannot prosper without the encouragement of the Government. He says:

“To cultivate peace, maintain commerce and navigation and all other lawful enterprises, to foster our fisheries as a nursery of navigation—these, fellow-citizens, are the landmarks by which we are to guide ourselves in all our proceedings. By continuing to make these the rules of our action, we shall endeavor to our countrymen the true principles of the Constitution.”

To foster our fisheries as a nursery of navigation, Mr. Jefferson told us in 1791, was among the land-marks of the Government of the United States. President Jefferson, in his message to Congress in 1802, spoke of fostering our fisheries as nurseries of navigation, and for the nurture of man.

These were the opinions of the statesmen who founded this policy. Senators may deny the policy of continuing this protection in order to encourage the fisheries as a nursery for seamen; but it is vain for them to deny the historical fact that Ames and Gerry and Adams and Washington and Jefferson, the men who founded this policy, based it substantially upon the idea that these fisheries would be the nurseries of seamen; that it would be for the advantage of the commerce of the country, and the naval power of the country.

I am aware that the fisheries are not so important as they were when this policy was commenced. The Senator from Alabama has shown in his speech that at the time of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States the fisheries were very important; that the exports of the fisheries were a large portion of the exports of the country; that the tonnage of fisheries at that time was a large part of the entire tonnage of the United States. Well, sir, these fisheries, although they have increased, have not increased in proportion to the development of the tonnage, and the expansion of the commerce of the country, and the Senator from Alabama is therefore right in assuming that they are not relatively so important as they were at the organization of the Government. But, Mr. President, they are important after all. They are important, in my judgment, to the commerce of the country, and to the naval power of the country. That they have been, and now are, a nursery for seamen, no intelligent man here or elsewhere can deny. From Cape Cod and Cape Ann, the home of the cod fisheries of Massachusetts, and from the coasts of Maine, go forth into the commercial marine of the country men who have honored the navigation of the country by their skill and seamanship. Lorenzo Sabine, of Massachusetts, a gentleman of the highest intelligence, in his report to Secretary Corwin, in 1852, says:

“The transfer to other and more profitable and ambitious commands is still going on. The mercantile men of the commercial emporium of the North, and the packet-ships of the commercial emporium of the Union, rank deservedly high; but were their counting-rooms and quarter-decks to yield up all, or even half, of those whose birth-places were on the two capes of Massachusetts, and whose earliest adventures were made in fishing-craft, they would lose many high and honored names. So, too, were either to cease recruiting from the same sources, the humble employment of which I am speaking would speedily become more prosperous, in public estimation more respectable, and of consequence be considered more worthy of the care and protection of our rulers.”

I know it is said here that these men engaged in the fisheries are not good sailors. The Senator from Florida [Mr. MALLORE] told us that they were gentlemen; that they only went to sea a portion of the year; and he, I thought, drew an unfavorable comparison between these fishermen who go out from Cape Ann and Cape Cod in Massachusetts, and who go out from the State of Maine down to the Bay of Chaleurs, down to the George's banks, and to the Newfoundland banks—that these men, as sailors, could not compare with the sailors who come to this country from the northern portions of Europe, who “grow fat,” he tells us, “on kicks and cuffs.”

Mr. President, there is nothing on which to base this. There is a complaint in the Navy of the United States that so many of the seamen are foreign born. There is a complaint throughout the whole commercial marine of the country that so many of our seamen are foreign born; in fact, there is a complaint throughout the country that we have in the service of the country so few native-born American seamen. If these foreign seamen are better than American seamen, why is this complaint? No, sir, the men who fought your ships in the war of the Revolution and the war of 1812 were born in the United States. They were mostly persons who grew up in the sections where these fisheries are carried on. The crew that manned the Constitution, which won so much honor for the country, came mostly from the county of Essex, in my State. It was not the live oaks in the Constitution, but it was the brave hearts on board the Constitution, that won those honors for the country. The men who early engage in these cod fisheries, who are trained in the fisheries, are superior, as men and as sailors, to the men who come to this country from northern Europe, who are in the commercial or naval marine of the country; superior to any class of sailors in the United States, except the class of men who grow up in these very sections of the country, who begin their career in the cod or mackerel or whale fisheries.

The noble deeds of the fishermen of Massachusetts, on the ocean and the land, in the war of the Revolution and in the war of 1812, blazon the brightest pages of the history of the Republic. The town of Marblehead, the great fishing town of Massachusetts at the opening of the Revolution, raised out of her thirteen hundred polls, an entire regiment of as brave men as ever faced the foes of the country. The Senator from Maine [Mr. HAMLIN] quoted the noble tribute of General Knox, who saw them as they led the army across the Delaware at Trenton, in that cold December night, in 1776. Washington Irving, in his Life of Washington, has recorded on his imperishable pages the service of the heroic fishermen of Marblehead, in the retreat from Long Island, after the disastrous battle of Brooklyn Heights, and in the crossing of the Delaware to assail the British army encamped at Trenton.

Of these men at Long Island, Irving says:

"With Mifflin came also Colonel Glover's Massachusetts regiment, composed chiefly of Marblehead fishermen and sailors, hardy, adroit, and weather-proof; trimly clad in blue jackets and trousers. The detachment numbered, in the whole, about thirteen hundred men, all fresh and full of spirits. Every eye brightened as they marched briskly along the line with alert step and cheery aspect."

The boats were placed under their charge, and the army came across the river in safety, "thanks," says Irving, "to the aid of Glover's Marblehead men." Of the conduct of these brave men at the crossing of the Delaware under the eye of Washington, Irving speaks in these words:

"Boats being in readiness, the troops began to cross about sunset. The weather was intensely cold; the wind was high; the current strong, and the river full of floating ice. Colonel Glover, with his amphibious regiment of Marblehead fishermen, was in the advance; the same who had navigated the army across the Sound, in its retreat from Brooklyn, on Long Island, to New York. They were men accustomed to battle with the elements; yet, with all their skill and experience, the crossing was difficult and perilous."

Mr. Sabine, in his report to Secretary Corwin, leaves his testimony to the services of the fishermen. He says:

"We regard it as strictly true to say that, without our fishermen, we could hardly have manned a frigate, or captured one, during the war of 1812. Marblehead alone furnished more men for the service than some whole States. At the close of the Revolution, there were in that town more than thirteen hundred widows and fatherless children; in 1815, more than five hundred of her citizens were released from a single British prison. The men of Marblehead, and of other places engaged in the same pursuits, were in almost every national or private armed ship that bore our flag. We are certain that they composed a large part of the crew of 'Old Ironsides,' in her two earliest victories; and we believe that the number was not much diminished when that favorite ship passed into the hands of Stewart and won her last battle."

I want the Senator from Alabama to understand that the men whom he strikes at by this proposition, are at least a class of population equal to any we have in our section of the country. I can say that in my own State, the people residing upon Cape Ann and Cape Cod, amounting to about fifty-five thousand inhabitants, in point of purity of personal character are unsurpassed by the population of any other section. It was but yesterday that I read in a paper from my State that the supreme court opened its term last week, in the county of Barnstable, that there was not in that county of forty thousand inhabitants a single case to go to a jury, and the court remained in session only six hours. That county of Barnstable seldom has a criminal case in court—hardly ever has a criminal in jail, and in point of morals surpasses any portion of the State in which I live.

Mr. WADE. That is a poor argument to address to the lawyers of this Senate. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILSON. Cape Ann, the towns of Gloucester and Rockport, with a population of thirteen thousand, are not more favorable to the lawyers than Cape Cod. In these towns where they have more than three hundred fishing vessels, and more than three thousand fishermen, violations of law are rare indeed. More crimes are committed in this city in one day, than have been committed on Cape Ann and Cape Cod, the homes of these cod fishermen, during the past quarter of a century. This people, law-abiding in peace, patriotic and brave in war, you now strike at by this uncalled for measure.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. PUGH] yesterday spoke of "robbing" the people of Ohio; "robbing" the men who cultivate her soil, and who live and fish on the banks of Lake Erie, to pay these "aristocratic" fishermen who go down into the fogs on the shores of the British possessions. Now, Mr. President, the people of Massachusetts pay annually into the Treasury of the United States, for the service of your Post Office, $178,000 more than their own expenses. That is their contribution; and the people whom the Senator represents, last year failed to pay their own expenses by $260,000.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WILSON. I have a list, made out by a colleague of mine, Mr. Davis, a gentleman who represents the fishermen of Cape Ann and Marblehead and Beverly and Salem, and I find by this list that the expenses of the Post Office Department in Ohio for last year were $750,862 39, and that the receipts were $490,323 78; making $260,538 61 deficiency.

Mr. PUGH. I can explain that. The expenses charged to the States are charged to the routes of travel carrying the mail across the States. The whole western and southern mail passes over the State of Ohio, and we are absolutely charged for the transportation of the mails of all the western States. That was stated in the report from the Post Office Department, from which these very figures come. The mails that go on the railroads across Ohio from New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, westward to Indiana and Illinois, and to all the cities and States which are supplied by the Mississippi river, are all set down to my State, because we happen to be the place through which all these routes pass.

Mr. WILSON. Well, Mr. President, this proposition of the Senator from Alabama is sustained in the Senate chiefly and mainly upon the ground that it is a local interest—that the people of the States of Massachusetts and Maine have the benefit of the system. Now, I desire to say to the Senator from Ohio, and to other Senators, that the people of Massachusetts and of Maine receive but little direct benefit in any way from your Government. I believe Massachusetts pays at least one tenth part of the revenues that support your Government. I believe New England pays more revenues than the whole fifteen southern States; and I think that the man who examines the articles upon which duties are raised, and who knows where those articles are consumed, and how they are consumed, will come to that conclusion. We do not regard your tariff laws, as they exist and as they are administered, of any special benefit to us; we do not regard them as protective laws, and I want Senators to understand this. Sir, we paid last year more than twelve million dollars on sugar duties—the duties on $43,000,000 of importations of sugar into this country. This is for the protection of a few hundred men down in the State of Louisiana; and of that amount Massachusetts paid more than one million dollars to protect a few hundred sugar planters in the State of Louisiana.

That is not all. We passed, two or three years ago, a resolution to send out a vessel to obtain the cane seed for these sugar planters of Louisiana, and we spent, I think, about fifty thousand dollars to furnish these planters with seed. We made no complaint of that act. I find by these returns that the postage expenses for Louisiana were $523,000 more than the receipts last year, and yet the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] joins with the Senator from Alabama in attacking this fishing-bounty policy, because it is local—confined to Maine and Massachusetts, mainly—when we of this country pay $12,000,000 to protect the sugar planters of his State; when we have generously voted to send out a ship, and spent $50,000 to procure seed for his sugar planters, and contributed out of the general funds of the country a half million of dollars to pay the postage, for the benefit of his people. I confess, sir, I did not expect to find the Senator from Louisiana in the ranks of the opponents to the fishing bounties.

I find that in the southern States, and in nearly all the western States, the people do not pay the expenses of their postage. We of Massachusetts always pay ours, and we contribute from one hundred and fifty to two hundred thousand dollars to the general fund of the Post Office. We of Massachusetts receive by this fishing bounty the enormous sum of $150,000, annually. It is a small affair, anyhow. It will injure us, but I do not believe it will crush our fisheries, or crush our people, to take it away. We do not depend on $150,000 bounty from this Government to live in Massachusetts. I believe it a wise policy to encourage the fisheries, that they are a nursery of good seamen; that from these fisheries are drawn men who go into the whale fisheries, and into the commercial marine of the country; and I believe this policy should be continued.

As a measure of economy, Mr. President, this repeal amounts to nothing. It is a petty affair as a measure of retrenchment. If Senators want to save money, I advise them to revise their collection districts, and to reduce the expenditures therein. By law we cannot spend more than two and a half millions in collecting the revenues on the Atlantic coast. You have increased the expenditures in five years, from Mr. Corwin's time, eight or nine hundred thousand dollars on your Atlantic coast. You have added about six hundred men to your collection force. You can reduce, if you choose to do it, the expenses of collecting the revenue a million and a half of dollars, and discharge one thousand men. It can be done, if Senators wish to curtail the expenditures of the Government. But, no, sir; when your Secretary asks to take off the limitation of two and a half million dollars, and tells us the expenditures will go up this year to four millions, no effort is made here to reduce the expenditures in the collection of the revenue of the Government. But, to save the petty sum of $300,000, you are to strike down a policy that early received the sanction of the framers of the Constitution, of the men who organized the Government, and of the eminent statesmen of the country, from 1789 to the present time.

Mr. PUGH. Before the Senator from Massachusetts takes his seat, I hope he will correct a mistake into which he fell. He says I used the expression that his constituents had robbed the people of Ohio. I was confident I had never used any such expression as that, in relation to any portion of the people of the United States; and I find, on looking at my remarks, as reported in the Globe, that there is no such expression in them. I have always felt it my duty to restrain any harsh language towards any portion of the people of the United States, and I hope the Senator will not represent me in that light to his constituents.

Mr. WILSON. I do not certainly wish to misrepresent the Senator, but I understood him to say, not that our people robbed them, but that the people there were robbed; and he referred to the fishermen upon the banks of Lake Erie as making contribution to these people, whom he designated as "aristocrats." I may have been mistaken, but I thought, at the time, that the Senator from Ohio used language hardly called for by the occasion. I know that that was the sentiment of some of those around me, who thought that the Senator was rather harsh in his strictures. I do not certainly wish to misrepresent him, but I think the Senator is very apt to speak with a little degree of harshness on some occasions, and I thought this was one of those occasions when the Senator seemed to speak with a great deal of feeling.

Mr. PUGH. I certainly did speak with some degree of feeling as to the subject; but to show the Senator how completely he is mistaken, let me read the paragraph to which he referred. After saying that I had very great respect for these people, as industrious and useful citizens, and stating what they did, I said:

"That is the sum total of their services; and you and I, sir, are asked to levy a tax on our constituents who till the soil, who engage in employments equally honorable and industrious—I am asked to impose a tax on the thousands of my constituents who live along Lake Erie, and catch fish on which no bounty is paid—for what?"

Nobody denies that a tax is levied on us for this purpose. If I had used any such expression as the Senator attributes to me, even in the heat of discussion, towards the constituents of the Senator from Massachusetts, or any other Senator on this floor, I should, on its being called to my notice, feel it my own duty, as a Senator of the United States, to withdraw the expression.

Mr. WILSON. I had not time to read the Senator's remarks, and I relied upon my own hearing, and the expressions made around me in regard to what he said. We may have been mistaken; at any rate, I withdraw the remark, for I certainly do not wish to misrepresent the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I do not rise, Mr. President, to detain the Senate by entering into a discussion of the question involved, at any length; but as I represent in part, one of the northwestern States, which, certainly can have no local interest in this question, I desire to state, in a single word, the reason for the vote which I feel called upon to give.

The State which I represent is somewhat interested in fisheries, the fisheries of the lakes, both Lake Superior and Lake Michigan; fisheries which receive no bounties at the hands of the Government. They stand on their own strength, and must stand or fall upon the laws of competition which govern the usual course of business. And that is an additional reason why I feel called upon to define my position and explain my vote on this question. I agree entirely with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. DAVIS] in the idea that the powers of this Government are simply those which are granted by the Constitution of the United States; that it is not a government of general and unlimited power, which can legislate upon all subjects, where it is not restrained by the Constitution, but that it can only legislate on those questions where power is expressly granted, or where it is necessary to carry out the power which is expressly granted. I have been brought up in the school of strict construction, and therefore, with me, upon this floor, the first question always is, whether there is a power in the Government to pass the law in question, whether the constitutional power is given? and I listened with interest to his remarks, knowing that he was reared in that school, and is a distinguished advocate of its doctrines. I listened to ascertain his views on the question, in the first instance, of the constitutional power of this Government to legislate upon this subject, and I understood from the purport of his remarks, that he conceded the constitutional power to pass laws of this character under that provision of the Constitution which declares that "the Congress shall have power to provide and maintain a navy;" and I did not understand the honorable Senator to question the constitutional power of Congress to maintain this policy. It was with him, therefore, a question of policy; and it is the same with me, a question of policy, and policy merely.

The first question which arises in my mind is this: whether it is a legitimate and proper means to be employed by the Government of the United States, for the purpose of providing and maintaining a navy? It cannot be defended upon any other ground. As a bounty, I should certainly be opposed to it; as a mere bounty, I cannot sustain it for a moment; and the question again recurs: is it a proper and legitimate means of providing and maintaining a navy for the United States? and that involves this other question, what constitutes the Navy of the United States, within the meaning of the Constitution and upon which we rely? Is it the armed ships belonging to the United States—vessels of war, only? These ships, armed by the Government, commanded by its officers, and manned by men in its employ, are undoubtedly within the meaning of the Constitution. But as I understand it, that is not the navy upon which we must rely in any great emergency. We all recollect the correspondence which took place when Governor Marcy was Secretary of State, and the convention of Plenipotentiaries of European Powers, assembled at Paris, proposed to abolish privateering; that a new provision should be introduced into the code of maritime law, by which privateering was not to be allowed by the law of nations: what was the reply of Governor Marcy, one of the giant men of this country? His reply was this, in substance: We are prepared to abolish privateering when you will abolish the taking of private property upon the high seas; confine your fighting upon the high seas to the war vessels of the nations engaged, and we will abolish privateering; but so long as private property upon the high seas is to be seized in naval warfare, the Government of the United States will never consent to abolish privateering.

Mr. President, I arrive, then, at this conclusion: that the Navy, upon which the Government of the United States must rely mainly in case of actual war with any great maritime Power, is to be composed of privateers—volunteers upon the sea. It is upon the volunteer naval forces of this country that we are to depend, in a great measure, in actual war upon the sea, as we have to rely, in the main, upon the volunteer forces upon the land.

I do not understand the question to be whether this is the very best mode of providing or maintaining a navy. The honorable Senator from Mississippi contended that there might be a better mode of encouraging a naval force upon the sea by giving direct bounties to the ships that would take apprentices on board. Perhaps the bounty which the honorable Senator would propose would be a good mode of encouraging, maintaining, or providing the means of maintaining, a volunteer naval force upon the high seas; but it does not follow, and I do not understand the honorable Senator from Mississippi, nor the honorable Senator from Florida—who is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs—to say that this is not a means, a legitimate means, of providing or maintaining a nursery for seamen. Now, having satisfied my own—

Mr. DAVIS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS. We agree every now and then upon our premises so nearly, that I have risen merely for the purpose of saying to the Senator that I did not concede that this was a proper and legitimate mode of maintaining a navy; but I did concede that if it were shown to be a proper and legitimate mode of maintaining a navy, then it was a mere question of policy, and the power was derivative from the grant in the Constitution to raise and maintain a navy. I did not think it a proper and legitimate mode. I do not think bounties upon any particular class of industry a proper mode; and here I find we are running again into the word bounty, which produced so much confusion in legislation, even in the time of our fathers, on this subject. Allowing an exemption from certain port charges on merchantmen, on the condition that they carry apprentices, is an inducement, or, if the Senator pleases, a bounty, though bounty is not the word I used or would use to express my own idea. The difference between us is that he claims this to be a legitimate and proper mode of maintaining a navy. I do not find it so. Then we meet on the ground that if he can show it to be a legitimate and proper mode, that this is the maintenance of a navy, I concede to him the power.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I may have misunderstood the honorable Senator in his remarks yesterday, and I have not yet had an opportunity of looking over the report of them.

Mr. DAVIS. I would hardly say that, because I spoke under circumstances of physical infirmity which, probably, rendered me less clear than I would have been otherwise. That is what I meant.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. President, a single word further, and I have done. I think, upon the whole, that it is a question of policy only, and a policy that has existed for a long time in the history of this Government—a policy adopted by our revolutionary fathers, which has been ever since maintained; and it being a question of policy, I defer, I confess, to the opinions of the great and wise men who have gone before us, and to the precedent which they have so firmly established; and I yield a more willing deference to it because in the war of 1812 the fishermen of Marblehead achieved the freedom of the seas. Were it an original question now for the first time presented, I might perhaps have greater difficulties in my mind than I do now; but it having been established so long and being a question not of constitutional power, as I conceive, but a question of good policy in the maintaining and the providing for a navy, I defer to their judgment and to the precedent which they have established.

I conclude by simply saying that the amount of bounties which are paid to these fishermen does not exceed, as I understand it, what it would cost to maintain a single war frigate. A single steam frigate of war, as I understand, costs about one thousand dollars per day while upon the ocean; and yet for this not very large amount of expenditure in the shape of bounties—not more than is necessary to maintain a single war vessel—in accordance with the policy of our fathers, we are rearing and maintaining, if not by the very best mode, at all events by a legitimate mode, a nursery for seamen, and American seamen, and a large number of seamen, say from ten to fifteen thousand. Sir, I do not regard it at all unfavorable that these seamen are not engaged in very long voyages. The very fact that they are engaged only for five or six months upon the sea, and then return home to their wives and children upon American soil, in my judgment instead of its making them poorer seamen in case of war, makes them the better seamen. They are attached to the soil. They have their wives and children and homes on the land. There are many of them, as the gentleman from Florida stated, gentlemen who are engaged in this business but a portion of their time. Some of them perhaps are men of substance, who are interested in the country, and for that reason make the very best kind of seamen in case of actual collision. I know it may be said it is unnecessary to have any bounties to encourage volunteer forces upon the land. That is very true. Our landsmen are brave enough. While they love peace, they are ready to fight an enemy when necessary, whenever he may appear, if you will only place them on terra firma. But ask the men who are brought up on land to volunteer to fight an enemy at sea, it is a very different affair. They are unaccustomed to the elements around them. The very element itself upon which they are to live takes away from them their energy and strength, and puts it out of their power to fight an enemy, even if they are able to take care of themselves.

One who is unaccustomed to the sea must live a new life before he is prepared to encounter its dangers and outride its storms in proper physical condition to meet an enemy. Believing that these bounties are a legitimate means of maintaining and encouraging a good school for seamen, I shall vote against their repeal.

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. President, the interest which my constituents have directly in this question, is certainly not large. Of the two thousand and eighty-eight vessels, which, by the last returns, were engaged in this trade, one hundred and thirty-four only belonged to the State of Connecticut. Of the fourteen thousand six hundred and sixteen men employed, but nine hundred and twenty-eight belonged to Connecticut. Indeed, sir, the whole question, so far as it affects the public Treasury, seems to me not large enough to have justified an attack upon this allowance at the present time; even if those who attack this policy, and who urge the repeal of the law sustaining it, are right in the grounds they assume. It seems to me that this is a very unfortunate time to commence an attack upon any branch of the industry of this country. During the last summer and fall, we are all aware that our country, and indeed, the whole civilized world to some extent, was affected by one of those revulsions which somehow and at various times come over commerce and business. The industry of the country is feeling that revulsion at the present time almost as severely as it has at any period whatever. It is the last of the interests that perhaps are affected by a revulsion of this character. Almost every branch of industry is now in an exceedingly depressed state. Multitudes of men skilled in their various pursuits and avocations, can find no employment. It is an evil, and a crying evil in the country, that there are hands willing to labor that are compelled to remain in idleness, and of course want is the consequence. At such a time it seems to me, I say, peculiarly unfortunate that the Congress of the United States should be asked to repeal any law which affords proper encouragement to any one branch of public industry.

The fishing business is certainly a legitimate business. It is, as King James remarked of it, an honest trade—the pursuit of the Apostles. It ought not to be discouraged; it surely ought to be encouraged. It is not, however, because the business is considered obnoxious; but it is because, as it is said, those engaged in it are deriving bounty from the Government, to which they are not entitled, that this attack is made. I repeat, sir, even if those who urge this bill are right in their claims, had it not better be put off until the paralysis which is over the industry of the country shall have been partially relieved? Is it wise statesmanship now to prevent men from going on in a business which, at the best, remunerates to a very small degree those engaged in it? Is it wise economy, for the sake of saving $300,000 to the public Treasury, to put in peril—for certainly we must regard it in that light—the business of the cod fishery? We may save this money; but if the business is thereby either destroyed or greatly impaired, will the country be the gainer? The condition of the public Treasury is urged as a reason why we should now act with economy. It is a reason no doubt; but shall we replenish the public Treasury by discouraging the industry of the country? On the other hand, Mr. President, if we are wise, shall we not do all that we can legally and constitutionally to encourage the industry of the country, in order that thereby we may replenish the public Treasury? How are we to replenish the Treasury but by encouraging the industry which lies at the foundation of all our prosperity? for it is the labor of the country that must finally bring us up from the depressed position in which we now find ourselves. It is nothing but labor that is to bring us back again to prosperity. Any legislation which serves to stimulate and to encourage that labor will serve to replenish the public Treasury; and any legislation which tends to diminish the amount of labor, to discourage any one branch of honest industry, tends to keep your Treasury as poor as it is, and, indeed, to make it poorer—to deplete it rather than to replenish it.

I am persuaded that the honorable Senator from Alabama, who brings forward this measure, had he not brought it forward at a former session, when the country was in a different condition from what it now is, would have hesitated before bringing it forward at the present time. It originated with a desire, honestly entertained on his part, no doubt, of correcting what he considers an abuse, when the public Treasury was full, and when all branches of public business were flourishing. A policy which might have been very proper then, may be very improper now; and I would suggest to that Senator, and to all who may feel inclined to discourage the continuance of this law, whether it would not be better to let the law remain at least until the business interests of the country recover to some extent from the shock to which they have, within the last year, been subjected.

Another reason why, as it seems to me, it is unfortunate at this time to repeal this law, is found in the fact that this is said to be a local interest, in which the inhabitants only of two or three of the New England States, in the northeastern section of the country, are concerned. If the encouragement, the bounty, if it may be so called, which has been given to those engaged in this business is now taken away, at the instance of those who reside in another section of the country, it will serve, I apprehend, to keep alive, and perhaps to increase, a feeling of unkindness, not to say alienation, which I regret to say exists between different sections of this country at the present time. It is a fact known to us all, and I trust regretted by us all, that there is not, between the extreme sections of this Union, geographically considered, that degree of cordial feeling, that degree of kindness, that degree of oneness, which is desirable in our country, and which we should all, I trust, delight to see return again—when there shall be a feeling of brotherhood between the North and the South, the East and the West, instead of a feeling of alienation, and, to some extent, of unkindness between them.

In this condition of things, and when, as it is said, measures are in progress which will bring about a better state of feeling, it seems to me unfortunate that a step should be taken tending to interrupt this return to good feeling between the different sections of the country. I am aware that the Senator from Alabama would disclaim, at least I presume he would disclaim, any hostility to this because it is a New England interest—a northern interest. I take it for granted that that Senator would say that he proposes to repeal this law because he believes it is unwise, unjust, perhaps unconstitutional; to have it remain on our statute-book, without any reference at all to the locality which will be affected by the repeal. Still, sir, it is useless to disguise the fact, known to us all, that a repeal of this law will be regarded as a blow at a certain section of this country. It is asserted and reasserted that this is a sectional interest. This law has existed from the foundation of the Government, in one form or another; and at the present time, with a feeling not altogether kindly between the different sections of the country, if one section makes, I will not say an attack upon the interests of another section, but introduces a bill, the direct effect of which is to strike a blow at the prosperity of another section of the country, does it not look, and will not the people regard it as the action of one section against another section of the country? And although we may, in all sincerity and in all truth, avow that we have no feeling of this kind, shall we induce the people of the whole country to believe that we are entirely truthful in our assertion that we are correcting an abuse, and have no desire at all to show to one section of the Union, that for the time being we can legislate for ourselves and legislate against you?

A consideration of this sort may be regarded as very trivial and unimportant by some, but it seems to me it is not altogether so. It is better, I think, that we should continue a law so old and so time-honored as this, rather than repeal it; whereby we save the sum of $300,000 a year to the public Treasury, at the expense of awakening a feeling such as this to which I have called attention. I do not say that the people of New England will be enraged or will be provoked to any revenge or any hostility toward any section of the country because of the repeal of this law. I do not believe they will. The amount involved in the question is not large enough to have such results in its train; and really, when we look at it, the fact that it is so small makes it, therefore, rather more a matter of pride and of feeling than that this law should stand. We look upon it—at least I think our people will look upon it as being, in some quarters, (certainly I charge no gentleman here with such a desire,) actuated by a design to do what some would call paying back to one section something which they may have done or said or expressed in regard to another section—a sort of retaliatory measure, a system of “if you say harsh things of us, and if you do harsh things toward us, we will say and we will do harsh things toward you.” That will be the reading which many men will give of legislation of this description; and even granting that it is entirely a mistaken or a false view, shall we be gainers by saving $300,000 to the public Treasury when we send abroad such an impression as that?

There are other facts in connection with this matter which, it appears to me, ought to induce us to pause before taking a step of this description. The history and traditions connected with our fisheries have given them a degree—I will not say of veneration before the public eye, but a degree of regard, and a home in the affections of the people of the United States, which will not look favorably on a blow at their prosperity. If we go back as early as the colonial period of our history, we find that those who were engaged in the fisheries were among our most valuable and estimable citizens in war and in peace. The taking of Louisburg from the French, that enterprise which was complimented so warmly by Lord Chatham in the English Parliament, was achieved very much by the aid of fishermen of New England. In the revolutionary war, not only on the ocean, but on the land, the services of the New England fishermen were most efficient and most valuable. The passage of the Delaware, which lives on the canvas as well as in the memories of the American people, was due to the energy and courage of the fishermen of the New England States. Washington and his army, in all human probability, would not have passed the Delaware river on that cold and bleak December night, had it not been for the courage and skill of the fishermen of New England who formed part of his army. That was the testimony borne by General Knox, whose testimony is certainly to be received as authentic on that subject.

In the last war with Great Britain, the services of the fishermen were of the same character. They have been alluded to. The glorious old frigate Constitution, whose name is scarcely to be mentioned without reverence, owes the sanctity and glory which attach to her to the fishermen of New England. More than seventy of the common sailors on board that ship when, under the command of Commodore Hull, she took the British frigate Guerriere, were freholders of Massachusetts; a large majority of the crew were fishermen. And that action, so gallant and so glorious, had it not been for these fishermen, either would never have been fought at all, or its result would have been very different from what it was. It was because of the coolness, the skill, the courage of these fishermen, that, when Commodore Hull laid his frigate alongside of the Guerriere, within thirty minutes after her first gun was fired every spar was shot out of the Guerriere but her bowsprit. That was gunnery, the gunnery of New England fishermen. None such was ever shown before to the world, and nothing superior to it can be pointed out anywhere to-day.

In view of facts such as these, it seems to me that we ought not to lay a heavy hand on the successors of such men. It is true most of these men have passed away. Commodore Hull and his brave crew are no longer among us, or but few of them remain. But, sir, their successors live to-day—men who are ready to emulate their deeds—ready whenever their country calls. In any wise and real exigency the successors of those men will prove themselves worthy of their ancestry. A blow at them ought to be felt not only at their homes and firesides but over the country, for their glory is a common glory to the nation; it is not bounded by State or sectional lines.

The general merits of this question have been discussed by the honorable Senators from Maine, with such fullness that it would be superfluous for me to add anything at all—indeed, I think I could not add to what they have said. On what particular grounds this law was passed, originally, whether in consequence of the consumption of foreign salt, or as a means of sustaining a nursery for seamen, or for other grounds, or for the whole taken together, is not, in my opinion, a point of very much importance now. The law has become very much sanctioned by time. The business has not been so productive, nor does it promise to be so productive, that there is any danger that it will be a burden on the Treasury. The fact that the business is now barely a remunerative one, is sufficient to prove to my mind that if we take away the little benefit which this law gives, the business will certainly be diminished. The honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. COLLAMER] took, I think, a very correct view of the question, when he said that possibly as many fish might be caught if this bill were to become a law as though it should not become a law; but instead of the fish being caught by American fishermen, the strong probability to his mind was, that the business would pass into the hands of the British provinces; that their fishermen, instead of the American fishermen, would, under the operation of the reciprocity treaty, be enabled to supply the fish in American markets so as almost to exclude the American fishermen from the ocean; and the result in that point of view would be really to strike out this as an American interest from existence.

Well, sir, if that is the alternative, if we are to lose the benefit which results to the country from the continuance of the cod fishery, can we afford to do that for the sum of $300,000 per annum? Suppose, however, we do not lose it, but it is simply impaired one fourth, one half, or any other fractional proportion: will the amount of money we shall save to the Treasury be any compensation even for the loss to that extent?

The honorable Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BENJAMIN] remarked that if he were satisfied that the repeal of the law would, to any considerable extent, impair the prosperity of this interest, he would not vote for the bill. Now, I think it is perfectly apparent that the passage of this bill must tend to diminish the number of men and the amount of tonnage engaged in this business. How far it may diminish them is of course a question which experiment only can determine; but that it will diminish them to some extent seems to me as clear as any mathematical proposition. Who can doubt that many men now go into this business because, under the law, a certain amount of reward is secured to them? If men hesitate whether or not they will engage in this business when they have a fixed certain sum which they are to receive if they do go into it, will not all those men who hesitate now, decide not to go into it if you take away this security, even although it may be a small one? The amount which each man receives is certainly small, but it is enough to make the difference between his going and not going, when, without this amount of bounty, he hesitates whether to go or not. If the honorable Senator from Louisiana, therefore, looks at this question with the usual discrimination and judgment that he exercises on subjects before us, it seems to me that in the light of the principle to which he alluded he cannot hesitate to vote against the passage of this bill.

Now, Mr. President, can this be viewed, it strikes me, altogether so much a local interest, taking it in all its bearings, as gentlemen seem disposed to consider it. It would seem, I agree, that the State of Louisiana had but little interest in the amount of bounty which may be paid to the citizens of Connecticut and Massachusetts for engaging in the cod fishery; but if the payment of that bounty tends to make fish cheaper to the consumer, and the inhabitants of Louisiana are consumers of fish, certainly all those who are consumers of that commodity save the difference between the price of the fish caught, under such circumstances, and the price they would have to pay if there was no bounty given for the catching of fish. The consumption of cod fish is very general over the country, not to a very great extent—that I do not claim—but I am sure that the consumption, to a certain extent, is very general in all sections of the country. The benefits of cheap fish are alike diffused over the country. If the tendency of this law is to increase the number of fish caught, the result must be a corresponding cheapness in the price; and under these circumstances the benefits of cheap fish are shared, not by the New England States alone, but by the whole country; and I am by no means sure that the consumption of fish is not as great in Louisiana as it is in Connecticut, in proportion to the population. Indeed I should be mistaken if it was not greater.

As the policy of continuing the present system in reference to the prosperity of our Navy and of our country for the future, it seems to me there can be but one opinion on that subject. I am aware that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. Mallory] yesterday expressed the opinion that these fishermen, generally, did not and would not enter into the naval service. Sir, during the war with Great Britain, in 1812, it is agreed that they did enter into the naval service, and it is agreed that their skill and courage contributed, in a high degree, to give to the American Navy its present renown. No doubt in time of peace the New England fishermen do hesitate before entering the naval service of the country, and but few of them actually enter it; but let there come a war which touches the hearts of the sailors of our country, as the war of 1812 did, and, my word for it, the decks of all our national ships would be provided with American sailors, thorough, efficient, able men, who would sustain the honor of the flag as it was sustained under Hull, Bainbridge, and Decatur, and their glorious compeers. There is no question but that, let "free trade and sailors' rights" be on the banner again, as it was in the war of 1812, and every American sailor will be found at his post discharging his duty gloriously.

The honorable Senator from Florida is mistaken when he says that these fishermen would not go into the Navy. He agreed, however, as I understood him, that they probably would enter the privateering service. Granting that, he grants all that I wish to claim in regard to the policy of continuing our present law; for, if these men would enter the privateering service, they would do the country perhaps as much good as they could on board our national vessels. How was the privateering service in the last war? There was no want of sailors in our national ships; they were well provided with American sailors. The services rendered on board our privateers were very efficient and most valuable, and the ability, the courage, the skill, witnessed on board American privateers compare favorably with the actions fought by our national ships, gallant as they were. What action fought by a national ship can be named as exceeding in skill and courage the action on board the privateer General Armstrong, about which this Congress has had occasion to hear somewhat, and will perhaps hear more? That was an action in which New England fishermen were concerned, and no more glorious action was fought during the war. So it will be again, sir. I hazard nothing in saying so, because we can only pronounce of the future by the past.

A word now in regard to what fell from the honorable Senator from Alabama, in respect to the skill of these men as sailors. He said that they are wanting in the skill that makes men sailors on board large ships; and that their experience on board fishing vessels does not make them competent sailors. Sir, the past bears different testimony; and I have alluded, and various Senators on this floor have alluded to the frigate Constitution, and the glorious actions fought on board that ship. On one occasion, when that ship, under the command of Commodore Hull, was almost surrounded by a British fleet, in great danger of capture, and apparently almost in the power of a hostile squadron, she was extricated from her perilous condition by the skill and seamanship of her officers and crew—such skill and seamanship as the world has perhaps never witnessed. The officers and men, who for sixty hours remained on deck doing duty uninterruptedly, succeeded in extricating that ship from a British squadron, under circumstances which make the seamanship of Commodore Hull and his gallant crew equal in renown to the glory acquired in fighting the Guerriere, or any other vessel that she fought during the war. The honor of the achievement has been a matter, to some extent, of friendly dispute between the friends of Commodore Hull and of his first lieutenant then—the late Commodore Morris. We of Connecticut looked upon the controversy with more complacency than most States; because whether it were accorded to the one or the other, it came to one of our own highly esteemed citizens. But the men—and the men after all must be our reliance in an exigency—were New England fishermen.

Now, sir, without tiring the patience of the Senate, I must say that when an attack is made on a system which has had the sanction of so many years, which has certainly been productive of results so valuable, and when such a movement at the present time must be followed by disaster to the interest itself, and as it seems to me the whole country, I could not give a silent vote on this question. Senators have alluded to this bill as one that is destined to pass. It may be so; but I hope not. I hope there is no such pride of opinion or pride of success as will induce gentlemen to press this measure against their better judgments and better feelings. If during another Congress or on another occasion, and that within a short time, it shall seem expedient or best to pass it, be it so; but I submit to Senators, in all candor, that this is a most unfortunate time. It will certainly have a discouraging effect upon the country—most discouraging. While all branches of public and private industry are suffering, and while therefore more men are probably about to embark in fishing this spring than heretofore, to have this bill passed taking away the little pittance which has been given to those engaged in this business, seems to me cold and unfeeling on the part of the Government. It seems to me that all we shall save if it will be worth to us not half what it costs.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President—

Mr. TOOMBS. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. CLAY. I believe the Senator rises to what may be regarded as a privileged question.

Mr. TOOMBS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAY. I give way.

SENATORS FROM MINNESOTA.

Mr. TOOMBS. I present the credentials of Hon. HENRY M. RICE, Senator elect from the State of Minnesota; and I move that he be sworn and admitted to his seat.

Mr. HARLAN. Before that motion is put, I have a statement of facts that I desire to make to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. STUART in the chair.) Does the Senator desire to make his statement before the credentials are read?

Mr. HARLAN. No, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the credentials.

The credentials were read; being a certificate signed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate of Minnesota, that at an election held in the Capitol of the State of Minnesota, at St. Paul, by the Senate and House of Representatives of that State in joint convention on the 19th day of December, 1857, HENRY M. RICE was duly elected a Senator to represent the State of Minnesota in the Senate of the United States.

Mr. TOOMBS. I now move that the oath be administered to Mr. Rice, and that he be admitted to his seat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion which has just been made by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, the settlers on Fort Crawford Reservation, in the State of Iowa, allege that they have been defrauded by Mr. Henry M. Rice, as agent of Hon. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, in the sale of their claims as settlers on said reservation, namely:

1. That said Secretary of War instructed Henry M. Rice to sell to the settlers on said reservation their claims at $1 25 per acre; that said Rice required said settlers to pay for their claims at the rate of $1 50 per acre, and receipted to them, on the payment of said $1 50 per acre, for but $1 25 per acre, and refused to receipt to them for the remaining twenty-five cents per acre received of them by him, as aforesaid.

2. That sundry cases in which settlers applied to said Rice for leave to enter their said claims, he referred them to his clerk, who charged them fees varying from ten to eighty dollars each, in addition to the said $1 50 per acre, for leave to purchase their said claims; that these fees were charged and received by the said Rice, corruptly, as said settlers believe, through the interposition of his clerk.

3. That said Rice negligently failed to give said settlers reasonable notice of the time of said sale, and thereby subjected them to the necessity of borrowing money, at enormous rates of interest, with which to purchase their said claims.

4. That said Rice defrauded one of said settlers of his right to purchase his claim, under the instruction of the Secretary of War, by surreptitiously securing from him a quit-claim to a part of the land embraced in said claim.

These statements are contained in sundry papers which I have in my hand, including a petition from these settlers for redress. The petitioners ask that the extra twenty-five cents an acre may be refunded to them. The facts are also set forth in a verbal statement made to my colleague and myself here, and to one of our colleagues in the House of Representatives, by an agent of these settlers, sent here to represent their interests. I know not what course ought to be pursued. I am informed by my colleague in the other House, who represents that part of the State of Iowa, that these persons are credible men; that he would rely on their statements. It is certainly due to them, and perhaps due also to the Senator elect from Minnesota, that some opportunity should be given for the examination of this allegation of facts, that if true, the Senate may know that they are true; and if not true, that the Senator elect may purge himself from the odium implied.

Sir, I scarcely know what course to pursue. I know not whether it would now be in order to object to the swearing in of the member, or whether that would comport with the rules of the Senate. I remember that the late distinguished Senator from South Carolina [Mr. Butler] said that in a case similar to this—provided these facts were true—he would object at the threshold to a member being sworn in. It has, however, been stated by other members of the Senate, and by those on whom the Senate relies on questions of constitutional law, that no objection should be made on the presentation of credentials. I therefore bring these facts to the notice of the Senate; but I shall make no motion myself.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have no comment whatever to make on this extraordinary proceeding of the Senator from Iowa. The credentials of the Senator from Minnesota having been produced, I have moved that he be sworn in, and admitted to his seat.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Mississippi pause for a moment? The Chair has just come in, and does not exactly understand the posture of the question. Have the credentials been presented?

Mr. BROWN and others. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has objection been made to swearing in the member. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. BROWN. Then, to make a point for the moment, I will object myself, so that I may have an opportunity of saying what I desire to say. So far as these allegations are concerned, I will remark at the outset, that it would take a vast amount of testimony to make me believe that they are true, or that they have any reasonable semblance of truth. I know HENRY M. RICE; I have known him for years; and, in my judgment, if there be on earth a true and honorable man, he is one, wholly incapable of doing a dishonorable act; and in the course which I am about to pursue, I want the Senate, and all who shall read this day's proceedings, to understand that I am not in the slightest possible degree, in the action which I am about to take, influenced by these charges. If they had any influence on me, it would be to induce me to withdraw all possible objection to the swearing in of Mr. RICE, for I think this is a flagrant outrage, and I am sure, upon investigation, it will turn out to be without cause, and without the slightest possible foundation in truth. Now, my life upon it, if the vouchers for this statement be entitled to the least possible credit, Mr. RICE, as soon as he is sworn in, will demand an investigation.

I object to the swearing in of the new Senators from Minnesota upon other and altogether different grounds. I object to it upon the ground that, under the written Constitution of the United States, States may elect Senators; and in that instrument there is nothing which authorizes a Territory to exercise that high prerogative of sovereignty. Until within the last hour, Minnesota was a Territory, and not a State. Congress, at its last session, authorized Minnesota to form a State constitution; but that did not constitute her a State. The Senate, some weeks ago, passed a bill, so far as this branch of the national Legislature was concerned, to admit her. The House of Representatives yesterday passed that bill; and to-day, the President has notified you that he has signed it. All this concurrent action of the two Houses of Congress, and of the President, was necessary to constitute Minnesota a State. She was not a State, in my judgment, until you were officially notified by the President that he had approved the bill admitting her into the Union as a State on a footing of equality with the other States. The language of the Constitution, in the third section of the first article is, "the Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, chosen by the Legislature thereof for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote." There is nowhere in the Constitution any warrant for a Territorial Legislature to choose a Senator of the United States. Could you have a State Legislature in Minnesota; could you have, in the language of the Constitution, "a Legislature thereof," meaning of a State, until Minnesota was a State? I know that, in the California case, it was argued by the then great Senator from Kentucky that California yesterday was a State out of the Union, and to-day she is a State in the Union; but I never understood that sort of argument. A State is a State; no more and no less. The Constitution recognizes States in the Union, and not States out of the Union. This talking about States out of the Union, entitled to exercise the high prerogatives of sovereignty, is but a branch of that odious and despicable doctrine of squatter sovereignty.

Was Minnesota a State when she chose Messrs. RICE and SHIELDS to represent her in this body? We should deny our very existence; we should belie every particle of intelligence we possess, to say that she was. If she was not a State, then I want to know by what warrant she elected Senators to this body; seeing that the Constitution has said that each State shall be entitled to two Senators, to be "chosen by the Legislature thereof"—the Legislature of a State, not of a Territory. I know very well that the convention which framed the constitution of this incipient State provided for the election of a Legislature, and a Legislature was chosen; but it was no State Legislature until the State was admitted, and the laws which they pass are not in force. Nobody pretends to try to enforce them; they are dead letters on the statute-book until such time as the State is admitted. They had the sense to know that they had no power to pass laws as a State Legislature until they were a State; but, following the example first set in the case of Ohio, I think, and which was followed up in several cases afterwards, and finally in the case of California, they chose Senators to this body.

I have no expectation that these gentlemen will be excluded; and, since others have been admitted on the same terms, I cannot say that I am particularly anxious that they shall be excluded. They are my personal and political friends. I am proud to call them so, and to feel that they are so; that they stand in that relation to me, and I to them; and I am glad to enter my protest against parties occupying that personal and political relation to myself, so that I shall not be suspected of acting from any partisan motive in this matter. Still, the obligation is upon me, and I will discharge it, to enter my solemn protest, and put it upon the record, against gentlemen coming here and taking seats as Senators who are not accredited by any sovereignty, who do not come from any State of the Union. Such a proceeding is wrong. It was wrong in the beginning; and though it may have been repeated fifty, or a hundred, or a thousand times over, you can never make it right. Go back to original principles; look to the Constitution; and if you find your warrant there, admit these gentlemen; but if you do not find it there, then act upon the great principle that you are as wise as those who went before you; and as they did not swear to support the Constitution for you, but as you swore to support it for yourselves, then act in obedience to your convictions of duty to that Constitution. I care not if every Senate which has sat from the foundation of the Government up to this hour, had said otherwise; the conviction is firmly, fixedly, fastened on my mind that nothing but a State, one of the sovereignties that make up this great Confederacy, has any power to elect a Senator; and, though they came from a southern State, though they might be knit to me by every tie of affection, I would still, as I do to-day, enter my protest against their being sworn.

Mr. SEWARD. Mr. President, I think the objection which is taken by the honorable Senator from Mississippi is metaphysical rather than practical. There must be a time when each of the proceedings for the creation, the inauguration of a State at home, and its initiation here into the family of States, is inchoate, unfinished; when the Territory is in the act of passing from a provincial subordinate condition to one of qualified sovereignty, when practically it is neither a Territory nor a State. It necessarily happens in this case, as in all organic changes, artificial or natural, that there is a difficulty of determining the exact status of everything. The worm becomes a butterfly; there must be stages in its transition in which it is difficult to tell whether it is one thing or the other. That is the condition of the Territory of Minnesota while it is passing from the condition of dependence into the condition of a sovereign State of the Union. Now the question is, how to arrive at a practical conclusion, consistent with justice, consistent with the rights and interests of the people of the States, and with the dignity and rights of the Union. Minnesota, whatever she may have been yesterday, is a State to-day, and is entitled to representation in the Senate of the United States. Two gentlemen present themselves here, and claim to be Senators from that State. Does any person object? Is there any reasonable objection on the part of the Senate of the United States to receive Senators from Minnesota? Certainly not, for the Senate is desirous that every State shall be represented immediately on its title being established.

Does any objection come from the State of Minnesota? Certainly not. These Senators bring testimonials from the authority which was constituted by the people of Minnesota in pursuance of the constitution which they were authorized to establish, and which constitution has been submitted in behalf of the people to the Congress of the United States. We may therefore recognize the election of these Senators made by the Legislature of Minnesota, as an act performed conditionally, or, as the lawyers say, de bene esse, an act which is to take effect from the time when the State shall be admitted into the Union. I believe in all cases, in legal transactions as well as in political transactions, such things occur. Metaphysically, there is a difficulty, practically, there seems to be none; and as it is clear that the State of Minnesota is entitled to representation, as there is no opposition from that State to the admission of these two gentlemen in that character, as they come with credentials which we are satisfied are authentic and made dependent on this condition, I think our proper course in this case, as in the case of California, is to admit the Senators to their seats, subject to the condition, that if the State of Minnesota shall show hereafter that they are here in a usurped character which she has not given them, then the act may be repealed.

In regard to the other question, I have not a word to say. I think the honorable Senator from Iowa, if his informants are credible and respectable persons, did no more than his duty in laying these statements before the Senate. At the same time, I agree with the honorable Senator from Mississippi, that the gentleman whose character is assailed will owe it to himself, and if he do not the Senate probably will owe it to itself, to institute an investigation.

Mr. STUART. I trust I may be pardoned for saying a word under the circumstances; and I must express my regret that the honorable Senator from Iowa took occasion to present papers of the kind which he did present at this particular time. I think it would have been much better for him to present them to the Senate at any other time, and ask for their reference to any committee for a careful and appropriate examination. But, sir, I could not think that I had discharged my duty—at all events not that duty which I feel that I owe to myself—if I did not meet this suggestion by saying that I have known the gentleman who asks admission here to-day, from his boyhood up; and if there is any one man in America who, more than another has at all times been the friend of the settler, the pioneer of the country, and has aided him by his personal and political influence, and by his private means, more than any other, that man is Mr. RICE. In respect to this transaction, I know something personally—not of the particular charges made in these papers; but I know that the claims of the settlers upon the Fort Crawford reservation were carefully examined under the instructions of Mr. RICE by competent men sent out on purpose, and no man's claim was offered for sale in the first instance. I was there myself at that time, and the instructions were specific that wherever there was a claimant on the reserve, those claimants having no legal rights at all, the reserve not being subject to preemption, the facts were to be ascertained and reported to him; and no such property was offered for sale; but it was withheld, their claims were to be examined, and they were to have their land at just such prices as the Secretary directed. In my opinion there has not been an honest transaction, one that has been conducted upon higher principles, than that was. What may have been done by some man who professed to be an agent or something else, I do not know; but thus far I certify to the Senate and to the country what I do know.

In saying thus much, I feel that I but discharge a duty which I should have felt myself censurable if I had not done, in regard to personal honor and personal character. And now I have a word to say in regard to the other proposition. I submit to the consideration of the Senate, that if we were to proceed upon a technical compliance with our constitutional authority, it would require a State in form, and fully and completely organized, before we could act at all; because our authority is to admit a State; not a Territory, not a State partially organized, not something that is to be a State afterwards, but it is to admit a State; and there is no distinction between a State formed out of domestic territory, and one that is carved from foreign dominions. The practice of the country has been to take this thing in its progress, it being a proceeding that is to be completed under our constitutional authority. Congress has not stopped to inquire whether it was fully or partially organized as is now the case in Oregon, and as was the case in Kansas; but I say my judgment has been that when a State is carved out of our own territory, it is an organization that we authorize for this purpose. Such is the title of our acts. We authorize the people of a Territory to proceed to make a State organization for the purpose of being admitted into the Union. My own individual opinion is, that if Congress, for any reason of its own, refuses admission, absolutely and unqualifiedly, the organization falls, it being made for a particular purpose. Suppose you were to take the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Mississippi, that it becomes a State upon our action: what then? He alludes to the fact that the Legislature passes laws which are in force as soon as we admit the State. The same thing is true of the election of a Senator. He becomes entitled to his seat the moment we admit the State. ["Let us vote."] I did not desire or design to detain the Senate a moment on the subject, but simply to throw out these remarks; for I rose, as I said, merely to vindicate my personal friend, a man who is above reproach.

Mr. HARLAN. I should not have said another word were it not for the expression of regret on the part of the Senator from Michigan that I have called the attention of the Senate to this subject. I can say to that Senator that it was as painful to me as it could have possibly been to him; and there was doubt in my mind in regard to my duty in the matter; and that my precise condition may be understood, I will take up the time of the Senate for a minute to read a paper or two that have been, by citizens of Iowa, forwarded to my colleague here, and one of my colleagues in the other House, and by them placed in my hands. One of them purports to be a petition of these claimants themselves. They say:

"We whose names are hereunto subscribed, being first duly sworn each for himself, do say that they were settlers and preceptors on what was called and known as the Fort Crawford reservation. And that we were required by the Hon. H. M. Rice, the agent of the War Department in the sale of said lands, to pay to him the sum of $1 50 per acre for our claims, and that in each instance he would execute in return a receipt for only $1 25 per acre. We ask that the excess so paid be returned to us.

"Dated this 4th day of January, anno Domini 1858."

That is signed by a long list of parties interested, and their oaths certified to by a notary public, with his seal. There are other affidavits here, or rather copies of them, that have been taken from papers on file in the War Department to the same effect. As I before remarked, these settlers have taken the trouble, and gone to the expense of sending an agent here for the purpose of seeing that their interests were properly represented, who, after calling together the delegation from Iowa made a statement of these facts, as I have represented them to the Senate.

Now, sir, if they be true, I am not willing, as the representative of a sovereign State of this Union, to recognize the Senator elect from Minnesota as a peer on this floor. If they be not true, it is due to him that he be exonerated from the charges made by my constituents under oath and in due form. I ought to state that I have no acquaintance with the Senator elect, have never exchanged words with him in any way or at any place, and know him merely by sight; and no member of the Senate will rejoice more than I shall if, after a proper examination of this subject, he shall be able to exonerate himself fully and completely. I know, too, that that would be the case with my honorable colleague in the other House, who is the immediate Representative of these constituents of ours.

There are other papers here equally pointed. One particular claimant represents, that when he offered to enter his claim he was asked to sign a paper, which he supposed to be a formal application for leave to enter his claim, but which turned out to be a quit-claim to a part of the lands included within the limits of his claim, obtained from him as he alleges by the hypocrisy of the clerk of the agent of the War Department, the Senator elect here on the floor.

Well, sir, if other members of the Senate feel on this subject as I do, they would at some proper time (whether this be the proper time or not) order an investigation of the facts; and if found to be true, I feel quite sure they would not willingly sit with the Senator elect as a peer. It may be that other members of the Senate regard this subject differently from myself. I have supposed that when an agent of the General Government proceeds to the discharge of his duty as such agent, under the pay of the General Government, he has no right to extra fees from citizens of the United States for his services. It is true that a short time since, when I called the attention of the Senate to a case somewhat kindred, where deputy surveyors had received pay from the General Government, as fixed by law, and had charged and received from citizens of the United States, in a distant State, extra compensation, that charge was justified by their immediate representative on this floor. It may be that other members of this body may not look on this subject in the light I do; but if he viewed it as I do, I am quite sure the Senator from Michigan could not regret that the investigation should be demanded by the immediate representatives of the people in interest. These people are my constituents; they are poor men; and I know full well how easy it would be for an agent of this Government to extort from them money. They are settlers on the public lands. They frequently have spent years of hard toil in improving these lands. The fear of its loss would prompt them, if required by an agent of this Government, to pay illegal fees rather than encounter the risk. I repeat, that if, after an investigation shall be had, if the Senate see proper to order one, it shall be shown that the agent was justifiable in doing what he did, or that these allegations are untrue, and the Senator elect shall emerge from this investigation with a spotless character, I will rejoice with all his friends in the result.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Mr. President, I certainly did not intend to say a word on this subject; but the Senator from Iowa has repeated again, from a paper which he holds before him, a charge against an honorable gentleman, with whom I have no personal acquaintance. He has paraded it before the country as if there was really something in it to affect his personal character. Now, sir, the statement is, as he says, signed by some fifty or one hundred people—I do not know how many—a large number of persons, that Mr. Rice, as agent of the War Department, charged them $1 50 an acre for the land, and give them a receipt for $1 25 only.

At first sight this would seem to be an extraordinary proceeding; but if you look upon your table, at a communication from the War Department we had the other day, you will find that Mr. Rice wrote to the War Department that he had done so, and gave the reasons why. The papers were on our table, and I read them the other day, as a matter of curiosity. He states that it was for the purpose of paying certain extra charges—I do not exactly remember what—in the interest of the settlers themselves, which they cheerfully paid over. He did not keep the money. He charged it, and accounted for it to the War Department; the extra twenty-five cents being for the purpose of settling up their different claims, in some way that I do not now remember, and which it is not necessary to specify. It was not a secret proceeding. It was not a claim of a sum of money, and giving a receipt for a smaller sum, and then retaining the surplus or the difference; but it was taking a receipt for this sum, which he immediately accounted for at the War Department, giving the reason for this course of proceeding, which was entirely satisfactory to the Department.

In relation to this quit-claim matter, there is also information in that War Department report which, I think, disposes of that very satisfactorily; but this is not the time for an investigation into these facts. I merely wish to state to-day, because these proceedings go before the country, that this charge against Mr. Rice of receiving $1 50 an acre, and giving a receipt for $1 25 an acre, is a charge of a fact which so far from being denied by him, was done by him, as he supposed, with regard to the interests of the settlers, and immediately reported to the War Department; and that there is no suggestion, even on the part of the very parties making this affidavit, that he retained the difference, but they simply ask that that difference may be returned to them by the Government. It is no charge whatever affecting him personally. The Senator from Iowa, I must say, mistook the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan. Nobody suggested that if these charges were put before him on oath there was any impropriety in his bringing them to the notice of the Senate; but, I think, all will agree with me that it was unusual, discourteous, and I will even say cruel, to bring them forward on such an occasion as this.

Mr. TOOMBS. I merely wish to say that I very promptly declined making any argument on the extraordinary course of the Senator from Iowa. I considered that the gentleman who has been elected by Minnesota needs no vindication from this charge. If it had been sworn to by all the constituents of the Senator from Iowa, and backed by that Senator himself, I should not hesitate an instant about it; and nobody that knows this gentleman would, nor would the country. If he had these charges, he should have presented them before this, or he should have waited and presented them after this. If his course now grew out of his want of judgment or want of knowledge of what was the appropriate time for a Senator and a gentleman to act in such a matter, of course, it is his misfortune. I decline to argue this question until the Senate shall have acted. Those who are willing that this gentleman shall be their peer, that he shall stand on this floor ready to meet the Senator from Iowa on these charges or any other, in any manner whatever, have a right to insist on his being sworn; and, therefore, I ask that the sense of the Senate be taken on that question.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, no acquaintance with the allegations now made in the statement submitted by the honorable Senator from Iowa can influence me at all. I consider that matter entirely irrelevant to any duty we have now to perform. I think it would be unjust and cruel to meet a Senator here, when his admission is proposed, by an inquiry into alleged facts of this kind. If his credentials are in proper form, he has a right to be sworn, and then, if there are any charges to be made against him, let them be presented when he has an opportunity to meet them.

On the other objection which is made, I had at one time doubts whether the Senators from Minnesota would be entitled to seats upon this floor, under their present election, though the State might be admitted at this session. I have changed the opinion which I formerly expressed on that point. I do not doubt still, that only in cases where Congress has given express authority to a Territory to form a State government, and acting under that express authority a State government has been formed, it becomes a State, according to the enabling act, from the hour the State constitution is formed under the authority of the act. It is not then a State of the Union; but when subsequently the constitution formed under our authority is presented to Congress, and Congress admits that State into the Union, I can see no possible objection to giving a retroactive effect, so as to give validity to the action of the Legislature elected, as if the State were a State of the Union from the time when she became a State by virtue of the act of Congress. I, therefore, am prepared to vote for the admission of the Senator from Minnesota, though the objection I formerly stated would still exist if there had been no enabling act for Minnesota, and thus were a case like that of Tennessee. In that case, without any authority whatever, either express or implied, from Congress, the people of Tennessee formed a State constitution and elected a Legislature, which chose Senators to this body, and sent them here in the year 1796, to take their seats on this floor. They appeared and claimed those seats; and even before Tennessee was admitted as a State the committee reported that they might be admitted to the floor of the Senate as spectators. Subsequently, on the morning of the last day of the session, the State was admitted. Their credentials were then presented under an election held previous to the admission of the State; and on their presentation the Senate decided that those gentlemen were not entitled to seats, and they were afterwards re-elected by the Legislature of Tennessee, and took their seats at the next session of Congress. That was in 1796, the first case that occurred after the formation of the Government. Perhaps if that practice had been extended generally as the rule, it would have been more in conformity with a rigid construction of the clause of the Constitution as to the mode of electing Senators; but to my mind there is a clear distinction between that case and the case of Minnesota. In the case of Minnesota we did authorize the formation of a State government; and we provided that it should be an inchoate State, not a State of the Union, from the time of the adoption of the constitution. The constitution was adopted; an election was held under it; a Legislature was chosen; and they have sent Senators here. I think that our subsequent ratification by the admission of the State may, without any violence to legal principles, be considered as retroactive, and as giving validity to the election, although the State was not a State of the Union at the time it took place.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. President, for the first time since I have been a member of the Senate, I allude to personal remarks applied to me by Senators on this floor. Once or twice previously, in the discharge of their duties, Senators here have supposed it to be necessary to pursue a similar course. I did not then respond, for this consideration: when such remarks proceed from weak men they are unworthy of response; and they are never resorted to by strong men without a pressing necessity, unless driven to the wall.

Now, sir, when the honorable Senator from Georgia [Mr. TOOMBS] attributes what I have done here to mistaken notions of what a true knowledge of gentility would require, he is welcome to his opinion. I suppose that, on these subjects, men carry within their own bosoms the standard by which they measure others. I protest against the supposition on the part of any member of this body that there exists in my mind the least coloring of personal feeling or acrimony against the Senator elect from the new State of Minnesota. As I before remarked, I have done what I have from a sense of duty as the representative of the people of Iowa; and if Senators here choose to meet me by the application of personal remarks derogatory to my character as a gentleman, I give them notice now, once for all, that such replies are, in my judgment, unworthy the Senate, and will never hereafter be noticed by me. I am not here to defend my integrity or character as a man or as a gentleman. I am here on my responsibility as a representative of a sovereign State, and shall never stoop to engage in personal wrangles. I make no personal allusions to others which I do not believe to be proper in the legitimate discharge of my duties as such representative. And when Senators suppose that other motives influence me, they err greatly.

The Senator from Louisiana chose to represent what I had done as cruel, and stated that in the printed report before the Senate the party was exonerated from any blame whatever. Well, sir, the allegations contained in that printed report are confronted by the sworn statement of citizens of my State; and it is this sworn statement of theirs, with the oral statement of their agent, to which I have alluded, that I have presented to the Senate. If the Senate do not deem these facts, if true, worthy of their consideration, so be it. Then I shall have discharged my duty as the representative of my constituents and of my State. I bring them to the notice of the Senate. I leave it for more experienced members of this body to decide for themselves the proper course to be pursued. It may be that I have erred in judgment, and on that subject I will not confront myself or my judgment with that of the honorable Senator from Georgia. I prefer to confront him with the opinion of the late member from South Carolina, the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, whose opinion I before stated.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa when the late Senator from South Carolina ever expressed the opinion that, upon the question of swearing in a Senator elect, we were to go into allegations against his personal character? It is contrary to what I have understood to be his opinions in such cases.

Mr. HARLAN. Since I have been a member of this body, there have been three contested cases as to the rights of Senators to seats on this floor. One was my own; another was that of the honorable Senator from Illinois; and the third that of the honorable Senators from Indiana. I will not now undertake to say in which one of these cases this opinion was given; but I know there are Senators around me who remember that this opinion was expressed by the late chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, and I remember full well that the Senator from Ohio, on that occasion, called in question the correctness of the opinion. Knowing this induced the statement, which I made on the presentation of these papers, that those learned in constitutional law had expressed the opinion, that in cases of this kind objection ought to be made when the party presented his credentials, but that there were others whose opinions were entitled to respect, who differed; and hence my doubt as to the proper time to introduce this matter.

As I stated before, I have no motion to make; I leave it with the Senate. If they suppose that this is the proper time to order a committee of investigation, if, indeed, they shall order one, so be it. It is for the Senate, not for me, to decide.

Mr. PUGH. I should not say a word if it were not that the Senator from Iowa has repeated his assertion. I now recollect perfectly the case to which he alludes. In the discussion in this body upon the right of the honorable Senator from Illinois [Mr. TRUMBULL] to his seat, I put the question to my honorable friend, the late Senator from South Carolina, (Mr. Butler,) what he would do in case a negro were elected to the Senate of the United States, there being no prohibition in the Constitution of the United States against it? He said he would move to expel him; but I never understood from him, on that or any other of the many contested cases in this body which I had occasion to examine with him, that he supposed it to be proper, on the presentation of the credentials of a Senator elect, that the Senate should pause to investigate complaints of private individuals against him. I protest against it in this case, as, in my humble judgment, an insult to the State of Minnesota. She has elected her Senators. The Senator from Iowa does not vote for them. If he is disinclined to sit on this floor with any gentleman whom any other State of this Union chooses to select as her representative, he has a very easy remedy; and that is, to vacate his own seat.

Now, sir, I do not know anything of these charges; but I say this: the Senator from Minnesota—I do not call him the Senator elect; he is a Senator—has a right to open his mouth, and reply to these charges, and not be brought up to the bar of the Senate muzzled, while his own character is assaulted. I believe he is as much entitled to his seat to-day as I am, and I shall vote for his instant admission; and if he is not admitted, I shall consider that the Senate has cast an insult on the State of Minnesota.

Mr. BAYARD. The remarks of the honorable Senator from Ohio induce me to state the distinction which I think exists. There are cases in which I should be prepared, before the admission of a Senator, to decide whether he was entitled to his seat or not. There are cases in which, according to the previous action of the Senate, they would not yield admission to a Senator claiming a seat until their judgment had passed upon the question of his right. This is not one of those cases, I admit. The distinction to me is a very apparent one. Whenever a Senator presents himself with credentials, if there be any fact going to his right to a seat which you should judicially notice, then you are bound to decide the question before you admit him; but if it causes any inquiry which is subject-matter of proof, and is not matter which you can judicially notice, then he is entitled to his seat under his proper credentials, and the inquiry must come subsequently. On no other principle can the action of the Senate be sustained in a case from my own State, where a Senator was appointed by the Governor after the State Legislature had met and adjourned; and the Senate, on objection being made, judicially noticed the fact that the State Legislature had been in session, and, of course, that the executive power of appointment was gone. So in the case of Mr. Lanman, of Connecticut, when he presented himself under an executive appointment, not for a broken term, but for the whole term, without the term having been previously filled, the Senate took judicial knowledge of the facts, and refused to admit him to a seat. I think the distinction is a very apparent one, and whenever such a case arose, I should hold myself bound to object to the admission.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Iowa how long he has had these papers in his possession?

Mr. HARLAN. I think the memorial of the claimants on these lands was forwarded perhaps with as much promptitude as the mails could bring them after their date. I find the date to be the 4th day of January, 1858.

Mr. BRIGHT. How long since the Senator received them?

Mr. HARLAN. I am unable to state how long, but I have had them in my possession some days.

Mr. BRIGHT. Has the Senator from Iowa informed the Senator from Minnesota of the receipt of those papers, and of the charges contained in them?

Mr. HALE. I rise to a question of order. I think this catechising Senators across the Senate is out of order.

Mr. HARLAN. I am willing to answer the question.

Mr. HALE. I am not.

Mr. BRIGHT. My object in making the inquiry was to ascertain whether it could be possible that any gentleman holding a commission as a Senator on this floor could receive papers containing charges as grave as those made in the papers presented against a brother Senator, and conceal all knowledge of the fact from the party charged until a period of time like this. I think such conduct unprecedented, unparliamentary, and un-senatorial. If the Senator from Iowa was in possession of those papers, I submit to the consideration of every Senator whether it was not proper, whether it was not respectful, whether it was not due to the gentleman interested, and if he was not acquainted with him, whether it was not at least due from him to the friends of the party assailed, that he should have made known the contents of those papers, the character of those charges, that opportunity of explanation might be given, if it could be, as I doubt not it can and will be in proper time, and thus have avoided so unpleasant, and I may add cruel, assault upon the conduct of a member of this body at a time and under circumstances so mortifying as the present.

Sir, I indorse every word that has been said by the Senator from Michigan, and the Senator from Mississippi, as to the irreproachable character of the Senator from Minnesota, and his antecedents alone should have shielded him from this blow; but he needs no indorsement from any one where he is known. His history, as a public man and as a private citizen, places him above reproach. I can well imagine how he must feel, assailed in this surreptitious manner, without even the privilege of speaking in his own defense. It would have been much more appropriate, and in much better taste, if the Senator from Iowa had permitted the Senator from Minnesota to have been sworn, that he might have had an opportunity of explaining this matter. Mr. President, I know nothing of the details of this transaction; but I do know enough of the character of the gentleman whose conduct is brought in question, to warrant me in saying that he will, in due time, explain satisfactorily to the country every charge preferred against him. I set up his exalted character, as a private citizen and public man, against the insidious assaults that are paraded here, in the form of affidavits made by persons whom even the Senator from Iowa himself seems to know nothing about, and who may or may not have an existence. I only rose, sir, for the purpose of expressing my surprise at the mode and manner of this attack; and of saying that, in due time, I have the fullest faith that these charges will be met and explained, and that the Senator from Minnesota will stand vindicated before the country.

Mr. DAVIS. Whatever may have been the original merits of the case, I think the side of cruelty is changed. One after another Senator rises and assails the Senator from Iowa because he has presented a case here which his constituents made it his duty to present. As to whether he should have done it before the Senator elect was sworn in or not, is a question which I hold he had a right to decide for himself. If he considered the accusation such as disqualified him for a seat, the Senate being the judge of the qualification of its own members, he had a right to raise that question before the Senator elect was sworn in. If he preferred to present the question in that form, rather than to ask after he had been sworn in that he should be expelled from the Senate, I do not see what right there is to arraign the Senator from Iowa for the act. A duty was imposed upon him, and I, for one, cannot subscribe to this general arraignment of the Senator for the manner in which he has performed it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved and seconded that the Hon. HENRY M. RICE, one of the Senators from Minnesota, whose credentials have been read, be now sworn in as a member of the Senate. The question is upon that motion.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. RICE having taken the oath prescribed by law, was admitted to his seat in the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Legislature of the State of Minnesota, in the joint convention which elected Senators, passed a resolution on the subject of their tenure. It is a question of some trouble and difficulty, and I move that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia moves that a certain resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HALE. Let it be read.

The Secretary read the following paper, attested by the Speaker of the House of Representatives and President of the Senate of Minnesota:

"At a regular session of the Legislature of Minnesota, convened in joint convention in the Hall of the House of Representatives, on Saturday, the 19th day December, 1857, the following resolution was passed, by a vote of 65 in the affirmative to 31 in the negative:

"Resolved, That it is the wish of this convention that HENRY M. RICE shall represent the State of Minnesota in the Senate of the United States for the long term."

The motion to refer was agreed to.

Mr. RICE. I rise, Mr. President, under very peculiar and painful circumstances, for the first time in the Senate. Of the statement just made by the Senator from Iowa, I had no knowledge. I knew not that there were any papers here objecting to the sale, or the manner in which it was conducted. I had no notice verbally or otherwise that he would take the course he has. I am so much astonished at the proceeding that I cannot express my feelings here. It would not be proper for me to do so under the circumstances. I will merely state, however, that that land was sold in exact accordance with the instructions of the Secretary of War, and in accordance with the wishes of the settlers; and that, had the Senator taken the trouble to examine the papers on file in the War Department, he would have found that there is not one word of truth in the statements he has made. I shall demand an investigation; and I here pledge myself to the Senate that if, in that investigation, there is a single fact found that will impugn my motive or my action as a Government officer and as a man, I shall resign my seat. I leave the Senate and the country to judge of the motives of the Senator from Iowa for the singular course he has seen fit to pursue.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the papers submitted by the Senator from Iowa, in regard to the representations prejudicial to the Senator from Minnesota, be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. HARLAN. I propose to amend the motion of the honorable Senator from New York, or, if he will consent, I will offer a resolution on the subject.

Mr. SEWARD. Very well.

Mr. HARLAN. I present the resolution, and ask for its consideration now:

Whereas, the settlers on Fort Crawford reservation, in the State of Iowa, allege that they have been defrauded by Mr. HENRY M. RICE, as agent of Hon. John B. Floyd, Secretary of War, in the sale of their claims as settlers on said reservation, namely:

1. That said Secretary of War instructed HENRY M. RICE to sell to the settlers on said reservation their claims at $1.25 per acre; that said RICE required said settlers to pay for their claims at the rate of $1.50 per acre, and received to them, on the payment of said $1.50 per acre, for but $1.25 per acre, and refused to receipt to them for the remaining twenty five cents per acre received of them by him, as aforesaid.

2. That sundry cases in which settlers applied to said RICE for leave to enter their said claims, he referred them to his clerk, who charged them fees varying from ten to eighty dollars each, in addition to the said $1.50 per acre, for leave to purchase their said claims; that these fees were charged and received by the said RICE, corruptly, as said settlers believe, through the interposition of his clerk.

3. That said RICE negligently failed to give said settlers reasonable notice of the time of said sale, and thereby subjected them to the necessity of borrowing money at enormous rates of interest, with which to purchase their said claims.

4. That said RICE defrauded one of said settlers of his rights to purchase his claim under the instruction of the Secretary of War, by surreptitiously securing from him a quit claim to a part of the land embraced in said claim: Therefore,

Resolved, That a committee be appointed to investigate the allegations of fraud and extortion made against HENRY M. RICE, as agent of the Secretary of War, in the sale of the Fort Crawford reservation, by settlers on said reservation, and that said committee have power to send for persons and papers.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I prefer that the resolution should lie over. I wish to examine it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The consideration of the resolution being objected to, it must lie over.

Mr. CRITTENDEN subsequently rose and said: The credentials of the Hon. JAMES SHIELDS, as a Senator from Minnesota, were some time ago presented by me, and laid on the table. I ask that they be taken up and read; and that General SHIELDS be admitted to his seat.

The credentials were read; and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to Mr. SHIELDS, he took his seat in the Senate.

FISHING BOUNTIES.

Mr. CLAY. I suppose we may now return to our cod fish. [Laughter.]

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 10) is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, after the very able arguments, occupying some eight or ten hours of the time of the Senate in opposition to the bill which I have introduced, I might be excused for claiming the attention of the Senate for at least one hour, for it requires a great deal longer time and many more words to expose the fallacy of a sophism or of an assertion than it does to make it. But, sir, I intend to be as brief as I can be, in order to vindicate myself from some seeming aspersions, and in order to sustain the positions which I have assumed; and I promise the Senate that I shall not occupy more than twenty or thirty minutes of their time.

I must say in the outset, that I do not think the opponents of this bill, the advocates of the cod-fishing bounty, have conducted this debate with that candor and fairness and justice which ought to characterize our debates if we design to arrive at the truth. Many things have been lugged into this debate which are wholly impertinent, and not only impertinent but improper. It has been insinuated, Mr. President, though not directly charged, that this movement was prompted by a spirit of sectionalism. I challenge Senators to show anything in my course on this or any kindred measure in the Senate, which warrants such an imputation against me. It is not, it is insinuated, because it is a bounty, but because it is conferred upon the citizens of two States of this Union—the States of Maine and Massachusetts—that I have moved its repeal. My whole course as a member of the Senate, will show that I have been an opponent of the bounty system in every shape and form in which it has been preferred. My course in the committees of which I have been a member will sustain this assertion, and will show that I have been disposed to mete the same benefits and burdens to the people of every section of this Union. Sir, this is a sectional interest; and because I assail it as a sectional interest, I am charged with being a sectional man, by insinuation at least. It is an interest confined to a small locality, to an inconsiderable number of persons, and to a particular class; and for that reason, I have assailed it as unwarranted by the spirit and theory of this Government, and as unwarranted by any clause of the Federal Constitution.

I am charged, too, by insinuation, with assailing the labor of the country. Wherein? How do I assail the labor of the country in proposing the repeal of this bounty? Do I propose to take anything from the fruits of the labor of the cod fishermen? Do I propose to take anything earned in the sweat of their faces from them? I propose to impose no burdens on them; I propose to subtract nothing from their legitimate earnings; but I propose to take a burden off the remainder of the community; and because I do this, I am told that I am assailing the labor of the country!

We are told that the labor of the country requires protection at this time. Well, sir, what is constitutional, legitimate, and just protection? I have been taught to believe that it is simply securing to each man the fruits of his own labor; it is simply securing the right of earning his bread by the sweat of his brow; but from the arguments on the other side, I must believe that they think that protection consists in partiality to a particular industrial interest. Protection with them is taxing the many for the benefit of the few. Protection with them is exacting tribute of thirty million people in order to encourage the industry of some two thousand. That kind of protection I repudiate. That kind I will never practice.

Again, sir, it has been charged that I have denied that the fisheries of other countries or of the United States have contributed anything to their naval power or to our naval power. I said no such thing. It has been said that I denied that this was a nursery of seamen. I did no such thing. All I maintained was that it was not the nursery of seamen, that it was not indispensable to maintain a navy; that we had other resources independent of the cod fishery.

Again, we have heard a great deal in the way of encomium upon the patriotism of the fishermen, upon the courage, prowess, and patriotism illustrated by them in our last war with England and in our revolution. Who disputes it? Who has endeavored to disparage their claim to these virtues? I have not, nor has one who has advocated this bill.

Now, sir, why occupy the time of the Senate with an elaborate history of the fisheries? This may be very instructive and entertaining to those who have not read, as I have, the speech of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] made many years ago, and the speech of Mr. Scudder, in the House of Representatives, in 1852, and the report of Mr. Sabine. But what is the object of this recitation of the history of the fisheries—not merely of the cod fisheries, but of all the fisheries of all the nations of the earth? It is by a species of logical legerdemain to impute all the credit, all the good results arising from the various fisheries to the cod fishery. It is an attempt to absorb for the cod fishery all the benefits and all the glories of the various fisheries that have ever existed in the world.

Mr. President, I do not think that I am guilty of any egotism, or of a want of respect for the opponents of this bill when I say that the speech I made the other day has not been answered by them; that they have not met the positions which I there laid down. I say this, not because of any ingenuity or strength of argument on my part, but because I presented an array of facts which cannot be answered; facts which no adversary argument can impair, which no supporting argument could strengthen.

What are the grounds assumed now in opposition to this bill? We are told, in the first place, that although originally the salt duty was the source of the allowances to the fishing vessels, yet such was not the ultimate policy of the Government. We are told, in the next place, that the fisheries are the nurseries of seamen, and that we must support them on that account; and lastly, that the cod fishery could not live without the bounty. I propose very briefly to answer these positions.

In the argument which I endeavored to make the other day, I assumed that the inducements to the laws which existed in 1792, did not now exist, and I proved it. I proved it by figures. I showed that while, in 1792, the tonnage in the cod fishery constituted one eighth of the entire tonnage of the nation, at this day it constitutes but a forty-eighth part; that while, in 1792, the value of exported cod fish constituted more than one sixth of the entire value of the domestic exports of the United States, at this day it constitutes but one sixth hundredth part. I showed that, instead of contributing about one sixth of the revenue of the United States, as in 1792, at this day it subtracts $12 50 where it puts one in; that if it contributes $26,000 in the way of duties upon imported salt used in curing the fish, it subtracts $300,000 in the way of bounty. I attack it as a bounty. I said that the inducements presented by its advocates in 1792, did not exist, and that has not been denied. I said that the reason for the law no longer existed, and therefore it should be repealed. That has been partially denied, and to that I invoke the attention of the Senate for a few moments.

Here I must remark a discrepancy between the arguments of the advocates of fishing allowances in this day and in 1792, and between the advocates on this floor at this time. I showed the other day that originally the Representatives of the several New England States repelled the charge of claiming any bounty for the cod fishery, that they came forward and said they claimed justice but no favors. In order to refresh the recollection of Senators, and strengthen somewhat the position I assumed, I call attention to what was said by Mr. Gerry, and which I did not read the other day. In the opening of his remarks, he said, in February, 1792:

"The State of Massachusetts asks nothing more than equal justice. We do not come forward to request favors from the United States; we only wish that the same system which is applied to other parts of the Union may be applied to us. But in examining this question, we wish that gentlemen would not make distinctions which will not admit of a difference.

"The proposed allowance has been called a bounty on occupation, and is said to be very different from that encouragement which is the incidental result of a general commercial system, but in reality it is no bounty: a bounty is a grant made without any consideration whatever as an equivalent; and I have no idea of a bounty which admits of receiving from the person on whom it is conferred the amount of what is granted. We have imposed a duty on salt, and thereby draw a certain sum of money from the fishermen. The drawback is, in all instances, the amount of the money received. This is all we ask; and we ask it for a set of men who are as well entitled to the regard of Government as any other class of citizens."

Such was the idea presented by all the advocates of the act of 1792. I showed furthermore, by a mathematical demonstration, that upon the predicate presented by the advocates of that change of the system from a drawback of duties to the shipper of the fish to an allowance upon the tonnage, the amount received in tonnage allowance did not exceed the drawback. And yet, notwithstanding the act itself declares upon its face that it is a mere commutation and equivalent for the drawback; notwithstanding the advocates of the act declared in every speech which they made that they asked no favors but merely justice, that they asked no bounty but simply the equivalent of a drawback, notwithstanding the act was construed so long as it existed as according nothing more than an equivalent for the drawback so construed by the fishermen themselves, as I showed in their petitions to Congress; notwithstanding all this array of facts, notwithstanding the clearest inductions of moral reasoning and even of demonstrations of mathematics, Senators come here and tell us that when the system was changed, it was intended as bounty. True, the Senator from Maine who first addressed us [Mr. HAMLIN] said that up to 1813 it was in the nature of a drawback or its equivalent, and then the system was changed. His colleague, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] however, who followed him, said that the change was made in the act of 1792; and the Senator from New York, [Mr. SEWARD,] who succeeded him, either because he was less informed or because he was less cautious in his assertions, declared that bounty had been the invariable policy of the country. Now, sir, in 1807 the previous acts were repealed; and what was the language of the repealing act? One section of it will show how this allowance was construed at that day, how all previous allowances under the acts of 1792 and of 1797, and of 1800, were then construed. In the second section of the repealing act it is provided:

"That from and after the 1st day of January next, so much of any act as allows a bounty on pickled fish in lieu of drawback of the duties on the salt employed in curing the same, and so much of any act as makes allowances to the owners and crews of fishing vessels in lieu of drawback of the duties paid on the salt used by the same, shall be, and the same is hereby, repealed."

Up to that period of time, then, you cannot deny that drawback, or an equivalent for drawback, and no bounty, was what was designed to be given. You cannot deny that position unless you impute to the framers and advocates of these laws, to your predecessors, the Senators and Representatives from New England in the two Houses of Congress, either ignorance of what they asserted or deliberate falsehood and fraud. I will show that such was the fact in respect to the act of 1813, and that if you get the bounty by persuading Senators that bounty was intended, you do it by bankrupting the honest fame of your predecessors on both floors of Congress; that if you can build up this bounty by such arguments, it will be upon the ruin of the reputation of the men who framed the laws, because they were either guilty of dissimulation, or the laws were framed as I assert, merely for the purpose of giving an equivalent for a drawback, but no bounty.

The Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] who first addressed the Senate in opposition to this bill, said, that while he conceded that up to 1813 the allowance was contingent upon the salt duty, and was intended as an equivalent for the salt duty, yet in 1813 the system was changed. Here is what he said:

"The last law on the subject, which was passed in 1813, gave a bounty in words, and it fixed it upon the tonnage of the vessels, and that bounty was regulated according to the size of the vessel. It is true that in the same bill a duty of twenty cents a bushel was imposed upon salt; but the fair interpretation of that act is, that it gave precisely what was asked."

"Just think of such a construction, Mr. President: 'gave precisely what was asked!' It imputes either a most reckless prodigality on the part of the framers of this law, or a most laudable abnegation of self on the part of the advocates of the fishing bounty, as I shall show before I have concluded. He continues:

"It was a departure from the old rule of making the allowance of the fishermen depend upon the amount of the duty upon salt. Besides, that same bill also allowed a drawback, giving to the fishermen a drawback and a bounty. That bill, by its terms, I say, proves clearly an intention to depart from the system which had marked the earlier period of the Government, when they did what they supposed was sufficient for the protection of the fishermen. The terms of that bill are conclusive that Congress designed to depart from the earlier policy of the bill, and to allow a certain bounty, on which the fishermen might rely. Did Congress, then, provide, as they did in any other bills, that the amount the fishermen should receive should depend upon the amount of salt used? Did they provide that the fishermen should use any quantity of salt? No, sir. Did they provide that the sum which the fishermen should receive should be held in the Treasury until it was ascertained what amount of salt they used? No, sir."

Now, sir, take up the act of 1813, and compare it with the previous legislation, after the tonnage allowance was adopted, and I challenge Senators to show any substantial difference in the acts. It will be found that the act of 1813 is a substantial paraphrase of the previous legislation upon the subject. It will be found that it employs the same terms in relation to tonnage allowances; that it gives the same allowance upon tonnage; that it fixes the same maximum of allowance; that it requires the same division of the allowance between the owner and the fishermen; that it requires the same period of employment at sea; that each act fixes, in the first section, the salt duty at twenty cents; that each bill required vessels of from five to twenty tons to land, during the season, twelve quintals of fish for each ton, and that quantity of fish to be ascertained when dried, and cured fit for exportation; and that in each the allowance on tonnage or exported fish bore the same relation to the salt duty. It is certainly a most violent presumption that Congress, in reenacting substantially the same law, making the same allowance upon tonnage, in the same language, and upon the same terms and conditions, should yet have designed to change the system, should yet have designed to give bounty, and not an equivalent for drawback. It is very singular that, as in the previous acts, the salt duty is fixed at twenty cents in the first section, and the salt duty and the allowances are found together in the same act; it is very singular that by that act, as by the previous acts, no allowance was made to the whale fisheries; and yet Senators will find that in the report of Mr. Jefferson, as Secretary of State in 1791, he states that the whale fishery, like the cod fishery, is a poor business. He says, to use his own language, "that the business, unaided, is a wretched one;" and he devotes the larger portion of that report to show the necessity of fostering the whale fishery as a nursery of scamen, because it was unable to stand alone, and had never succeeded without governmental aid in other countries. And yet Congress did not, in 1792, make any allowance to that on its tonnage; and it did not make any allowance in 1813. Why did it not do so? Because the whale fishermen did not consume salt; because they did not use salt in curing fish.

Now, take up the allowance made under the act of 1813, and I say it is susceptible of mathematical demonstration that the allowance was in proportion to the salt duty, and that those who passed the act designed to give nothing more than the salt duty. Thus, the allowance on vessels of thirty tons and upwards was $4 per ton. On a vessel of sixty tons, it is true, it would give an excess of $24 above the aggregate of duties, because the duty at thirty cents, allowing twelve bushels of salt to the ton, as they claimed, would have been $3 60 the ton, which would have made in the aggregate $216; whereas, $4 a ton would be $240. But when you come to all vessels under that in amount of tonnage, you find that the allowance fell short of the duty or drawback. Thus, on vessels from twenty to thirty tons $2 40 was allowed by that act, which was $1 20 per ton less than the salt duty, which was then twenty cents on the weighed bushel of fifty-six pounds, or thirty cents on the measured bushel. So on vessels of from five to twenty tons the allowance was but $1 60, which was $2 less than the salt duty to the ton.

Thus in the aggregate it would appear that really less was given in the way of allowance than would have been received in the way of drawback. Such is the argument that was used as an inducement to Congress to pass this act of 1813; and to establish that fact, I call the attention of the Senate to what was said by Mr. John Reed, of Massachusetts. Pending this very act, on the 16th of July, 1813, Mr. Reed said:

"The amendment now under consideration, to the bill laying a duty of twenty cents per bushel on imported salt, makes an allowance to vessels engaged in the cod fisheries under certain limitations and restrictions as therein provided, and also allows a drawback on the exportation of pickled fish and salted provisions. The allowance and drawback above mentioned are intended as an equivalent to the duty paid on the salt used in curing and preserving fish and meat."

"I would state to this House that, in the curing and preserving cod fish, great quantities of salt, especially in comparison with the value of fish cured and preserved, are absolutely requisite. I believe the remark equally true, as it respects pickled fish."

"If a duty of twenty cents per bushel be laid on all foreign salt, as contemplated by the bill on your table, and the proposed amendment should not prevail, this tax would be oppressive on fishermen beyond all precedent or endurance."

"I will not for a moment believe any gentleman in this House, while he complains of burdens about to be laid on his own constituents, almost too heavy to be borne, will consent to lay burdens one hundred fold heavier on any portion of the inhabitants of any section of the United States."

"Again, by the Constitution we have no power to tax the exports of our own country; and by a provision in the bill on your table, conformable to the uniform policy of the country, when salt imported is again exported, a drawback is allowed. If no duty can be laid on our own exports, and a drawback of duties paid be allowed on the exportation of foreign merchandise, I am unable to perceive any good reason, founded either in justice or the fitness of things, why those who pay the duties on salt necessarily used in preserving fish and meats should not be entitled to the like advantages on the exportation of the same, as they would have been, if the salt had not been usefully employed. It can certainly be no objection in the mind of any man that the salt is incorporated with the fish—a production of this country of so little profit to the fisherman, and so highly advantageous to the United States. The quantity of salt necessarily used can be easily ascertained. I do not believe the allowance proposed adequate to the duty on salt which must necessarily be used."

Again, in 1816, when an attempt was made to repeal this act of 1813, I find that the repealing law being under consideration, Mr. Reed—the same man, I suppose—said:

"We ought, as far as possible, so to impose taxes as to operate equally on all, and oppressively on none. The high price of salt in some places is not owing to the duty, but to the expense of transportation."

"The amount of drawback mentioned by the honorable gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. Stanford,] paid some years ago, probably includes the drawback then allowed on salted provisions, on which a drawback is not now allowed. If not, it has not been proved that the drawback at that time exceeded the duty paid on salt actually used in the fisheries. The sum of four dollars per ton allowed to fishing vessels which have been employed four months, in lieu of a drawback, may, in some instances, exceed the duty on salt used; but I do not believe, on the whole, it is an equivalent."

"We are told by the honorable gentleman from Virginia [Mr. Randolph] that he has been informed, by a respectable and intelligent man, that the fishing business failed after the repeal of the salt duty; that, perhaps, the debenture certificate might be very convenient for those poor men engaged in the fisheries, to purchase whatever they might need for the voyage, or for their families."

"In the first place, it is not a fact that, on the whole, the fisheries declined in consequence of the repeal of the salt duty."

I call the attention of Senators to that fact. It was stated here the other day, in argument, by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] that the cod fishery declined after the repeal of the bounty, as he styled it, in 1807, in consequence of that repeal. Here we find that one of his predecessors, from the State of Massachusetts, advocating the interests of the cod fisheries, declared that such was not the fact. He said further:

"There were more vessels engaged in the fishing business in 1807 than at any former period. Since that period, other causes have destroyed the fisheries. But had the honorable gentleman been correct in his information on the subject, he himself, in the close of his statement, offered a sufficient reason for their decline, to wit: that poor men engaged in the fisheries wanted ready money, which was obtained by their debentures during the continuance of the duty on salt, and not, as has been intimated, that the drawback exceeds the duty. Indeed, from what I have been able to learn on the subject from men engaged in the business, I do not believe the drawback exceeds the duty. I believe those engaged in the fisheries have paid this year as much duty on salt, over and above the drawback, as farmers who possess property of equal value."

Again, in 1827, when a further attempt was

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 131.

made to repeal these bounties, I find it was alleged by Mr. Holmes, of Maine, that—

"The bounty on the fisheries was established at the same time that the duty was first levied on salt, and was considered as a kind of drawback upon that duty; and the reason of it was, that many gentlemen had scruples as to the power of Congress to give a bounty on any successful enterprise. These doubts would have entirely prevented the encouragement of the fisheries, as a nursery for seamen, had it not been for this combination of the two provisions. Great injury to our commercial interests would have arisen out of a failure to allow this bounty; and he was opposed to the bill, in the first place, because it would bring with it, as a natural consequence, the repeal of this bounty—not that any such proposition was made in the bill, but from the fact that both of the provisions were connected; therefore, what affected the one must touch the other. Now, sir, (said Mr. H.) I think it is of great importance to retain this bounty. It is given on the tonnage of the vessel, not according to the success of the fisheries; and if fishermen remain six months in this employment, they share the bounty, let their voyage prove successful or not." "It was doubted now, as well as formerly, whether Congress had a right to fix this bounty, except as a kind of drawback upon the duties on salt; and if they repealed the duty, the drawback would follow."

Thus, sir, it will appear on an examination of the debates in Congress upon the subject of repealing the salt duty, that, incidentally, the allowance to the fisheries was made in every debate; and that, in every discussion upon the revival of the salt duty in 1813, and the attempt to repeal it in 1816, in 1818, and in 1827, in each and every one of these debates it was maintained that the allowance was not an equivalent for the drawback or the duty. Hence, sir, I say that the position now assumed that bounty was intended to be given, and not a mere drawback or equivalent for drawback, is an afterthought. I show that the advocates of these laws before they passed, and after they passed, as late as 1828, maintained that the fisherman had nothing more than the return of his own money, that you gave him nothing. That you merely repaid the money he had advanced you, or, in the language of Mr. Madison, you simply paid a debt to him; yet we are told to-day that it was designed to be bounty.

Mr. President, I will not argue this question further with the Senators. I repeat that if what they say be true, and if, as intimated by the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] there was a design to allow something more than an equivalent for the drawback of the duty, then his predecessors on this floor were guilty of dissimulation and falsehood, in order to achieve a fraud upon the Treasury, and their brother Representatives and Senators in Congress at that day. I have said that the effects of these laws are far different at this day from what they were when they were passed. That I have demonstrated. I have shown that instead of realizing a mere drawback for the duty, they are realizing twelve and a half dollars from the Treasury where they put one dollar in. I will not protract the discussion on that point.

But, sir, we are told that this is the nursery of seamen; and how do the Senators undertake to prove that? They expatiate at length upon the value of the fisheries—not the cod fishery. They tell us what the fisheries of other countries have achieved for their naval power, and what ours have done for our naval power. The question which I submitted to them, and which they have not answered, was this: why it was that the whale fishery and the mackerel fishery and other fisheries of the United States could not furnish seamen as well as the cod fishery? What was the peculiarity of cod catching that entitled it to this preference? That question they have not answered, and they cannot answer it. Why, sir, Mr. Cooper, who, perhaps, understood the naval history of this country better than any other man, in writing that history, endeavoring to exhibit a type of a sailor, a model worthy of emulation, did not go to the cod fishery to find him, but he found him among the whale fishermen. I say, notwithstanding the denial of the Senator, that no man who has eyes in his head can compare the rigging of merchantmen or men-of-war or whalers with that of a fishing smack—can hesitate to see that the former are better adapted to nurturing sailors to man our vessels of war than the cod fishery.

In respect to the bounty system, I will not detain the Senate by reading authorities which I have at hand to establish the position I assumed, that the fisheries of no country, according to the historians, have prospered under the bounty system; and the best proof of it is, that England and Holland have abandoned their bounty system. According to the testimony of MacPherson, McCullough, Adams Smith, and of every writer that I have consulted on the fisheries of England, it has exercised rather a depressing than a beneficial influence. In consequence of it they have abandoned it; and, as I said before, the fishermen of Nantucket and New Bedford, in our own country, unaided by Government bounty, have outstripped the sailors of England, of France, and of Holland, with all the great bounties which were bestowed on them for two hundred years.

We are told that they cannot live without it, and that it is cruel to take from them this bounty, which is the very source of their existence. Those who will trouble themselves to read the debates in the early history of this system of tonnage allowance, will see that one of the arguments then adduced was, that the fisheries were in their infancy. They will see, too, from the legislation of Congress, that certainly it was never designed to foster these fisheries as nurseries of seamen, because none of the laws that were passed were for a longer period than ten years, and several of them were but for two years—within which time we could hardly train a nursery of seamen. Now, after enjoying for nearly seventy years the bounty of this Government—after feeding on Federal pap for nearly seventy years—we are told that this interest is still a puny pet, a mere nursing in arms, without any of the bone or muscle of manhood, in the mere gristle of infancy, and unable to stand alone. Well, sir, I ask, then, why should we foster it longer? Here is the whale fishery which, without the aid of Government bounty, has grown to such a degree that it now commands more tonnage than that of any other Government of the world. The report which I submitted to the Senate shows that, while the cod fishery, with all the favor extended to it by the Government, has only increased about three-fold since 1799, the whale fishery in the same time has multiplied forty-eight times; or, in other words, there are forty-eight times as many whaling vessels, more than thirty-seven times as much tonnage, and upwards of sixty-one times more men engaged in it now than at that time. How is it with the mackerel fishery? Mr. Scudder says that is conducted in the same kind of vessels, by the same men, at the same season of the year, in the same waters; and is attended with like toil and dangers as the catching of cod. He said, indeed, that it was better adapted as a nursery of seamen than the cod fishery, as I understand his speech; and yet the mackerel fishery has managed to live and to flourish, and, according to his testimony, to rival the cod fishery in tonnage and men employed, without the aid of Government bounty. I will read to the Senate a paragraph or two from his speech. He was the representative of the Barnstable district, the largest fishing district of New England—a district which has realized upwards of two million dollars in the way of allowances to the cod fishery. He said:

"This [the mackerel fishery] is much more fluctuating and uncertain than the cod fishery. In one season it may yield a profit, and in another prove disastrous both to owners and crew. Even in one part of the season it may be successful, and in another very unsuccessful. It seems, in a great degree, to be a chance game or lottery. The fishermen and shoremen engaged in it are of the same class as those that pursue the cod fishery; in fact, they often change a number of times in the same season from the one to the other, according to the luck. The expense and outfit are about the same in each. These fish are taken in the waters nearer the coasts than the cod fish are."

"I have already shown that the cod fishery, being patronized by the Government, returns the better profits, and employs the greater number of men; but, were the same patronage extended to the mackerel fishery, it would undoubtedly increase far beyond that of the cod fishery. It is considered a more pleasant and desirable business; it has greater attractions for the youth of the country. Though fraught with equal sea danger and toil, yet in incident and adventure it is better adapted to the enthusiasm of the young man who is about to take his first voyage upon the ocean."

"Let the Government extend its aid to this branch of our industry, and the scarcity of American seamen which now prevails would soon cease to be felt."

Thus, sir, according to the testimony of one of the advocates of these fishing bounties—who certainly ought to be as well informed as any one, the Representative of the largest fishing district in New England—the mackerel fishery, without the aid of Government bounty, quite equals the cod fishery at this day in tonnage and men employed, although its existence only dates back to 1828, or at least no license was granted to a mackerel fisherman before that time. Hence I asked, and I requested Senators, when I before addressed the Senate, to solve this question: why it was that the mackerel fishery, conducted in the same waters, under the same circumstances, without the aid of Government bounty, had grown from nothing, since 1828, up to the full stature, or nearly the full stature, of the cod fishery; and yet the cod fishery could not live without this bounty. Why, sir, the Senator from Massachusetts, with a pride of State which I thought was highly laudable, protests against this assumption. As I understood him, he said, if you take away the bounty it will not crush our industry; we can live without it; and such I doubt not is the fact. Such is the testimony of the newspaper press of New England, so far as I have read it; and if I may credit what I see stated there, there is at least a large minority of the people of the States of Maine and Massachusetts engaged in the fisheries, who desire to see this bounty system repealed.

Mr. WILSON. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to say to the Senator that I think the repeal will be injurious to the fisheries, but I do not think it will crush them. I am opposed to the repeal, but I think we shall get along, although it will bear oppressively on the fisheries, perhaps diminish them to some extent.

Mr. CLAY. The statistics which I exhibited in the table appended to my report, I think are a sufficient reply to all that may be said, certainly to all that has been said, designed to show that the fisheries cannot live without the bounty. I showed by the table that they had realized, during a series of years, from seventy-eight to one hundred and nine gross per cent. upon the capital invested. I then took, as the basis of my calculations, the statements made by this same Mr. Scudder, in which he said you must deduct fifty per cent. in order to ascertain the net earnings, and, after deducting fifty per cent. from the gross proceeds, I found still that they realized from thirty up to sixty per cent. Even, after deducting over and above that, the pay of the fishermen at the rate he estimated, still I found that they realized a larger profit than any other industrial pursuit in this country. And all this, too, is for but four months of the year; and all this is without any consideration of fishing bounty, and all this is without any consideration of the fresh fish sold which are not taken into the estimate. Hence, I say that I do not believe they need the bounty.

The fishermen of New England have enjoyed more favors of this Government than any other class of people in the Union. They complained of the duty on salt; they were relieved of that by this system of allowances in lieu of drawback. At this time that duty has sunk from thirty cents to about two cents per bushel. They complained of the duties levied upon other articles; at this time those duties are reduced in a like ratio, some of them merely nominal. They complained that they had not the privilege of fishing on the coasts of the British Provinces, and dry-curing their fish upon land; that is now secured to them by the reciprocity treaty. They complained of the want of a market for their fish. At that time we had but three million inhabitants in the United States; we now have about thirty million; and they can find a home market for all the fish which they can take. They complained of the difficulties of their coast; at this time they are better illuminated with light-houses and lights than any other portion of the coast of the United States; at this time they have about four lights for one on every other portion of the coast of the United States. In addition to that, these men are ship-builders, many of them, as I find from the speeches of some of their advocates; and they enjoy a monopoly of ship-building. These men are coasters, and pursue the coasting trade when not engaged in the fisheries; and they enjoy a monopoly of the coasting trade. Notwithstanding the bounties of this Government are lavished upon them in the way of monopoly, in the way of a reduction of duties until they are merely nominal; notwithstanding they have enjoyed an absolute, direct, and unqualified bounty for the last thirty years of the existence of this Government; yet we are told that it will be dealing very hard by them to take from them this bounty!

Mr. President, I assailed this bounty because I believed that it was unconstitutional. Instead of replying to this argument, the Senator from Maine who secondly addressed the Senate, [Mr. FESSENDEN,] seemed to consider that it was my duty to have proven it. He denied that I had proved it; but he did not attempt to show the grant to Congress under which he derived the power. I understand, as has been repeated several times, that this is a Government of specific and limited powers, and it behooves those who claim a power to prove its existence. It is not incumbent on me to prove a negative, and show that no such power exists.

But, sir, independent of the specific clauses of the Constitution to which I alluded, I say that the bounty system is contrary to the theory and spirit of this Government, and of all free Governments. Viewed in the light of natural reason, independent of all organic laws, who can say that it is just and proper to levy tribute upon thirty million people in order to swell the stores of some two or three thousand, or at most, of fifteen thousand? Suppose any number of persons, cast by shipwreck on an uninhabited island and about to form a government for themselves—can any one believe that the majority of such a people would ever agree to form a government with the understanding that nine men in the community were to contribute a portion of their earnings in order to swell the resources of a tenth? Would any government ever be organized on such principles? Never. I look upon this as involving a principle far more important than the inconsiderable sum of bounty which is annually paid. I look upon it as involving a principle which is destructive to the integrity of this Government. This Government has no power to confer bounties. It is an attribute of absolute sovereignty. The right to give bounties to some involves the right to rob others; because Government has nothing to give that she does not take away from some of her citizens, and it is upon that ground mainly that I attack it.

Mr. President, I will not occupy the time of the Senate longer. There is much more that I wish to say, but I know the impatience of the Senate, and I do not suppose that anything I shall say will influence the vote.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, [Mr. HAMLIN,] to strike out "1859," and insert "1865."

Mr. CLAY. Before the vote is taken on that, I will simply say, what I said the other day, that I give them two years' time, which is as long as several of the acts passed originally contemplated that the allowance should be given. I give them as long as was intended to be given by the laws passed for their benefit. In addition to that, if they are allowed until the close of next year, and realize the average bounty they have gotten during the last ten years, they will receive near seven hundred thousand dollars. If it is continued until 1865, as proposed by the Senator from Maine, they will then receive at the same annual average, $2,300,000.

Mr. HAMLIN. Do you take the average of last year?

Mr. CLAY. No; the average of the last ten years.

Mr. COLLAMER. I do not understand the gentleman. What time does the bill give?

Mr. CLAY. Until the last day of December, 1859—this year and next.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine, extending the period to 1865.

Mr. IVERSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, King, Seward, Simmons, Shields, Stuart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Sidel, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Yulee—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HAMLIN. At the time I moved that amendment, it was suggested by some Senators here that I had better make the time five years, instead of seven years; but knowing, as I did, that it would not embrace one half of the time the navigation employed in this business would exist, I preferred to try that term of years. I now move to amend by striking out "1859" and inserting "1863," which will give five years for those engaged in the business to get out of it. I wish to make a remark in response to a suggestion which was made by the Senator from Louisiana, [Mr. BENJAMIN,] If I understood him aright, he said he was willing to give some period of time, sufficient to enable them to divert their navigation to other purposes. Now, I know it to be true that the construction and size of the fishing vessel, both render it unfit for any other business; and therefore I hope I shall have his vote for this limited period of five years. I have nothing further to say.

Mr. CLAY. I trust this amendment will not prevail, for reasons which I have assigned before. As I have said before, giving them two years is giving them as long a time as it was proposed by many of the original laws that this allowance should extend to. If it be extended for five years, they must realize in that time, at the present average, about one million eight hundred thousand dollars of bounty. I trust it will not prevail, and I ask for the yeas and nays upon it.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 27, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, King, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Sidel, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, and Yulee—28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PUGH. I move to amend the first section of the bill by adding the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal or affect the fifth section of the act entitled "An act reducing the duty on imports and for other purposes," approved the 30th day of July, in the year 1846.

I will read that section so that it may be understood:

"SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That from and after the 1st day of December next, in lieu of the bounty heretofore authorized by law to be paid on the exportation of pickled fish of the fisheries of the United States, there shall be allowed, on the exportation thereof, if cured with foreign salt, a drawback, equal in amount to the duty paid on the salt, and no more, to be ascertained under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

I am willing to leave them with that drawback, as given by the act of 1846.

Mr. CLAY. I do not think the bill really needs that amendment; but I will show the Senator how to compass the same object in fewer words. The bill now reads:

"That from and after the 31st day of December, 1859, all acts and parts of acts giving and allowing bounties to vessels employed in the bank or other cod fisheries be, and the same are, hereby repealed."

I propose, instead of the Senator's amendment, to strike out the words, "and allowing bounties to," and, in lieu thereof, to insert, "allowances or bounties on tonnage," which will distinguish them from the drawbacks. At the same time I will call the attention of the Senator to the fact that originally, under all the laws, from 1789 up to 1807, the same drawback was allowed on the exportation of salted provisions, on beef and pork, that was allowed on exported fish; and at this day, while the value of exported fish is but little over half a million dollars, the value of exported beef and pork exceeds four millions. It is eight times as great with no drawback at all; but still I am willing to allow that. I suggest to the Senator from Ohio that the object he desires will be embraced within fewer words, and in much simpler language, instead of his amendment, by making that which I have suggested.

Mr. PUGH. I have no objection to the form of the amendment. I was well aware of the discrepancy to which my friend alludes, but my object was to show that we were not disposed to deal with a harsh hand, and that these parties were really substantially still left in possession of the drawback originally designed to be given to them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not care anything about this particular proposition one way or the other; but I will suggest to the Senators that if the object be what they state, this will not effect it, for pickled fish and cured cod fish are very different things. This gives no drawback on the latter.

Mr. CLAY. It leaves the drawbacks just where the law now puts them.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Exactly; but the drawbacks are given on pickled fish, and the bounty on tonnage is given to cod fish—dried fish. The drawback is on mackerel and other pickled fish. This proposition leaves the bounty on pickled fish which is quite easy fishing, and takes it off from the dangerous fishing.

Mr. PUGH. I withdraw my amendment if the Senator from Alabama will propose to amend the bill as he suggested.

Mr. CLAY. Yes, sir. My amendment is, in lines four and five, to strike out the words "and allowing bounties to," and to insert "allowances or bounties on tonnage of."

Mr. POLK. I understand from the Senator from Maine that pickled fish is a very different thing from dried cod fish, and I want to know whether, by the amendment of the Senator from Alabama, dried and salted cod fish will be entitled to drawback just as pickled fish?

Mr. FESSENDEN. Not at all.

Mr. POLK. I would suggest to the Senator from Alabama that they ought to stand on the same level.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator would also think, I suppose, that the beef and pork which his people cure and export, ought to have the same allowance in the way of drawback. They consume a vast deal more salt, and by parity of reasoning you ought to extend it to them all. Even when this bill shall pass, the cod fishermen will still enjoy, on all their exported pickled fish, a drawback which is not accorded to the beef and pork packers of the West, although they contribute upwards of four million dollars in value of exports, and the cod fishermen but little over half a million.

Mr. POLK. The object of my remark was this: not that these cod fishermen ought to have a bounty that others may unjustly have, but that the remedy has not gone quite far enough. I think myself the beef and pork in the western country are just as much entitled to drawback as pickled fish or cod fish, and I am not willing that either pickled fish or cod fish shall be left in a better position than beef.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator from New Hampshire to propose an amendment.

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir; it is on the table, and I want to have a vote on it.

The Secretary read Mr. HALE's amendment, which is to add the following as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That all laws establishing a naval school at Annapolis, and a military school at West Point, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. HALE. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 13, nays 39; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Durkee, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Johnson of Tennessee, Trumbull, and Wade—13.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, King, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Toombs, Wilson, and Yulee—39.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ALLEN. I propose this amendment as an additional section:

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That all duties on salt imported into the United States from and after the 31st day of December, 1859, be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

Mr. MASON. Before the question is put on ordering the yeas and nays to be taken, I would suggest, as my impression, that this amendment is not in order, because it is affecting the revenue, and the Senate, as we are all aware, is not the body to originate any measure concerning the raising of revenue, whether it comes in the form of an amendment, or an original proposition.

Mr. HUNTER. That has been decided, on solemn decision by the Senate, upon a bill introduced by Mr. McDuffie, when Senator from South Carolina. It was returned by the Committee on Finance with a resolution that it was unconstitutional, and in that resolution, I believe, every Senator but four or five concurred. Certainly it is out of order.

Mr. HALE. I should like to inquire whether that bill of Mr. McDuffie did not, in some particular case, raise the revenue? We certainly cannot originate revenue bills here; but I never heard that we could not amend them or could not diminish the amount of duty.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. McDuffie would not have been apt to present a bill raising the revenue, but his bill reduced it.

Mr. STUART. This is no question of order, certainly; even if the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] is right, he does not pretend that it is a question of order to be decided by the Chair.

Mr. MASON. I submitted it to the Senator who offered the proposition for his consideration.

Mr. HUNTER. It is a question of order. If the Constitution says no such bills shall originate here, it is as much a question of order as if our rules had said so. It is the very highest question of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. The provision of the Constitution is, that bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. In the case referred to by the Senator from Virginia, [Mr. HUNTER,] the bill introduced by the Senator from South Carolina proposed that after such a time, the duties should be twenty per cent. upon all importations. If that had passed, it would have been the revenue bill of the country, and twenty per cent. would then have been the rate to be levied. But this will not be a revenue bill when it passes. That bill would have been the revenue bill of the country, if it had been adopted by Congress, and therefore it could not originate in the Senate; but this will not be a revenue bill if you pass it. It is competent to make anything free in a bill here, but it would not be competent to leave a dutiable article in a bill that originated here. That, I think, is a clear distinction.

Mr. STUART. The suggestion I wish to make is this: it never would do for the Senate of the United States to hold that the Vice President of the United States could, upon a question of order, determine whether they could consider a subject at all; that would never answer, even if the Senator was right, that this is a revenue bill beyond all question. But, sir, this is not a proposition falling within the provision of the Constitution; it does not propose to raise revenue. In the first place it is an amendment; and though it is not allowable to make such an amendment to a bill as will cover the raising of the revenues of the country, it is competent always to introduce an amendment to abolish a particular revenue; a single provision anywhere. You can do it here as in the other House. The reason of the Constitution is very plain—that the immediate Representatives of the people should determine the manner and extent of raising the taxes of the country and imposing those taxes; but the Senate may introduce a proposition to abolish the duty on a particular article. The suggestion I make, however, is one more important than that. It is that it will never do for the Senate of the United States to say that the Vice President, who is by the Constitution made the Presiding Officer of this body, shall have power to determine whether we shall consider a subject or not.

Mr. SEWARD. Before this question is taken I want to understand the views of that portion of the Senate who sustain this proposition. If I remember rightly, the amount of revenue derived from the salt duties is $500,000; and that is a considerable item of revenue for the present year. I understand that the object of this proposition is to benefit the fishermen so much. The benefit which will result to the fishermen, as I understand the calculation, is about two thousand five hundred dollars. It will be a reduction of $2,500; so that we reduce the revenue $500,000 to make a saving of $2,500. Now I want to know how the $500,000 is to be made up—whether we are to borrow the money or not?

Mr. CLAY. I understand the Senator to object to this amendment repealing the salt duty, on the ground that it reduces the revenue.

Mr. SEWARD. I do so.

Mr. CLAY. I will tell the Senator at once how it will be made up. If this bill passes you will save to the Treasury more than is now expended in the way of bounty than you take into it in the way of duty; and I say that, without pledging myself to support the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

The VICE PRESIDENT. Before Senators speak to this amendment, the Chair will answer the question that was made on a point of order. It does not appear to the Chair that it is a proper subject for him to decide as a question of order, whether a proposed amendment is constitutional or not.

Mr. MASON. I wish to disclaim having made any question of order for the Chair to decide.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not understand the Senator from Virginia to have made it as such.

Mr. MASON. I made only a suggestion to the Senator who offered the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. Seven hundred and thirty-six thousand dollars were paid for fishing bounties during the last two years. The duty on salt, in the same period, taking the amount of salt from the printed documents, was $591,000, allowing fifteen per cent. duty on the article imported, so that the Government will save nearly two hundred thousand dollars by my proposition. The Government has paid out nearly two hundred thousand dollars more to the fishermen than it has received in duty on salt in the last two years.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the Senator from Rhode Island a question. How much do the duties on salt amount to annually?

Mr. CLAY. I can tell the Senator. They have averaged in the last decade less than three hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLEN. The allowance in 1856 was $293,000; in 1857, $298,000.

Mr. WILSON. I understand that this proposition, to abolish the duty on salt, is made for the interests of the fishermen. Now, sir, I have made some estimate upon this matter, and I think the benefit to the fishermen does not exceed twenty-five hundred dollars; and I do not believe, on a close examination, it will amount to over twenty-two hundred dollars. If Senators wish to repeal the duty on salt, I do not know that I shall interpose any objection; but if they wish to put it upon this bill, because they have stricken down this bounty of $300,000 annually, for the benefit of the fishermen, I tell them that they have taken off from the fishermen of my State $150,000, and have relieved them, by abolishing this duty on salt, to the extent of eleven or twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. BAYARD. I entirely differ with the honorable Senator from Michigan, [Mr. STUART,] as to the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island. I believe it to be clearly unconstitutional. I can view the terms used in the Constitution of the United States, that bills to raise revenue must originate in the House of Representatives—whether that provision be wise or unwise, it is immaterial—in no other light than as including any bill which increases or decreases the rates of duty. Any bill which affects the imposts of the country for the purpose of revenue, is a bill to raise revenue within the meaning of the Constitution. It meant that bills connected with the revenues of the country—that is, which either increases or diminishes them—should originate in the House of Representatives. Without that, the provision is entirely nugatory. If you can introduce into a bill for another purpose a clause which diminishes the revenue, you make a revenue bill within the intent of the Constitution. Take the case of a bill introduced in the Senate reducing, but not abolishing, all the duties imposed by the tariff act, under what law would the then duties be raised? Would they not be raised under the new law if you passed it; and would not that come within the intent and meaning of the Constitution? If you affect directly, by a diminution or increase, the imposts of the country by a bill, it is a bill to raise revenue; and the Constitution has chosen to provide that a bill of that character shall originate in the House of Representatives; and, for one, I am not willing to depart from the Constitution.

Mr. BELL. I do not pretend to enter into the argument of this question; but the more consideration I have been able to bestow on the subject, satisfies me that this is probably not a proper time to attempt to settle it. When the honorable Senator from Alabama made his argument, urging the repeal of these fishing bounties, I felt that there was great weight and force in it, and it made great impression on my mind; but questions of this description may not be proper to be decided at all times with the small degree of consideration that may be given to them here. They are connected with other great points of policy, and connected with the best interests of the country. It appears to me, after all I have heard, that although there is great strength in the argument for the abolition of these bounties, whatever strong reasons may have induced their establishment in the first place, and whatever justice and sound policy there may have been in their origin, yet this is probably not a well-timed proposition, and it had better be urged under other circumstances, and at a different time. The amendment now pending before the Senate demonstrates the sound policy of deferring the final consideration of this whole subject. Here we have presented to us the question whether we shall repeal the duties upon the importation of foreign salt; and that connects itself with the general revenue policy of the country. The original proposition in the bill of the Senator from Alabama also connects itself with great points of domestic policy.

The honorable Senator from Alabama, [Mr. CLAY,] and the honorable Senator from Florida, [Mr. MALLORY,] have undertaken to say that the doctrine of a protective policy in this country is so far discarded from the consideration of all sensible men, that there is not a Senator on this floor bold enough to avow himself the advocate of it. The bill presented by the Senator from Alabama is connected directly with that subject. It brings up the question of how far we ought to go in the protection of any great interest of the country necessary for its public defense, or its independence in time of war, or in any other aspect in which such a proposition could be presented. I beg leave to say that the Senator from Alabama and the Senator from Florida may find themselves very grossly mistaken when they undertake to assume that the policy of protection is so far abandoned that no man has the courage or the boldness now, at this late day, to stand up or maintain it, or of any restrictions upon commerce, with the view of supporting or giving encouragement to domestic industry against foreign competition. In saying this, I do not mean to say that I am in favor of the protective policy to any unlimited extent, or generally; but I am an advocate for the protective policy to a limited extent. When the suggestion to which I have just alluded was made the other day, I said to the gentleman near me, [Mr. BEXJAMIN,] "are you, as a Representative of Louisiana, willing to say that you are opposed to a protective policy to the extent that honorable Senators on the other side have avowed their opposition to it?" and so I might have said to other gentlemen representing particular interests; and when I speak of them as representing particular interests, I do not mean to say that any Senator here, who regards the great general interests of the United States, ought to govern or control his policy in this Chamber by reference to any isolated or particular or local interest.

The honorable Senator from Louisiana, when he and I came to explain our individual opinions on that subject, had no difference. The suggestion made was that no man here now was bold enough to rise up and say that he was in favor of the protective policy, and the point was, what was the meaning and extent of that declaration? As to the doctrine of a protective policy to the extent of prohibition, with regard to manufactures of every description, of all articles that it is possible, by due protection, to manufacture in this country even to the extent of an adequate supply for the wants of the country, no man will have the courage to stand up here and maintain it; and since I have been in Congress I have never heard a man bold enough to advocate such a doctrine as that. Then what is the doctrine? Why, in the exercise of the revenue power under the Constitution, is it judicious and expedient and proper, in laying duties for purposes of revenue, to protect those articles of domestic production and manufacture, in regard to which we know that, by reasonable protection against the cheap labor of foreign countries in the manufacture of similar articles, we can supply as good and actually better articles than could be imported from foreign countries. To that extent I find that I do not differ from any gentleman who views the doctrine of free trade. But, sir, I saw, at the last session of Congress, that a majority of this body were in favor of the broad doctrine of free trade, and were willing, so far as I could judge from the test of a vote which was deliberately taken, (not with any great consideration, to be sure, but it was put upon record,) to abolish all indirect taxation and resort to internal duties and imposts. I think gentlemen will find many Senators on this floor to have the boldness to stand up and protest against that.

I have made these remarks for the purpose of showing that not only I, but, I presume, many other Senators, are ready to protest against the statement that there is no gentleman on this floor bold enough to advocate a protective policy. On this occasion, the view which I take of the propriety of our action has no reference to the question of order and constitutional law, though I concur with the honorable Senator from Delaware, that a proposition either to diminish or increase the revenue is not allowable in this body under the provisions of the Constitution. I think these propositions to abolish the bounty on the cod fishery, and to repeal the duty on salt, and the whole discussion of the subject, and the complication in which it has been presented, connecting itself as it does with the question of the protection of domestic products of the country—agricultural as well as manufacturing—show that this is not the proper occasion for deciding the question. I presume it will be admitted by every gentleman that our tariff requires regulation and readjustment. That some readjustment, some new regulations of some sort or other must of necessity be resorted to, even in order to support the Government itself, I think will be admitted by every Senator who will examine the subject candidly. Is not this question of the bounty upon the cod fishery a proper matter to be taken into consideration when we shall have a general overhauling of our tariff and commercial regulations? Would it not be more fit and proper then than on the present occasion, at least?

It seems to me in some views of the subject to be particularly ill-timed to press such a proposition as this now. It is not a very great matter, to be sure; but any gentleman who reflects on the subject must see that it connects itself more or less with the general revenue policy of the country, its domestic protection, its foreign trade, its internal trade, the protection to the maritime interests of the country and the military and commercial marine. There is no one of these topics that you can separate and divide from the others in such manner that you can say that you see your way clear as to how the matter ought to be decided. I think this bill ought to be postponed until we have leisure, until the time arrives when the dominant party in the Senate, if you please, (though I dislike to speak of party,) when those gentlemen who have been in the habit of turning their attention to these matters will find it proper and expedient to take up the general subjects, and to have these points of policy in relation to fisheries and all others connected with the doctrine of bounty and protection and drawbacks settled together. They are kindred; they are cognate questions.

As I have already said, I see strong reasons why, perhaps, this bounty should cease, although it may originally have been founded upon sound policy, which may have justified its continuance up to this time; and I would be willing, on a proper occasion, to give a vote to that effect; but I am not willing now to take up this isolated point, connected with the great general policy of protection and bounties and foreign commerce and domestic commerce, and the maintenance of the commercial and military marine of the country. The question of these uncommon and anomalous allowances to fishermen, it seems to me, would be properly considered in a general settlement of the policy of the country in regard to its commerce and manufactures. If I had any encouragement for doing so, if I thought it would meet the sense of the Senate, I would move to postpone this bill until the next session of Congress at least; for I see that, from our having decided to adjourn on the 7th of June, we shall not have time at this session to give proper consideration to the general question connected with the revenues of the country, in regard to the tariff and our internal policy; and that we shall have to postpone it until the next session. I repeat, if I had sufficient encouragement, I would move to postpone the consideration of this bill until the next session. ["Try it."] I make the motion to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the first Monday of December next.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senate seems not to be full, and perhaps we had better adjourn and take the vote to-morrow, if we can fix an hour. ["Oh no."] I will not make the motion.

Mr. CLAY. I ask for the yeas and nays on the postponement.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PUGH. We have debated this question four or five times as long as we debated the whole revision of the tariff, last year, and now we are to put it off again. I hope we shall decide it before we adjourn.

Mr. MASON. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. POLK. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. YULEE. I ask the Senator from Virginia to withdraw his motion for the purpose of enabling me to move an executive session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays having been ordered, it requires the unanimous consent of the Senate to allow the motion to be withdrawn.

Mr. MASON. I ask the consent of the Senate to withdraw my motion.

Mr. HALE and others objected.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 5, nays 47; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clay, Crittenden, Davis, Mason, and Pearce—5.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Clingman, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, King, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—47.

So the Senate refused to adjourn; and the question recurred upon the motion of Mr. BELL to postpone the further consideration of the bill until the first Monday in December next.

The question being taken, resulted—yeas 26, nays 26; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Crittenden, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, King, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—26.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Yulee—26.

The VICE PRESIDENT voting in the negative, the motion to postpone was not agreed to; and the question occurred on the amendment of Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not wish to multiply words or prolong the decision by debate; I merely want to save the point. It is a matter of some importance to us. Certainly the Finance Committee have been acting for years on the supposition that we had no right to meddle with the tariff, either to raise it or to depress it; and we founded this action upon the decision in the case of the bill which Mr. McDuffie proposed to introduce. The Committee on Finance, with Mr. Evans, of Maine, at its head at that time, reported that bill back to the Senate, with a resolution that it was unconstitutional; that it could not originate in the Senate; and that resolution was sustained here by a very large majority, there being only four in the minority. I believe, also, that it is a question for the Chair, though I do not choose to press that point, because there are certain rules of order prescribed in the Constitution; for instance, that in regard to the yeas and nays. So this is a rule of order prescribed by the Constitution. I do not mean to say that the Chair can rule out propositions because he deems them unconstitutional; but he can rule out such a proposition as this, because it is contrary to the rule prescribed by the Constitution, in regard to the class of bills we may originate. But, as I said before, my object was simply to save the question, and I will not press it here.

Mr. GREEN. I am very well satisfied that it is not only constitutional, but in conformity with the ordinary practice of the Senate; and I have but one word to say. I find that Colonel Benton, who understood parliamentary law, according to the public judgment of the country, as well as anybody else, in 1846 made an independent report to the Senate from a committee, and reported a bill, which I have in my hand, to repeal the duty on salt. As to the propriety and necessity of the proposition, I will only say that salt is a common object of consumption for the poor as well as the rich; and Mr. Benton's bill was predicated upon this idea—that abolishing the duty is not raising revenue.

Mr. TRUMBULL. Is it in order to move to amend the amendment now pending?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I move, then, after the word "salt," to insert, "and sugar."

Mr. YULEE. I propose to amend that amendment, if it be in order to do so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being an amendment in the second degree, it cannot be amended. This is an amendment to an amendment, and it cannot be further amended.

Mr. SLIDELL. Was not the original proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island offered as an additional section? If so, it is not exactly in the character of an amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I offered it as an additional section.

Mr. SLIDELL. Is it not open to amendment in the second degree?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. SLIDELL. Yes, sir.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SLIDELL. Then I will simply give notice now, that if this amendment be adopted, I shall move further to extend it to all textile fabrics; and if it be necessary, I shall vote for abolition of all custom-houses and all duties on imports.

Mr. BIGLER. I think the proposition of the Senator from Rhode Island, together with what has been suggested by the Senator from Illinois, is sufficient to show the correctness of the position of the Senator from Virginia. I do not care, nor is it necessary to inquire into the question of the constitutional right of the Senate to disturb the revenue laws of the country. It is admitted that it would not be constitutional to originate here a measure to increase the revenue, but it is argued that this is a proposition to reduce the revenue, and therefore constitutional. Sir, I care not to pass upon that question, but I think what we have witnessed here is sufficient to satisfy the Senate that the proposition ought not to be entertained. It is the clear, constitutional province of the other House, the immediate Representatives of the people, to propose measures to raise revenue, to defray the expenses of the Government. Here is a proposition to destroy the revenue; and if the Senate can entertain such a proposition in reference to one particular item or source of revenue, I agree with the Senator from Illinois, that the Senate has a right to entertain it in reference to any other source of revenue; and thus you claim for the Senate the right to destroy the revenue entirely—to uproot its sources; and, as a question between the two branches of Congress, I think the proposition ought not to be entertained here. There would be good ground of complaint on the part of the House of Representatives, though we might be able to maintain a technical constitutional right.

It has been the policy and the practice, since the organization of the Government, to allow revenue measures to originate in the House of Representatives without raising the point suggested here to-day. I trust this proposition will be voted down.

Mr. HAMLIN. This is a question of very great importance, and we ought to settle it wisely. I think we ought to settle it with more wisdom than this late hour of the day will allow us to do. If we shall adjourn now and come back here to-morrow, sweetened with a little Louisiana sugar, we may then go over some of the Pennsylvania railroad iron. I therefore move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. I must express my deep sympathy with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is obliged to interrupt the Senator. There is a motion to adjourn pending.

Mr. HAMLIN. I will withdraw the motion if the Senator will renew it.

Mr. SEWARD. I will do so. I must express my profound sympathy with the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. IVERSON. I rise to a point of order. What is the question before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois to the amendment of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. IVERSON. Is the Senator from New York speaking to that amendment?

Mr. SEWARD. I propose to speak to that amendment; and I begin by saying that I must express my profound sympathy with my friend from Pennsylvania that he sat here a fortnight and saw the protection withdrawn from the fishing interest, the great interest of the north-eastern States, that he sat here silent when the proposition was made to withdraw protection from the manufacture of salt, and that he comes at last to the rescue of protection when sugar is in danger. It shows that, "where the treasure is, there the heart is also." Mr. President, I am opposed to altering the tariff that we made last year; I am opposed to reducing the duty on salt; I am opposed to disturbing that general arrangement, which was the best we could arrive at, not perfect in all things; but if this business is to be carried on of striking down the interests of the country, one by one, I am now prepared to vote for abolishing the duty on sugar, which stands on precisely the same ground as the proposition to abolish the duty on salt. Both are necessities of life; both are for the poor and rich alike.

Mr. BELL, Mr. HAMLIN, and others. And then iron.

Mr. SEWARD. And if the honorable Senator from Tennessee will stand up, I will go with him for considering the question of iron too. I have as little interest as any other in either.

Mr. BIGLER. I am much indebted—

Mr. SEWARD. The honorable Senator will excuse me. I received the floor on condition that I should move an adjournment; but I will now waive it, as it is due to the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania that we should hear him.

Mr. BIGLER. I am much indebted to the honorable Senator from New York for his sympathy—

Mr. WILSON. I object to any arrangement. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania is upon the floor on this amendment.

Mr. BIGLER. I believe I have the floor. I was about to remark that I was thankful to the honorable Senator from New York for his sympathy; but I am sorry he did not reserve that sympathy until I needed it more than I do on the present occasion. I am not willing to be arraigned by the Senator from New York, or any other member of this body, on an allegation that I have sat here silent, and allowed a great interest to be assailed, and then interpose when an interest which he supposes I feel a more direct concern in, is attacked. Why, sir, I did not say one word about the protection of any interest. I did not raise or discuss that question. I raised the question of the propriety of entertaining a proposition to disturb the revenue laws, a proposition which, in its effect, withholds revenue from the Treasury at the moment we need it. Why, sir, the bill to withdraw the bounties from the fisheries was just the converse of that proposition. That was a proposition to save revenue.

Now, I understand the Senator perfectly well. I have never been able to see the analogy between the iron interest and this fishing interest. The iron interest pays its revenue; there is a duty on iron for revenue purposes; but just the reverse is the case with regard to this fishing interest. It absorbs revenue. The Senator, too, is totally mistaken as to my action on the subject. Why, sir, the first word I ever said, was to interpose against the adoption of this proposition. I do not know, I am not aware of any vote being taken here on the subject of duty upon salt. I think the Senator from New York has mistaken the question as it stood before us.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I understand the honorable Senator to say that the original bill to which this amendment is moved is a bill to save revenue, and that the amendments are propositions, not to save revenue, but to prevent the raising of revenue. They are propositions to save taxation, in other words. Well, if this constitutional objection applies to the amendments, it applies with greater force to the original bill, for that puts money into the Treasury or keeps it in the Treasury, saves the revenue, increases the amount, and therefore, as a matter of course, increases the burden of taxation. But the amendment is directly the contrary. So if there is any force in the Senator's argument, it is against the original bill.

Mr. BIGLER. I do not pretend to reply to the Senator from Wisconsin, except to say that he is mistaken in his views. The original bill has no connection whatever with the revenue laws; the fishing bounty is paid out of the Treasury without any connection with the sources of the revenue. The amendment which proposes to release the duty on salt is a proposition to take money out of the Treasury, or to lessen the revenues just to the extent that the receipts accumulate from that source, which the Senator from New York estimates at some five hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ALLEN. So far from reducing the revenue, it makes a saving to the Government of $200,000. The Government paid out, in the last two years, $700,000 for fishing bounties and drawback on the exportation of fish, and received in duties on salt about $500,000. This proposition to take off the duty on salt leaves a balance in favor of the Government of $200,000.

Mr. BIGLER. I got the floor from the Senator from New York with the understanding that I would move an adjournment. I therefore make that motion.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope my colleague will withdraw the motion for a minute.

Several SENATORS. Oh no; let us adjourn.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire only to say a word in vindication—

Mr. BIGLER. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire only to say a word in vindication of my colleague, and I think in justice to him and myself I should be permitted to say that word, for you know I do not often occupy much of the time of the Senate. It is that I am satisfied he is acting in accordance with his well known principles. He is, I believe, a free-trade man, if I can judge him from his acts. I remember that at the close of the last session the reduction of duty on our great staple, iron, was made, if not by his motion, at least by his vote. He agreed to it, and was perfectly satisfied with it. The result has been to break up every iron master in Pennsylvania who had not an immense fortune beyond his business in trade. Every man who was at all indebted in his business has been destroyed. The iron business of Pennsylvania, about which gentlemen speak here, is no longer an interest. No man, unless he has a fortune that he has inherited or obtained from sources beyond his business, is capable of conducting a furnace for a day.

It may be the policy of my colleague, and it may, perhaps, be a wise one, to break down all these interests, so that after a while we shall stand upon a common level when we shall be compelled again to return to that protective American policy which our fathers instituted, and which took care of the country. If we were to destroy the duty on salt now, as proposed by the Senator from Rhode Island, I believe after a little while the salt interests would help the iron interests; and if we take off the sugar duty from gentlemen down in Louisiana, I think after a while they will come to our ground; and if we should repeal the law returning fugitive slaves, all the gentlemen in the "nigger" interest would soon help us to take care of our iron. So if you run around all these interests and strike them down, when we are all so low down together that we cannot take care of ourselves, we shall begin to feel as members of the same great country ought to feel, each one willing to serve the other.

I thought this statement was due to my colleague. I thought it was due to him, coming from my own State, that I should make this explanation.

Mr. BIGLER. Perhaps I could afford to allow the remarks of my colleague to pass unnoticed; perhaps it would be wiser to do so; but, sir, it is only a few days since, when, under very peculiar circumstances, after I had excluded myself from an opportunity of replying to that honorable gentleman, he saw proper on the Kansas question to indulge in strictures which were at least in bad temper. Now, sir, I have no ambition, in the way of conflict with my colleague, or any other member of the Senate. I have no disposition to complain of his official action here, or to criticize it. My colleague seems to have a different inclination, and the other day in very summary terms passed judgment on my action. To-day he sees proper to do the same thing.

Sir, I can tell him that I will account for my conduct here, and I ask no defense at his hands, no explanations, and no apologies. I will meet my constituents; and I think I am as likely to stand the test before them with my opinions, as he is with his. At least, in the past, the views which I entertain have been more approved by that people.

Now, sir, it would require entirely too much time to define my views on the general system of revenue and incidental protection. In the sense in which my colleague understands free trade, and with the applications he intends to make, I think I am safe in saying that the remark is not a just one; I am not in that sense a free-trade man. I have been the advocate of a tariff for revenue purposes, with incidental protection to our manufacturing interests. I have not been averse to a measure of discrimination in that application.

But, sir, as for the broad allegation that I was a leading instrument here in changing the tariff in the last Congress, I suggest whether honorable Senators, who were then my associates here, are prepared to make that allegation? It is true that I voted for the bill as it passed; but the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] will remember how diligently I endeavored to advance the rate of duty upon the great staple to which my colleague has referred—that of iron. I think I had some agency in securing to it a larger measure of protection, if you may call it protection, than it would have received under other circumstances.

But the Senator thinks my action here has struck down all these great manufacturing interests; that the reduction of the tariff of last session has led to these consequences. Sir, this is not the time—for I know the Senate is anxious to adjourn—to go into that examination; but I merely wish to declare that no statesman who has reflected upon the subject, no man who has been observing for years the course of financial events in this country and throughout the world, as my colleague has been, can seriously allege that what we have witnessed in the way of financial and commercial revulsion has resulted from the change of the tariff by the last Congress. The proposition is absurd. There is no act of Congress that produced a financial revulsion throughout the world; no act of Congress that produced the prostration of the manufacturing interests in this country. It was a revulsion which we have always seen follow a reckless and unguarded expansion of credit in this country.

I wish my honorable colleague was as sound on another great question that underlies all this, and that is the question of currency. There is the basis of this fluctuation and this sudden prostration of which my colleague spoke. It is our inflated system of paper money that begets unguarded expansion and leads men to attempt enterprises without real capital. Suddenly the revulsion comes, and we are told it is the tariff. I have heard this ever since I came into political life. My honorable colleague is an able and active agent in an element that underlies all this tariff question. It is a secondary. The question of currency and money underlies the whole of it and overrules it. Your expanded system of rotten paper money, expanding nominal values, renders the incidental aid of a protective tariff helpless and ineffectual. There is the root of the evil, and whenever it becomes necessary or my duty, I am ready to discuss it fully. I move the adjournment agreeably to by promise.

Mr. CAMERON. Will my colleague withdraw it for a moment.

Several SENATORS. No, no.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, May 12, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. J. L. ELLIOTT.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, containing estimates for appropriations for clerk hire and office rent, under the seventh section of the act of 18th August, 1856; which was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, submitting a report on claims for depredations by Indians in New Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the War Department, transmitting the report of Edward F. Beale, on a wagon road from Fort Defiance to the Colorado river; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a communication from the Navy Department, in reply to a resolution of the House, of May 4, requesting the Secretary of the Navy to furnish the House with copies of all documents on file in his Department having reference to the propriety of the purchase of land by the Government for the enlargement of the Charlestown navy-yard; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed an act for the final adjustment of private land claims in the States of Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Missouri, and for other purposes, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House.

The SPEAKER stated that reports were in order from committees on business relating to the Territories.

Mr. MAYNARD. I ask the general consent of the House to have the Committee of Claims discharged from the further consideration of certain papers.

Mr. FAULKNER. This day has been set apart for the consideration of territorial business, and I object to any reports not relating to territorial business.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE, from the Committee on Commerce, made an adverse report upon the resolution of the Territory of Washington, asking that Whatcom, in that Territory, be made a port of delivery; which was laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on the petition of the trustees of the University of Nebraska; which was laid upon the table.

SURVEYOR'S DISTRICT IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Public Lands have had under consideration the joint resolutions of the Legislature of Nebraska, and sundry memorials relative to the establishment of a new surveyor's district in that Territory, and have instructed me to report adversely thereon. The proper department have determined to move the surveyor general's office from Kansas to Nebraska City, which is nearer the center of the district, and that supersedes the necessity of further legislation on the subject. I move that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolutions and memorials, and that they be laid upon the table.

The motion was agreed to.

BLUE MONT CENTRAL COLLEGE.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back the memorial of the trustees of the Blue Mont Central College Association of Kansas Territory, asking for a grant of lands; which was laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

CONFIRMATION OF CLAIMS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back a memorial relating to confirming titles to claims of settlers in Washington Territory.

Mr. COBB. This is a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington for confirming the titles of settlers to claims from which they were driven during the Indian wars. It was supposed that, as they were absent from their claims for some time, their time would not run. But the Department has decided that, if they go back and occupy their claims in good faith, the time will be allowed to run during the time when they were absent. There is therefore no necessity for any action upon the part of Congress upon the subject; and I move that the memorial be laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The motion was agreed to.

PRE-EMPTIONS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back the memorial of the Legislative Assembly of Washington Territory, praying the amendment of the preemption law as regards preemption in Washington Territory.

Mr. COBB. This memorial proposes to increase the quantity of land in the Territory of Washington, to double the amount which is now allowed to each individual to preëmpt. The committee think the request ought not to be granted; and therefore I move that the memorial be laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The motion was agreed to.

SURVEYOR GENERAL OF NEBRASKA.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back House bill (No. 186) to establish the office of surveyor general of Nebraska; and moved that the same be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

LAND OFFICE IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported a bill to establish a land office in New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. COBB. It is known to the House that there is not at this time any land office in the Territory of New Mexico. It is recommended that there should be established one land office there. I ask that the bill may be put on its passage. It is recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. It will take but a minute to pass it; and I hope there will be no objection.

The bill was read in extenso.

Mr. MORGAN. I should like to have provision made so that the appointments to this land office shall be made during the session of Congress, so the Senate may have control over their confirmation.

Mr. COBB. That is, of course, a matter over which I have no control.

Mr. MORGAN. There is a clause in the bill providing that the President may make the appointments during the recess of Congress. I should like to have that clause stricken out.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman is not satisfied with the bill, let him propose an amendment. This bill met with the unanimous concurrence of the Committee on Public Lands. Has the gentleman no confidence in that committee? New York has a representative upon the committee who was satisfied with the bill. It met the approval of the General Land Office. If the gentleman objects to any provisions of the bill, let him suggest an amendment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN OREGON AND WASHINGTON.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back House bill (No. 170) to extend the land laws east of the Cascade mountains, in Oregon and Washington Territories.

Mr. COBB. This bill is merely to extend the land laws to the land in Washington and Oregon lying east of the Cascade mountains, in order that it may be surveyed and brought into market. The bill was drawn up by the Department. It meets the concurrence of the Committee on Public Lands. I hope it will be passed.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

LAND DISTRICTS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back House bill (No. 177) to create three additional land districts in Washington Territory, accompanied by a substitute.

Mr. COBB. The original bill proposed to create three additional land districts in Washington. The Committee on Public Lands have reported back a substitute creating two additional land districts. A bill, similar to the one originally introduced, was, at the last session, reported by the Committee on Public Lands; but, owing to a press of business, it was never acted upon. The Territory has not been settled up as rapidly as was expected, and we have, therefore, thought two districts were all that are needed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I should like the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands to explain what necessity there is for two additional land districts in a Territory as slowly settled as Washington Territory.

Mr. COBB. The bill was recommended by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and by the Committee on Public Lands. If the gentleman is still not satisfied, I will turn him over to my friend from Washington, [Mr. STEVENS], and will yield the floor for him to reply.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I have a word to say in regard to this matter. As the honorable chairman of the Committee on Public Lands has stated, the Department originally recommended three additional land offices; I am satisfied with the report of the committee, for two additional land offices. We have, to be sure, a sparse population in Washington Territory; our surveys have not progressed with much rapidity; we have a country in which it is difficult to travel, and the settler requires some accommodation in the way of land offices.

This bill provides for an additional land office on the Columbia river; and the limits of that land district embrace the whole southern portion of the Territory, extending from the coast to the interior. Communications are difficult from the river to Olympia, on Puget's Sound, where the present land office is. The reasons are very strong, therefore, in favor of that additional land office. The other land office is for the country north. There is much business there on the part of the settlers, proving and perfecting their titles; and for the same reasons that we ask for an office on the river, we ask for an office in the northern portion of the Territory. There is great difficulty of communication, and of course great expense is entailed upon the settlers.

I will state, sir, in addition, that now that we have got over our most serious difficulty with the Indians, our settlements are growing and extending more rapidly. Even with these additional land offices, our settlers will have far to go to attend to their business. I trust that, with this explanation, the House will put the bill on its passage.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington how much of the land in that Territory has been surveyed where it is proposed to establish these additional land offices.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I cannot give the details. I know that in the southern portion of the Territory surveys are in progress in Clarke, Coulto, Wahkiacum, Pacific and Chehalis counties, which will be accommodated by the land office on the Columbia river. In the northern portion of the Territory, surveys are in progress in Island, Jefferson, Chatham and Whatcom counties, which will be accommodated by the northern land office.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How far will these land offices be apart?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. The northern office will be about one hundred and thirty miles from Olympia, and the southern one will be about one hundred and forty miles.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. How many persons have come into Washington Territory during the year?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I presume that we will have some three thousand this year; and it will take another season to organize these land offices. There would have been a larger emigration if it had not been for the Utah troubles. I have learned that if those troubles had not taken place there would have been this year an emigration to Oregon and Washington, by the way of South Pass and the Columbia river, of some ten thousand people from Iowa and Missouri.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will now ask the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands who reported this bill, whether there is any necessity for a land office until the lands are brought into market by proclamation of the President?

Mr. COBB. Settlers are as anxious to have their titles perfected before the proclamation of the President as they are afterwards. When the lands are surveyed and the returns made to the land office, that moment the preëmtor has the right to perfect his title. The settler does not care to wait for the proclamation of the President. It has been the practice in Kansas and Nebraska to allow them to do so.

I have no interest about this matter further than to discharge my duty to the Committee on Public Lands, which has directed me to make this report. We had the applications before us for these land offices, and we had the opinion of the Land Office on the subject; and on these we acted. The honorable Delegate from the Territory consents to the proposition and concurs in the views of the committee.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I would ask the gentleman from Washington Territory, how far from the southern line of the Territory is the southern land office?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. It is directly on the southern boundary.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. How far off is the northern land office?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. The location of it is left to the discretion of the President. A central point of the district, in round numbers, would be sixty or sixty-five miles off. The river, in part, acts as a line of communication. The northern district is north of the present land office.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I will ask the gentleman whether, up to this time, any lands there have been entered with cash?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. Some land has been entered under the provisions of an amendment to the donation law, whereby a settler, after one year's residence, becomes entitled to his patent, on paying $1 25 per acre. A small sum has been received in this way. No land has yet been offered for sale.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. If I understand it, the southern land office is upon the southern boundary of the Territory, and there is no public land south of it. And between that land office and the Olympia office there is no land to any extent that has yet been entered with cash. They are wholly taken up by settlers under the donation law. The gentleman can give no satisfactory evidence when those lands will be brought into market, so as to make a necessity for this office. It strikes me, therefore, that there can be no use in the world for the southern office, if for either. I see no reason for creating new land offices which are not at all demanded. The old States are consolidating their offices every day; and we should not establish new ones until they are required.

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Washington if either one of these land offices is proposed to be located east of the guide meridian?

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. The southern land office will be a short distance east of the guide meridian.

Mr. LETCHER. I see that no surveys are made in the guide meridian at all, according to the report of the surveyor general of the land office.

What do you want with a land office where there are no surveys? Here is what the surveyor general says in his report of the 21st December, 1857:

"No surveys have been made east of the guide meridian; and the paralysis caused by the Indian war, the scarcity of men, and the general impoverishment of the inhabitants, including the few land surveyors of the country, together with the exceeding topographical difficulty of the country, has made it impossible to find deputies willing to contract for any work other than that reported."

And then he goes on and gives a table of what is under contract, and what is proposed to be contracted for.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia, in respect to the southern land district, that surveys have been made in the county of Clark, a portion of which is east of the guide meridian, and a portion west.

Mr. LETCHER. Here is what the surveyor general says:

"The surveys of the extension of the Willamette meridian north to Whidby's Island, the rich lands of Whidby's Island, several townships in the vicinity of Fort Vancouver, eight townships on the Lower Columbia, including the mouth of the Cowlitz river, ten townships upon the peninsula made by Puget sound and Hood's canal, and several townships on the Chehalis river, are in a forward state of completion, and will all probably be finished this season."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. According to my view of the subject, the whole question lies in a nut-shell. When surveys are finished, the President of the United States, at the proper time, announces the land for sale, and then it is that land offices become necessary. But the idea of creating land offices before the titles are extinguished, and before proclamations are made, is manifestly injudicious and unwise, and seems to me to contemplate nothing but establishing sinecure positions for some persons.

Mr. COBB. If the gentleman will allow a letter from the Commissioner of Public Lands to be read, he will perhaps know as much about it as any of us.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman seems to bow to authority very much; but I am one of those who examine matters for themselves; and it is not necessary for the gentlemen to tell us what the Commissioner says. I want to know how much of the Indian title is extinguished?

Mr. COBB. Let the letter be read. The Committee on Public Lands have to form their opinions from the facts that they get from the Departments, as well as their own judgment. That letter was the basis on which we predicated our opinions.

The letter was read, as follows:

GENERAL LAND OFFICE, February 10, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter, of 8th instant, covering a diagram of Washington Territory, and requesting my view as to the necessity of creating two additional districts in said Territory, and the draft of a bill designating the boundaries, &c.

I therefore herewith submit the draft of a bill creating two additional land districts in that Territory; and for my views as to the necessity thereof, I beg leave to submit the copy of a letter, dated May 21, 1855, to the then chairman of the Public Land Committee of the House, covering the copy of a bill at that time drawn in this office for the creation of three additional districts; and as the reasons therein stated still exist, I recommend now that either two or three additional districts be created, as the committee may see proper to recommend for the action of the House.

The diagram submitted by you is herewith returned.

With great respect,

THOMAS A. HENDRICKS, Commissioner.
Hon. W. R. W. Cobb, Chairman of Committee on Public Lands, House of Representatives.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I readily see from that very letter that if these land districts had been established in 1856, there would have been no use for them. No lands have been surveyed since; and consequently there is no power to enter. They wanted three offices at that time. Thus the House will readily see that the only advantage from this arrangement would have been to put officers in snug places, with good salaries, and with nothing to do.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not know anything about the localities of this Territory that have been mentioned, but I wish to correct the gentleman from Virginia in regard to the necessity of the office before proclamation. The land office is quite as necessary before the proclamation of the President as it is after. You have several offices already in Nebraska, and they have been overrun with business. They have been great accommodation to settlers who go there and prove up their preëmtion claims. If I had my way about it, I would never have a proclamation for the sale of the lands to speculators. The object of the land office is to accommodate settlers. The land offices in Nebraska, Iowa, and all the western country, are more occupied with the proving of their preëmtion rights and the determination of their entries, than with anything else. So far from waiting for the opening of land offices till proclamations are made, it is generally necessary that they should precede the proclamation. I see, from the statement of the gentleman from Washington Territory, that now settlers have to go two or three hundred miles to prove their claims; and it seems to me, therefore, that it would be an accommodation to the settlers in Washington Territory to have two more offices.

Mr. LETCHER. Will my friend from Iowa allow me to interrupt him at this point? This report of the surveyor general states:

"A few claims are being taken under the preëmtion laws, but they restrict the settler to one hundred and sixty acres. It would greatly stimulate the settlement and occupation of the country if the amount were increased to three hundred and twenty acres, or a new donation act made by Congress, giving the settler fee simple to his land upon proof of improvements being made to the value of $1 25 per acre, or proof of residence and cultivation for a limited period of years, at his option."

In addition to all that, he says:

"The population of Washington Territory has not increased for the two years past, in consequence of the Indian difficulties and consequent insecurity."

Mr. CURTIS. That is a matter with which I am not acquainted; but so far from voting against the land offices because of no proclamation, I hope the House will understand that these offices are necessary for the accommodation of settlers, and that these proclamations are only for the accommodation of speculators.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I move to refer this bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, which will give us time to investigate it; and on that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

LAND DISTRICTS IN NEBRASKA.

Mr. COBB, from the same committee, reported back a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislative Assembly of Nebraska, asking for one or more additional land districts in the western portion of the Territory; and asked to have the committee discharged from the further consideration of the same.

Mr. COBB. Although our committee has been censured for its liberality, we have agreed to report against this memorial. We think there are enough of land offices there.

The committee was accordingly discharged from the further consideration; and the memorial was laid upon the table.

LANDS FOR A COLLEGE IN NEBRASKA.

On motion of Mr. COBB, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of sundry citizens of Nemaha county, Nebraska Territory, asking for an appropriation of public lands for the use and benefit of Brownsville College; and that the memorial be laid on the table.

HALF-BREED LANDS IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back, with an amendment, Senate bill (No. 82) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota belonging to the half-breeds or mixed bloods belonging to the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians," approved July 17, 1854.

The bill was read.

The amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands is as follows:

Strike out all of the bill after the word "lands" in the twelfth line and insert the following:

And settlements heretofore made thereon are declared valid so far as they do not conflict with settlements made by half-breeds, and that the settlers shall have the benefit of the preëmtion laws of the United States, any location of half-breed scrip thereon notwithstanding: Provided, The declaration of preëmtion be filed within three months after public notice is given of the passage of this act in the proper land district: And provided, That when two or more persons have settled on the same quarter section prior to the passage of this act, they shall be permitted to enter the same, and the rights of each shall be determined according to the provisions of the act relating to preëmtions, passed March 3, 1843.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tract or subdivision within the body of land aforesaid, which shall have been settled upon in good faith, by and in the occupancy of, any of the said half-breeds, or mixed bloods, which lands, so settled upon and occupied by the half-breeds are hereby expressly declared to be subject to no other disposition than location by the "certificates" or "scrip" authorized to be issued by the said act of 1854, for the benefit of said Indians, nor shall the provisions of this act extend to any lands which may have been located prior to its passage with half-breed scrip, with the consent of the settlers thereon.

Mr. BENNETT. The object of the amendment is to carry out the design of the Senate bill, to secure to the settlers on these lands their improvements. The Committee on Public Lands thought the Senate bill was not sufficiently explicit to effect the object intended. Before 1854, this land was reserved for the benefit of the mixed bloods. They had a reservation fifteen miles back from the river. Various persons went on these lands and made improvements. In 1854, Congress passed a law to exchange with these half-breeds their reservation for other lands, secured to them by scrip, upon their giving a full relinquishment of all their rights, either tribal or individual, to said reservation. Scrip was to be issued to them, which they could locate either within the reservation or out of it. The Indians came into that arrangement, and made the relinquishment, which was in as explicit terms as possible. They relinquished all rights, either individual or tribal. The act of 1854 also provided that these lands should be surveyed and brought into market. It was surveyed like any other public lands. There are now some three thousand people, or more, who have settled upon these lands, and made valuable improvements on them. Many of them have invested all they are worth in improvements. The law reserving these lands provided that the half-breed scrip should not be transferable, the intention being that none but half-breeds should settle upon the reservation. The scrip, however, was, most of it, disposed of by the half-breeds to speculators, for a trifling consideration, and the law is evaded by locating the scrip in the name of the Indians, the speculators taking a power of attorney to locate for them, and then holding the land afterwards for their own benefit. These speculators have gone on and located their scrip upon the lands occupied by the settlers, upon which, as I have said, valuable improvements have been made. The Land Office has refused to confirm the entry of this half-breed scrip, and have refused to confirm the rights of the settlers by preemption, and have left the matter to be settled by legislation. It is as honest a matter on the part of the settlers as ever was presented. The effect of the bill is to do justice to the honest settlers, and will not do injustice to the half-breeds. The law allows them to locate their scrip anywhere upon the unoccupied public lands. The bill simply provides for confirming the title of the honest settlers by applying the general preemption law to them. I think the Land Office was wrong in the construction given to the act of 1854, in not allowing these settlers the benefit of the preemption laws. These lands were brought into market the same as other public lands, by that act—the Indian title relinquished under it; and I think the claims for preemption, by actual settlers, should be regarded the same as on the other public lands; but it has not been so decided, and an act of Congress to secure them this right is believed to be necessary.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the third section of the act of 1854. It reads:

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That from and after the passage of this act, the President is authorized to have the lands within the said reservation surveyed and exposed to public sale, at the land offices for the districts in which said lands may be, according to the boundaries of the several land districts recently established by Congress, in the same manner as other public lands."

Now, I ask, whether these lands, under this law, were regularly advertised and exposed to public sale? If they were not exposed to public sale, is it probable that any controversy will be likely to grow up at any future time between the Government of the United States and these Indians, growing out of the treaty stipulations under which the law was passed?

Mr. BENNETT. I will answer the gentleman from Virginia, that, if he will examine the whole of the law of 1854, he will find that there is a seeming conflict between the first two sections and the third section, which he has read. The first and second sections seem to regard the land, in some respects, as still reserved; while the third section, which the gentleman from Virginia has read, treats it simply as public land. If the Commissioner of the General Land Office had given to this third section the construction which I think he should have given it, no further legislation would have been necessary. But he refused to give it that construction; and the Committee on Indian Affairs insist that there shall be some further legislation. Otherwise, these settlers will be deprived of their lands. The scrip locations and preemption rights are both suspended, for further legislation. It is important; and this bill, as amended, should be passed at once, and the honest settlers protected.

Mr. GROW. Being a member of the Committee of Indian Affairs at the time the bill was reported to the House, from which the gentleman from Virginia has just read, I desire to state briefly the history of the legislation on this subject.

When the Sioux Indians ceded their lands in Minnesota, they reserved for the use of the half-breeds belonging to their tribe a strip of land along Lake Pepin, on the Mississippi river, thirty-two miles long, and running back from the river fifteen miles. In 1854, the settlers along the line of this reservation petitioned Congress to provide in some way for opening these lands to settlement, so that roads could be built from the river through to the settlements lying back of this reservation. A bill was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, of which you, Mr. Speaker, was then chairman, under which scrip was to be issued to the half-breeds, which could be located on this reserve or any other lands belonging to the Government, and the half-breeds were to relinquish in full all claims to the reservation. It was subsequently surveyed, like other public lands, and settlers went on and occupied them and made many valuable improvements upon them. But speculators have purchased the scrip of the half-breeds, and claim the right to enter it upon the improvements of the settlers.

Mr. LETCHER. I see now exactly where the trouble comes from. The speculators have gone on and purchased the scrip of these half-breeds, which the law expressly says is not transferable. Hence the difficulty.

Mr. GROW. No, sir, the trouble is, that the speculators who have purchased the scrip of the half-breeds, claim the right to locate it upon the improvements made by the settlers.

Mr. LETCHER. By what authority do these parties buy up the scrip of the half-breeds when the law of 1854 expressly says that no transfer, or evidence of any transfer of scrip shall be valid?

Mr. GROW. My recollection may be at fault, but I think Congress, by a subsequent act, made the scrip transferable. If not, it was by power of attorney alone.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The scrip is not transferable. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BENNETT] explained how it is purchased. The land is located in the name of the Indians, the purchaser holding a power of attorney to transfer the land.

Mr. LETCHER. Could a power of attorney authorize those parties to violate the law?

Mr. GROW. As I understand it, the lands are located by power of attorney in the name of the Indians, who then transfer the lands to the speculators. The object of this bill is to prevent the scrip from being located upon the improvements made by settlers, but leaves the scrip to be located on any unoccupied land belonging to the Government. The object is to protect the actual settlers against the speculators, while it does no injustice to the Indians. If the half-breed located his scrip on any part of this reservation before it was settled, he holds it; and if he locates it outside of the reservation on any land of the Government, he holds that.

Mr. McQUEEN. It was stated before the Committee on Public Lands—and the Committee on Public Lands acted on that statement in the investigation of this matter—that speculators went and bought this scrip, in defiance of the law of 1854, with a view of afterwards enforcing them against the settlers. This bill is intended to protect the settlers.

Mr. GROW. That is just as I understand it.

Mr. COBB. Those who have bought the scrip in violation of law, have tried to get the improvements of the settlers, or compel them to pay six or seven dollars an acre for the privilege of retaining their improvements.

Mr. GROW. Exactly. My only object was to state the history of this matter for the information of the House. I have no doubt that the statement made to the Committee on Public Lands is correct.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Alabama has spoken of wrongs to the settler. I would like to know by what right the settler went upon those lands?

Mr. COBB. My own opinion is, that under the law, the settlers had no right to go there; but I understand that the Land Office, in a circular, recognized their right to do so. They did not go there, then, in defiance of the authority of the General Land Office, but with the belief, under the instructions of the Department, that they would be entitled to the right of preemption.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Does the gentleman state that they went there under the decision of the Department that they would be entitled to preemption?

Mr. COBB. I find, in the correspondence of that Department, that the register of the land office there was instructed, by a circular, to permit settlers to enter these lands as preceptors. I think that that was wrong; but there is the fact, nevertheless.

Mr. GROW. Settlers go upon the public lands whether surveyed or not, as they find them unoccupied. A settler who goes as a pioneer to a new country to find a home, settles upon a quarter section that he finds unoccupied. After the issuing of this scrip, these lands were thrown into market like other lands which had been surveyed. The settlers went upon them, and improved them. Last summer I passed over this reserve, and noticed very many fine improvements made by the settlers, and it is due to those settlers that they should be protected in these improvements, thus made.

Mr. COBB. These settlers went upon that reserve under the circular of the General Land Office; and they supposed that they had a right to preemption. After a while a difficulty arose; and the register was instructed not to permit them to perfect their titles. These settlers had, in the mean time, expended thousands of dollars in improving the lands upon which they had settled. My judgment has been against the interference of Congress in the matter; but my sympathy is with the settlers, who have gone on and settled upon the land in good faith. Something must now be done for their relief; for, as the law now stands, it is calculated to give them a great deal of trouble. This bill wipes out the whole thing. Those who hold the scrip cannot be injured under it, because they may locate it either within that reservation or out of it, as they please. They can find as good land as that which has been located by the settler. You well know, Mr. Speaker, for you have been in the western country, that these land speculators seek, whenever they can, to locate upon the claims of settlers, not so much in view of the value of the lands as of the value of the improvements put upon them. They do that when they could find equally as valuable land adjoining the settlers' land.

Mr. GROW. Admitting that technically the settlers have no right to preemption, what is the injury done by giving them preemption rights under this law? You injure nobody. The Government takes $1 25 from them under their preemption claim, instead of $1 25 of a speculator, if you put them up to sale, while you leave the owner of the land scrip to locate it, as was intended by the original act, on any lands not already settled. The committee intended, in the law for issuing scrip, to give the Indian his improvements, if he had any, by allowing him to locate the scrip on it. If not, then he could locate on any unoccupied land, but not to take away other settler's improvements. The holder of the scrip, under this bill, will have the same right. You do not deprive the holder of the scrip from locating upon any unoccupied public land in or outside of this reservation. That scrip is better now than any other paper issued by the Government for locating lands, because the holders of it can go on to any land as soon as surveyed and locate, while the holder of a warrant cannot locate except on land subject to private entry. They have the right to go upon the public domain anywhere and locate their scrip to the amount called for. No injury is done, therefore, to the owner of this scrip. He has all the law ever intended should be given to anybody except a half-breed who had an improvement. If a half-breed had an improvement, he could hold it under his scrip, but it was never thought of nor intended that anybody else could take that scrip and hold the improvement of anybody else, unless he had bought that improvement. Then no wrong is done to anybody by this act, and you protect the bona fide settler in his improvements. The lands were surveyed like other public lands. Settlers went upon it, supposing it to be public land open to preemption. The Congress of the United States is now asked to protect these settlers, who went there under the belief that they had the right to preempt that land against the cupidity of the speculator.

Mr. BENNETT obtained the floor, and moved the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from New York yield to me a moment?

Mr. BENNETT. I will, if the gentleman will renew the demand for the previous question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I will renew the demand. I wish to express the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that if we interfere in this matter we shall get ourselves into a scrape, and we shall take upon ourselves a serious responsibility which will hereafter be pressed upon us by those with whom we have interfered. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the allegations of fairness on the part of those who have gone upon the public lands, which they knew they had no right to go upon. I do not understand that sort of logic.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. The settlers were advised to go there by the Land Office, and they went there believing that they had a right to go there. Afterwards the Department issued other circulars suspending the perfection of their titles.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let us see what the law is in reference to the position of these parties. I have here the act of July 17, 1854; and I understand from it, and from what we know otherwise by the treaty of Prairie du Chien, that there was a certain interest secured to the half-breed or Dacotah Indians. It became desirable that the tract of land, so secured, should be brought into market.

Mr. LETCHER. Will my colleague allow me to read an extract from a memorial of the Legislature to Congress?

"The half-breed tract is a body of land thirty miles long and fifteen wide, lying on the west side of the Mississippi river and Lake Pepin, comprising about four hundred and eighty-six square miles of as good agricultural country as any in the Territory of Minnesota. There are now upon this land over five thousand inhabitants, of whom one half, at least, are tillers of the soil, and the rest are merchants and mechanics, residing in the villages within the limits of this tract.

"After the treaty with the Sioux Indians, ceding all their lands east of a specified line, to the United States, had been ratified, in 1853, many persons who were acquainted with the fertile character of the soil on this tract, and were of the opinion that the ratification of that treaty opened these lands to the settler the same as all other lands, came and settled in the vicinity of Wabashaw, Reed's Landing, and other points.

Now, sir, it is stated on the sixth page of this report—

"There are now, according to official data, obtained from the census recently taken, upwards of five thousand inhabitants on this tract.

"The number of acres of land actually occupied by the settlers amounts to one hundred and twenty thousand acres.

"The number of families settled upon these lands amount to eight hundred and seven.

"Of the five thousand inhabitants, there are one thousand and eight males over twenty one years of age.

"The value of the improvements made, and owned by the settlers, amount to.....$772,800 00

"The amount of capital invested in business, houses, mills, &c., is.....157,900 00

"Making, in total, the sum of.....$940,700 00

"Almost one million dollars brought here and invested by the settlers.

"The value of the one hundred and twenty thousand acres now occupied by settlers, at the usual rates of $1 25 per acre, is $150,000.

"If the scrip should be covered over this land, at five dollars per acre, it would amount to $600,000; almost one half million dollars difference between the Government price and the price demanded by speculators."

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I ask if the whole gist of this matter is not this: that certain specutors have bought this land scrip from the Indians for a nominal sum—almost nothing, as the testimony before our committee shows—and that this is a contest between them and those who have produced this wealth of a million and a half dollars, by their own hard labor?

Mr. LETCHER. I will answer the gentleman with great pleasure; that those men, who, he says, have produced this wealth, went there in violation of law. They knew it was an Indian reservation. Those who are now seeking to dispossess them purchased the scrip in violation of law—so that they both stand here alike criminal violators of the law, and I would leave the settlement of their disputes to the courts of law and not to Congress.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. But when these same settlers went on to this land, as the gentleman from Virginia says, and produced this wealth, they did so under instructions from the land office in the Territory, that they had a right to preempt these lands.

Mr. LETCHER. It is not so stated in this report.

Mr. McQUEEN. One word further in regard to this matter. I believe it was in evidence before the committee that these parties who are now claiming to have their titles confirmed, had information from the land office that they had the right to go there and settle on these lands. My own impression is, that long before the Indian title was extinguished, they went and settled on these lands without any legal right. I believe the Indian title was extinguished under the act of 1852. They settled there without any legal right. The purchasers of the land scrip, on their part, had no right to purchase, and did so in violation of law. The majority of the committee, however, came to the conclusion that the settlers were entitled to be protected in preference to the purchasers of scrip. I do not believe that I gave my sanction to the bill in committee, and I do not know that I will do so here; but between the two, my judgment is in favor of the settlers. I was not satisfied for myself as to what should be done. They were both there without authority of law in their first claims; but after the Indian title was extinguished, then they ought to have the right to preempt their claims.

Mr. FAULKNER. If we pursue this course we shall spend the two days set apart for territorial business in acting on a matter on which we have had no opportunity of informing ourselves. The Committee on Public Lands should have made their reports prior to these days in order that they might have been printed, and that members might have had an opportunity to see them. If we go on acting on reports immediately coming from committees, the result will be—

Mr. LOVEJOY. I rise to a question of order. I do not see the bearing of the remarks of the gentleman.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am going either to move, myself, or to suggest to my colleague to move, to refer this to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. How otherwise can we have information about it? The bill is not printed; whereas, there is a vast deal of business reported to the House, where the bills and reports are printed and ready for the action and consideration of the House.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Of course I cannot, after what has occurred, make the remarks which I intended to have submitted; but I think it best, under the circumstances, to present this single view: that this is a squabble between conflicting claimants for this property, and that we should not interfere. Why should Congress interfere between our own citizens, and see which have the best rights? Let the courts decide that question, and let us leave that matter to the courts. If we interfere improperly, we will, of course, have future demands against us on the part of those who will be stripped of their rights by our instrumentality. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and I move the previous question.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the demand for the previous question for one moment.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, the only difficulty about this matter is, that gentlemen will continue to regard these lands as a reservation, after the Government has purchased them back, and after the Indians have relinquished all right and title to them. Here is their relinquishment:

The half-breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians: to all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, in accordance with the stipulations of the act of Congress approved 17th July, 1854, "to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the half breeds or mixed bloods of the Dacotah or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes," and in consideration of the "certificates or scrip" which the said act authorizes to be awarded to us, the undersigned, to wit: those being the half-breeds or mixed bloods aforesaid, who sign for themselves, relinquishing in their own right, and those as signing for others, relinquishing as "the legal representatives of such as may be minors," as referred to in said act, do hereby relinquish, transfer, and forever quit claim to the United States, all right, title, and interest, of whatsoever nature, which they may have, either tribal or as individuals, of, in, and to "the tract of land lying on the west side of Lake Pepin and the Mississippi river, in the Territory of Minnesota, which was set apart and granted for their use and benefit by the ninth article of the treaty of Prairie du Chien, of the fifteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and thirty," the said tract being particularly described in the aforesaid treaty in the manner following, to wit: "Beginning at a place called the Barn, below and near the village of the Red Wing chief, and running back fifteen miles; thence in a parallel line with Lake Pepin and the Mississippi, about thirty-two miles, to a point opposite Beef or O'Beuf river; thence fifteen miles to the Grand Encampment opposite the river aforesaid."

In testimony whereof, we have hereunto signed our names at the times and places, and in presence of the witnesses, as hereinafter certified.

The President was required, by the act of 1854, to go on and have these lands surveyed and put into market; and as late as the 13th of May, 1856, the Commissioner of the Land Office said, in a letter to one of the settlers:

"The lands settled upon and occupied will be protected from location by scrip authorized to be issued by the act of July 17, 1854. The necessary instructions have this day been issued to the district offices at Red Wing and Winona on the subject."

The Department instructed the settlers that their rights would be protected; and it would come with a bad grace now for Congress to tell them that they shall be robbed of their lands because they followed the erroneous instructions of the Department. They were not bound to know the law better than the Commissioner, even if the construction now contended for was right.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I call the attention of the gentleman to the proviso to the first section of the act of 1854:

"And provided further, That no transfer or conveyance of any of said certificates or scrip shall be valid."

Now, if we interfere with any right or title originating under that law, we shall be responsible, and claims will be presented here hereafter. I will say further, that if the Indians have parted with the title under this act, why, then, of course there will be no difficulty; but let the courts decide between the parties, and not this House. I hope the gentleman will permit the bill to be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. BENNETT. No, sir; if the bill is to be passed at all, it ought to be passed now; as the Commissioner has suspended action, either way, for the action of Congress in the premises. I hope the bill will not be referred, but passed to-day. I call the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; being first upon Mr. SMITH's motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. GREENWOOD demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. CRAIG of North Carolina, and WALDRON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 72, noes 70.

Mr. BENNETT demanded the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. If this bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, will it not go upon the territorial Calendar, to be considered on the days set apart for territorial business?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will.

Mr. STANTON. Will it be printed in time to be considered on those days?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it will.

Mr. GROW. How many days have been set apart for the consideration of territorial business?

The SPEAKER. Two days.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 68, nays 96; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnold, Avery, Barksdale, Biscock, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, John B. Clark, Clemens, James Craig, Burton Craige, Crawford, Dimmick, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Florence, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Hopkins, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Leiter, Letcher, Macley, Mason, Miles, Miller, Millson, Isaac N. Morris, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Quitman, Reagan, Russell, Sandidge, Scales, Scott, Searing, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Underwood, Elihu B. Washburne, Watkins, Woodson, and Wortendyke—68.

YAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Atkins, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Chaffee, Cobb, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Curtis, Danrell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Gartrell, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hatch, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leach, Lovejoy, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Reilly, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, Ruffin, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, Winslow, and John V. Wright—96.

So the bill was not committed to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. DUFEE stated that his colleague, Mr. BRAYTON, had been called home by sickness in his family, and had paired off until Monday next with Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee.

The amendment to the bill was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BENNETT moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LETCHER demanded the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 124, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Andrews, Atkins, Barksdale, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Cobb, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Danrell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Elliott, English, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Giddings, Gillis, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Groesbeck, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Hickman, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Landy, Leach, Leidy, Lovejoy, Macley, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Millson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Reilly, Ricand, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stephens, James A. Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, and Wilson—124.

NAYS—Messrs. Avery, Bocoek, Branch, Caskie, Clay, Clemens, Crawford, Edmundson, Gartrell, Greenwood, Gregg, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Lawrence, Leiter, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, Miles, Miller, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Peyton, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Scales, Singleton, William Smith, Stevenson, Underwood, Woodson, and Zollcoffer—38.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. BENNETT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST ROUTE BILL.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to say that the post route bill, including post routes in the Territories as well as in the States, is in progress of preparation in committee, and nearly complete, in the room of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads; and I desire to give notice that upon the call of committees, if they are called next week, I shall report that bill. I would suggest to members, therefore, to call at the committee room and look over the bill, so as to ascertain whether routes in which they are interested are properly entered.

PUEBLO LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SANDIDGE, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported a bill to confirm the land claims to certain pueblos and towns in the Territory of New Mexico; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. SANDIDGE. The facts of the case are very fully set forth in the report of the committee, which I ask may be read.

Several MEMBERS. Let it go.

Mr. SANDIDGE. Very well; if there is no objection to the bill, I do not care to have the report read.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I demand the previous question upon the bill.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I would like to inquire the extent of these claims, and how they come here?

Mr. SANDIDGE. The report sets forth all the facts of the case very fully; but I will state them briefly. These claims were granted to the Indians one hundred and sixty-eight years ago. The Indians had revolted, and were reconquered by the Spanish Government, when the claims were again confirmed by the Captain General of the Province. They were in most instances confirmed to four leagues exactly—measuring from the four corners of the temple in each pueblo—and the committee thought the intention generally was to confirm their claims to four leagues of land.

Mr. LOVEJOY. How many claims are there?

Mr. SANDIDGE. Seventeen.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I move to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and that it be printed. I shall vote against it; but I do not want the day consumed in the discussion. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I wish to inquire whether if this bill is referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, it will come up under the special order to-morrow?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. It will, if we are able to reach it.

The call for the previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. SANDIDGE, who reported the bill, said: I will respond now to any question any gentleman will ask in reference to this bill. The question of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. UNDERWOOD] may be answered in this way: these claims, although they are valid, are not held to be so by this Government, nor by any of its courts, until the claim shall have been acted on specifically. I will say, furthermore, that the whole land system of the Territory of New Mexico is held in abeyance until these private land claims shall have been acted on by Congress. All the donation grants made by the organic law of that Territory are also suspended until these private land claims shall have been acted on by Congress. There can be no difference of opinion as to the justice of confirming these claims. If the report of the committee had been read, there would have been reasons given to the House to satisfy every member of the necessity of this bill. All the superintendents of Indian affairs of that Territory have urged upon Congress the necessity of a confirmation of these claims. These Pueblo Indians are semicivilized Christian Indians. Their lands are, and have been, encroached upon by Mexicans and our own citizens. Their best lands are constantly being taken from them, from the fact that their boundaries cannot be fixed until their claims are confirmed by Congress.

Mr. STANTON. What is the origin of these claims?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union will not be agreed to.

The question was taken on the motion to refer the bill to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and it was disagreed to.

JAMES DOUGLAS.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill to refund to James Douglas, Governor of Vancouver's Island, $7,000 advanced by him, to supply the volunteers of Washington Territory with clothing and blankets during the late Indian war in that Territory; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. BRANCH, from the Committee on Territories, reported back a joint resolution and bills of the following titles, with the recommendation that they do not pass; which were laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. No. 189) for the construction of a road in the Territory of Nebraska from the Platte river to the Kansas line.

A bill (H. R. No. 188) to provide for building bridges across the Platte river, in the Territory of Nebraska.

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 17) authorizing the accounting officer of the Treasury to adjust and settle the accounts of a board of commissioners, appointed under joint resolution of the Territorial Assembly of Nebraska to prepare a code of laws for the government of the said Territory.

On motion of Mr. BRANCH, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial of the Mayor and City Council of the city of Omaha, Nebraska Territory, praying that said city may be reimbursed for money expended for work done and materials furnished on the capitol building of said Territory, in preparing the same for use, and that the same be laid upon the table.

CHARLES H. MASON.

Mr. BRANCH. I move to reconsider the vote by which, on yesterday, a bill for the relief of Charles H. Mason was referred to the Committee of the Whole House, in order that it may be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH. I now move that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

NEVADA TERRITORY.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia, from the Committee on Territories, reported a bill to organize the Territory of Nevada; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

MEMBERS OF TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURES.

Mr. KNAPP, from the same committee, presented an adverse report on the letter of Governor McMullin, of Washington Territory, recommending an increased per diem to the members of the Legislature of that Territory; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC PRINTING.

Mr. NICHOLS, from the Joint Committee on Printing, by unanimous consent presented a report in answer to a resolution of inquiry of the House, of April 8, 1858; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. J. B. HENRY, his Private Secretary, notifying the House that he had approved and signed an act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the year ending 30th June, 1859.

THE LECOMPTON CONSTITUTION.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, from the select committee on Kansas affairs, presented the report of that committee; which, with the views of the minority of the committee, was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I now move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, to take up territorial business.

PATENT OFFICE REPORTS.

Mr. SINGLETON. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That there be printed for the use of the House of Representatives, two hundred thousand extra copies of the report of the Commissioner of Patents on agriculture, for the year 1857, and ten thousand copies for the use of the Patent Office: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages contained in the said report shall not exceed five hundred and sixty eight, including ten pages of illustrations on wood: And provided further, That the entire amount of copy necessary to complete said report be placed in the hands of the Superintendent of the Public Printing on or before the 31st day of August next.

Mr. GROW. I rise to a point of order. These two days have been set apart for territorial purposes, under a special order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the report cannot be submitted, inasmuch as there is a motion pending to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SINGLETON. I will state that it is important that this matters should be attended to now, if gentlemen want the report at all.

Mr. GROW. After the territorial business is concluded the gentleman can offer his resolution.

Mr. SINGLETON. I withdraw the resolution.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi if this agricultural report of the Patent Office has been presented here?

Mr. SINGLETON. I have withdrawn the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has reference to that.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

The question was taken on Mr. STEPHENS's motion; and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. EXETER in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of territorial business.

COURTS IN TERRITORIES.

The first bill on the Calendar of territorial business was House bill (No. 59) in regard to courts and the holding of the terms thereof, in the Territory of Nebraska, reported back with an amendment.

The amendment was reported. It authorizes the judges of the supreme court in each Territory of the United States, to hold courts within their respective districts and counties for the purpose of hearing and determining all matters and cases, except those in which the United States are a party, provided that the expenses thereof be paid by the Territories or counties, and shall not be chargeable to the United States.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have consulted with the Delegates from the various other Territories, and they have agreed to the amendment—to make the act extend to all the Territories.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 544) to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill, which was read in extenso, provides for the establishment of a board of commissioners, for the purpose of ascertaining and settling the private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico.

The Clerk then proceeded to read the bill by sections for amendment.

Mr. BRANCH. This is a very long and complicated bill, and will occupy a good deal of time. I do not see the gentleman who reported it [Mr. BLAIR] in his seat. I move that it be passed over. I should like, for one, to have some explanation of the bill before I vote upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The bill cannot be postponed except by unanimous consent.

Several MEMBERS objected.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The provisions of this bill are familiar to me. I am as much opposed to it as to any bill that I have ever known to come before Congress. It proposes nothing at all but a repetition in New Mexico of what we have done in California. They who have served in the House, and whose attention has been called to the board instituted for California, must have been struck with the fact that this bill is a compendium of all that we ever passed upon that subject. Under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the rights of the people of New Mexico, Mexicans and others, are secured. Although we may institute land commissions from now until the day of judgment, and although we may declare that what transpires before the land commissions shall be conclusive between the United States and the claimants, so long as the treaty is the supreme law of the land, we cannot conclude a party. Speculators will avail themselves of the right to gather up hereafter the inchoate titles, and to assert them in the courts of the United States over the titles persons may acquire by entry upon lands which you have forfeited before the board of land commissioners. My experience convinces me that, by the passage of such a bill as this, we shall only provide litigation for these people of a foreign race whom we have taken under our Government, and whose rights we have secured by treaty. If we intend to protect those rights, this is the worst mode in which we can set about the business.

Look at the provisions of this bill. You institute a board of land commissioners, and require every man having a private land title in New Mexico, to bring his title before this board. If you refer to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, you will see that you have secured to every man in New Mexico, who holds a title, the right to it, whether it be perfect or inchoate, although he should never choose to exhibit it to your board. What is the object of requiring him to come before your board? You say, in order that you may determine what is private and what is public land. That may be the purpose; it will not be the only effect. When this thing was first done to California, Colonel Benton opposed it. We have now no excuse for following the example set then, with the history of California before our eyes. In the progress of our connection with California, a great many provisions of this bill were put in, subsequently, as amendments to the original law. They are all in this bill. You require every man to come up and spread the evidence of his title before a board of commissioners; you permit the district attorney to appeal from the decision of the board of commissioners to the district court. See section twelve for the following:

"That in every case in which the board of commissioners shall render a final decision, it shall be their duty to have two certified transcripts prepared of their proceedings and decision, and of the papers and evidence on which the same are founded; one of which transcripts shall be filed with the clerk of the proper district court, and the other shall be transmitted to the Attorney General of the United States."

By this proceeding you require the whole chain of title to every foot of land in New Mexico to which there has been a Spanish or Mexican claim, with the evidence upon which it is founded, to be sent to the Attorney General's office, in the city of Washington, in order that he may judge whether the United States will appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. And when these records come to the Attorney General's office, what is there to prevent them from being copied, and copied for lawyers, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any flaw or weak place in the title of any man in New Mexico? What is there to prevent lawyers here from resolving themselves into a committee of speculators at the seat of Government, to harass these people in New Mexico out of their lives, as well as out of their lands?

The New Mexican has a right to his land by treaty; but the effect of this bill is to embark him on a boundless sea of litigation where no man's title is safe, and where no man can obtain his title without years of toil and risk; for, after the board of commissioners have decided against the Government, the district attorney may then carry it to the district court of the United States; after it has been carried through the district court, it will come to the Supreme Court, where, with good luck, one may obtain a decision in ten years. By that time, some man who has "squatted" upon the land, under the pretense that it is public land, (the original holder not having been able to show a patent,) will contest the title of the holder of the old grant, and this new litigation must be undertaken: so with every man who may see fit to set up a claim for the land; and the Commissioner of the General Land Office cannot give the patent until the litigation is wholly concluded. When will that take place? Possibly in the second or third generation.

Sir, if you want the squatters and speculators to cheat these people of New Mexico out of their lands, pass this bill. If you want to violate your treaty and inflict a curse upon New Mexico, pass this bill. I will guaranty that it will produce a repetition of the enormities that have been perpetrated upon the Spanish holders of titles in California for the last ten years.

These people are entitled by the treaty to their lands. Is this the least expensive mode by which their title can be ascertained? If a man wants his title to his land established by testimony, what is to prevent the territorial court from establishing it? What is to prevent the Territorial Legislature from enacting a simple process for ascertaining the boundary of concessions, such as is adopted in many of the western States—let a surveyor go upon the ground and run the lines, in the presence of witnesses, and declare this processioning shall be evidence of title after its registration, undisputed, for a certain time? Why force the holder, in every particular instance, to prove his title before a board of commissioners? Why compel every one to resort to this most expensive mode of litigation? Why not permit the Territorial Legislature to establish a simple process by which the matter may come before the territorial courts for adjudication? By the adoption of this system we shall commence a war upon the people of New Mexico; for it is nothing more nor less than the worst sort of war to start the United States as a litigant upon one side, and each private claimant to land under Spanish title as the litigant on the other, and then to give every man who chooses to contest the claim to the land for which the United States can show no claim, liberty to come forward and to use the authority of the United States, ad infinitum, in prolongation of the controversy!

I practiced my profession for many years in a county which was subjected to these cross titles. I speak from experience when I assure the committee that the passage of this bill will impose the greatest curse upon the people of New Mexico that Congress can inflict upon them. I have no further interest in this matter than to prevent what I am convinced will prove the greatest injustice to that people.

It is said the Mesilla Valley is rich in minerals. Then the Mesilla Valley will be overrun by a parcel of squatters. If the proprietors under the Spanish grants are required to produce before a board of commissioners the evidence by which they hold their property, they will never see the end of the law, nor will they ever obtain what they are entitled to by the treaty. No, sir; this is a bill of pains and penalties for the people of New Mexico; it is a bill to forfeit their estates. It is a bill of escheat to pass the grants made under prior sovereignties to whoever may choose to squat upon the lands of New Mexico.

When this thing was attempted in California, the result was foretold, though the same excuse was offered then that is presented now to justify this proceeding. I do not know what the condition of California may be to-day, but though the law to separate private from public lands in California was made in 1848, up to 1857 there had been but one patent issued in that State, and that was a title which was coerced by the mandamus of the Supreme Court of the United States, in Fremont's Mariposa case. It was the only patent that had been issued in California from the date of the peace up to 1857.

I have, sir, some consideration for the people of New Mexico; they are of foreign origin. This is one of the cases where I can make a speech for the rights of him who was an alien. They have rights under the treaty; I want to preserve those rights. I do not want to see the paternal Government of the United States, which should be just and equal to all its citizens, instituting what all of us should know is a system of oppression upon the people of New Mexico. I would rather let these people go before their own territorial tribunals. I am in favor of letting the Territorial Legislature provide the means of ascertaining the boundaries of the claims, of letting them prescribe their own limitations; and I am in favor of letting them have their lands surveyed. What shall we do with this land when we get it? put it up and sell it for $1 25 an acre, and after it has been awhile in market sell it for a bit an acre. I presume that much of it is not worth a bit an acre. But when we shall have acquired it, at the end of that long litigation, we will let the preëmptor take it. The preëmptor will settle it; and, sir, the bona fide holder, under Spanish title, will grow gray before he will ever have his title settled, and the preëmptor will be dead and buried before his children will gain a title that will be worth a cent.

But, again, I ask you to observe that you are making a new corps of officers: three commissioners, salaries $10,000; attorneys, clerks, agents, &c. You are sending to New Mexico a whole corps of Federal officers for no other conceivable purpose than to superintend the best mode by which the squatter can cheat the real holder out of his title. I do not want to detain the committee; I have done my duty in calling the attention of the committee to the facts. This whole bill ought to be killed. We ought never to repeat the experiment of this bill.

Mr. SANDIDGE. Mr. Speaker, the member of the Committee on Private Land Claims [Mr. BLAIR] who reported this bill I am sorry to see is not now in his seat. I will, however, make some response to what has been said by the gentleman from Kentucky. I imagine the member from Kentucky and myself have in view a like object; and that is, to enable the people of the Territory of New Mexico to establish, in the quickest time and with the least expense to them, the right to their lands. That I take to be the gentleman's desire; certainly it is mine; and has been that of the Committee on Private Land Claims.

The member from Kentucky argues that if this bill is passed, all the rights of all the people of New Mexico will be put off for ten years, if they are tested in that time; and that before they are tested, these claims will all have passed into the hands of speculators. He further states, (and he gives that as a reason, I believe, why this bill, or indeed any bill, should not be passed by this House,) that by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the rights of these parties are protected by treaty. If that gentleman had lived, as I have done, in a State where Spanish and French titles have not only been held in abeyance for ten, but for fifty years, he would have known what difficulties the people of New Mexico are likely to suffer unless something of this kind is done for them by Congress. What is a perfect title in New Mexico? Can the holder point to any law upon your statute-book?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I point to the treaty.

Mr. SANDIDGE. Yes, sir; and I can refer to a bill upon the Calendar of this House, where, in a case from my own State, when the title was decided to be perfect by the United States district court in New Orleans, the Supreme Court of the United States threw it out, because the title was imperfect, and, therefore, the lower court had no jurisdiction in the case, and where Congress is now asked to confirm the title. Why was this? Because no law has been passed by this Government giving power to adjudicate these claims, and that power now rests here alone. The only way by which the claims of the citizens of New Mexico can be protected from what has taken place in Louisiana, Missouri, and other States, is this: These claimants must make some showing before some authority that they have certain claims; the claims are then marked upon the plats of surveys, and they so remain until they are decided by Congress or by some tribunal established by Congress. In Louisiana, Missouri, and Florida, the rights of many hundred claimants under French and Spanish authority have been withheld up to this period, and have remained undetermined. Why? Because Congress has not confirmed them—claims, sir, recognized as perfect by treaty, which is considered the supreme law of the land. Yet while recognized by treaty, they are as worthless as the paper upon which their titles are written, unless confirmed by Congress. That, sir, is an answer which every man acquainted with the system of private claims in territories acquired from foreign Governments knows to be true.

Now, sir, the first claim yet acted on in New Mexico was acted on this morning in this House by the passage of the bill relating to the Pueblos, and it is ten years since we acquired that Territory. When we have taken so long a time to act in this case, how long will it be before we shall have acted in all these cases? Sir, as I have said, there are in my State many claims under original French and Spanish rule which are yet undecided. There are a number of bills here now to confirm these claims. This bill proposes some shorter way for arriving at the same end. We all know what kind of delays claimants are subjected to who come here for relief. This bill provides that the claimants shall make exhibits of their titles before the board of commissioners which is to be organized under it. You are to have an agent there to watch the interests of the Government. If your agent be dissatisfied with the decision of the board, he takes an appeal to the courts, and there the matter is definitely adjudicated.

It is said, however, that the system will be expensive. I admit that the bill will entail expense; but the presumption is, that no appeal will be taken unless in cases where there is good reason to believe they were not fairly adjudicated by the board of commissioners. But, in any event, it would not, perhaps, cost the claimant more money or more time to procure a decision by the courts than he is subjected to now that he has to come to Congress.

But the gentleman from Kentucky suggests very significantly the question: what is to prevent the board of commissioners from becoming a board of land speculators?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The gentleman is mistaken in ascribing such a sentiment to the gentleman from Kentucky. He said that a band of speculators would look at the papers in the office.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Here is what I said: your law requires that a transcript of the papers making the chain of title, and the evidence on which it rests, shall be sent to the office of the Attorney General of the United States, so that that officer will become the depository of the whole mass of titles of the people of New Mexico. What is to prevent a horde of speculators here from ascertaining the land titles of the people of New Mexico, and resolving themselves into a board of speculators, to bedevil the New Mexicans out of their land?

Mr. SANDIDGE. I thought the gentleman had charged his suspicion on the board itself.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Oh no.

Mr. SANDIDGE. At present, the surveyor general alone constitutes the board of commissioners; and we have thought it desirable, very desirable, to change that system, for this reason: the people of New Mexico are not quite willing to have their titles decided upon by one man, who, besides adjudicating, is required to go into the field and locate them.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Louisiana, if by the present law it is made obligatory on the owners of lands to furnish to the surveyor general abstracts of their respective titles?

Mr. SANDIDGE. Yes, sir, that is the law now, and this bill proposes to take from this one man the execution of so great a trust. It is because the people of New Mexico are dissatisfied with the system, that the committee propose to establish a board such as has been established in every State of the Union that was acquired from foreign countries? We have had a number of such boards in Louisiana, and such boards have also been established in Missouri and Florida. This is not a departure from the rule.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Louisiana, what law it is to which he refers, which requires the New Mexicans to submit their claims to the surveyor general?

Mr. SANDIDGE. The law of 1854, establishing the office of surveyor general of New Mexico.

Mr. BRANCH. I would inquire from my friend whether, in the case he has supposed, he is of the opinion that there is a court on this continent which would hold that an individual had lost his title by reason of his failure to bring forward his title papers? In other words, whether he supposes that the act of Congress to which he alludes overrides and is superior to the treaty which this Government made with the Government of Mexico, by which the Territory was acquired?

Mr. SANDIDGE. I can only answer the gentleman in this way. Treaties are said to be the supreme law of the land; and yet, practically, claims of the character alluded to by the gentleman from North Carolina have been sold by the Government. The parties afterwards sought to establish their claims before the courts, and were thrown out of court, and then came to Congress for some sort of indemnification; and Congress, in all such cases, allowed them to locate the same amount of land elsewhere.

Mr. BRANCH. Can my friend mention any case in which any court held that a title, otherwise good, had been vitiated by reason of a failure to comply with an act of Congress?

Mr. SANDIDGE. I will not undertake to say that.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am referred by the gentleman to the eighth section of the act to establish the office of surveyor general of New Mexico; and I submit to the gentleman that it is a much better provision than this bill. It is as follows:

"Sec. 8. And be it further enacted, That it shall be the duty of the surveyor general, under such instructions as may be given by the Secretary of the Interior, to ascertain the origin, nature, character, and extent of all claims to lands under the laws, usages, and customs of Spain and Mexico; and, for this purpose, may issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other necessary acts in the premises. He shall make a full report on all such claims as originated before the cession of the territory to the United States by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of 1848, denoting the various grades of each of the same, under the laws, usages, and customs of the country before its cession to the United States; and shall also make a report in regard to all pueblos existing in the Territory, showing the extent and locality of each, stating the number of inhabitants in the said pueblos, respectively, and the nature of their titles to the land. Such report to be made according to the form which may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; which report shall be laid before Congress for such action thereon as may be deemed just and proper, with a view to confirm bona fide grants, and give full effect to the treaty of 1848 between the United States and Mexico; and, until the final action of Congress on such claims, all lands covered thereby shall be reserved from sale or other disposal by the Government, and shall not be subject to the donations granted by the previous provisions of this act."

Now, the surveyor general has no right, under this law, to determine a man's title. He has no right to do anything at all except to ascertain whether a private title overlies a particular piece of land; and when he ascertains that fact he reports it here, and all that we do is to vouchsafe to the proprietor of such title, that until we ascertain here in Congress whether it ought to be confirmed or not, the Government shall not dispose of the land. Now you are instituting quite another operation.

Mr. SANDIDGE. The gentleman has read the very law that I referred to. I say this in response to him, that I hold in my hand a bill which originated in the other wing of the Capitol, to confirm a large number of claims reported in Missouri, Arkansas, Florida, and Louisiana, of the same character as the claims contemplated by this bill. Some of them were reported in 1812. The gentleman talks about delay. Here are claims reported on favorably by a board of commissioners in 1812, nearly fifty years ago, and they have never yet been confirmed by Congress, and the claimants have for all that time had no titles to exhibit.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I would inquire of the gentleman whether the proprietors of these titles have ever been ousted of their possession in the mean time?

Mr. SANDIDGE. Yes, sir; and they would have been ousted in every instance, if the Government, instead of simply reserving the lands from sale, had gone on to sell them as they did other lands.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to delay the committee, and shall add but a word. This bill proposes to effect one purpose, and one only. It will give entire satisfaction to the people of New Mexico, who are more willing to trust their claims in the hands of a regular board of commissioners than in the hands of one man, the surveyor general. The Committee on Private Land Claims believe that the claims will be sooner decided, if brought before such a board, with the right of appeal to the courts, than if the claimants are compelled to come to Congress. That is all I have to say.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I think the bill before the House is one that ought to pass. The interests of the Territory to which it relates require its passage, and any gentleman who has had experience of the evils growing out of the failure, not only to inaugurate, but to carry out the policy it gives effect to in a Territory in the situation of New Mexico, will be fully sensible to the necessity for the action proposed now to be had.

Mr. Chairman, I am a citizen of Louisiana, and I happen to be familiar with the character of the titles that existed in the Territory of Louisiana at the time of its cession. These titles stood very much upon the same footing with the titles which now exist in the Territory of New Mexico. The necessity which exists now with reference to New Mexico existed with reference to Louisiana. The Congress of the United States failed to discharge the duties which they owed to the people of the State, and Louisiana suffered for years, and suffers to-day, because of the failure to do that at once which this act proposes now to have done with reference to New Mexico. When Louisiana was ceded to the United States there was a treaty which guaranteed to its inhabitants the possession of their property. That treaty was of as solemn a character as the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. That treaty has been again and again expounded by your courts. And what was the result? That rights of property within the Territory of Louisiana were undetermined, and that individuals whose rights had been guaranteed to them by the faith of the Government of the United States, were liable to be disquieted day after day and year after year by the operation of general laws of the United States, relating to the lands of the United States. Persons whose rights were derived from the action of the prior Government, were disturbed again and again by the interruptions of the class of persons to whom the gentleman from Kentucky referred as squatters, and they were disturbed, not because of legislation of this character, but because of the want of legislation of this character, or of the failure to carry it into effect.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what is the character of the titles to lands in New Mexico? They are divided into two classes. There are perfect grants, there are titles with respect to which the Government has taken every necessary step, and which have become what is known under the Spanish law as perfect grants—titulos in forma; those titles are protected by the treaty; the holders of them have standing in courts of justice, because their titles are legal titles. But a large proportion, a vast majority of the titles in existence in New Mexico are, as they were in Louisiana, of an entirely different kind; they are not titles that have been completed by the final action of the Government; there has been no perfect grant; they are inchoate titles. Individuals are in possession of land which they had been permitted to enter upon by the Government; they have remained in possession, and under the Government of Mexico they were not liable to be disturbed, because, under the usage of that Government, they would have been permitted to remain there, and at a future day the Government might complete their titles. The very fact of their taking possession, with the permission of the proper officer, gave them an equitable right—a right which our laws do not recognize, but a right of such a character that it must be respected under the treaty, though it has no standing in a court of justice. And how is the obligation imposed on us by the treaty to be fulfilled?

A portion of these titles depend upon the political action of the Government. That was had in reference to Louisiana, and that must be had again by Congress, if justice is to be done with respect to New Mexico. Now, sir, persons possessed of such claims, having no positive evidence of a title, such as to enable them to keep off trespassers, may, in the event of the passage of a preemption law, have their lands trespassed upon, and are liable to be dispossessed of them by the action of the land offices of the Government. That occurred every day in Louisiana. The perfect grants needed no presentation. They were complete. The holders of them could assert their rights before a court of justice. But imperfect titles had no standing in a court of justice; and until the passage of an act of Congress providing for their completion—in conformity with the usages of the Government under which they had their origin—the lands embraced in them might be sold as a part of the public domain.

Now, with respect to this Territory, Congress has already made provision that where claims are filed with the surveyor general, the titles shall be examined before the lands embraced in them can be exposed for sale. But this bill goes further, and provides that the Government of the United States shall proceed in the same manner that the Government of Mexico would have proceeded to complete these titles. The bill vests in a board of commissioners authority to examine and decide upon the claims presented on equitable principles in favor of the claimants, to give them the same effect as they would have received from the Mexican authorities. But that decision, whether for or against the claim, is subject to an appeal. It, however, marks out a course of action which will terminate, so far as the United States is concerned, all controversy in reference to a given claim within a limited time. If the bill goes into operation, these claims will be settled finally, and those persons holding claims under an imperfect title will know what they have to depend on. Unless some such provision be made, these lands will remain in the condition in which a portion of the lands in Louisiana remained for thirty or forty years, subject to be encroached upon by those who see fit to settle upon them under the preemption acts.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand the gentleman to say that the titles under those old Spanish grants are of two descriptions—one perfect and the other imperfect. Now, I ask the gentleman if this board, which it is proposed to create, can make perfect titles out of those which are now imperfect?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Yes, sir. The eleventh section of the bill provides:

"That the commission herein provided for, and the district and supreme courts, in deciding on the validity or invalidity of any claim brought before it or them under the provisions of this act, shall be governed by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, the law of nations, the laws, usages, and customs of the Government from which the claim is derived, the principles of equity, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, as far as they are applicable."

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that an imperfect title is one which is deficient in some essential particular; and how can any such board supply such deficiency so as to make it a perfect title?

Mr. BLAIR. The deficiency may be a mere matter of form.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. The effect of the bill is to give the board of commissioners authority to proceed precisely as the Government of Mexico would have proceeded under her laws and usages. The laws and usages of Mexico were abrogated at the time of the cession of the Territory to the United States; and the object of this provision is to vest in this board authority to proceed in the same manner that Mexico would have done.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Louisiana pardon me for asking another question? I know he is a veteran lawyer, and will not be disturbed by an interruption, and I desire to obtain his opinion. I suppose the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo perfected the titles which the parties had prior thereto. If the laws and usages of Mexico would have inured to perfect the title to the holder, prior to that treaty, it of course strengthens his possession of the title which he could have obtained from the original Government.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. It is unnecessary to enter upon the discussion of that subject. All I have intended to do was to refer to the practice of the Government under the treaty of 1803, by which the people of Louisiana were protected in their rights of property. The language of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo is identically the same. Under that provision of the treaty of 1803, the Supreme Court of the United States have holden again and again that these titles to which I refer, as being complete titles, were protected by the treaty, whether they were presented to the commissioners or not. They were valid, but that all the other classes of titles, those imperfect titles which may be designated as inchoate titles, requiring the political action of the Government for their completion, would not be protected by the treaty without the confirmation of the board of commissioners. Now, under this article relative to the same class of titles, the language of the treaty is precisely the same as that in the treaty for the cession of Louisiana, in 1803. A board of commissioners is authorized to proceed, and do that which the Mexican Government would have done to perfect the rights which had begun to exist in the usual manner, and in good faith, with the permission of the Government.

Mr. REAGAN here made a remark which was not heard by the reporter.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. In the action with respect to Louisiana, the same thing was introduced, to which the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] has referred, in order that there might be a demarcation between the lands owned by private individuals and those owned by the Government. You cannot compel those persons who have perfect titles to go before the commissioners for the purpose of reestablishing their rights; and the acts in relation to Louisiana were drawn up with more care than the present one, and made a marked distinction between persons having perfect titles and those with imperfect titles. One class—those with perfect titles—were permitted to come before the board of commissioners, while the other—with imperfect ones—were required to go there. It was an object for those holding perfect titles to go before the commissioners and present the evidence of their titles, because with that evidence, the land was represented in the plats of survey by the surveyor general as private property, and was no longer subject to be encroached on. Where this was not done, there have been instances in which lands covered by complete titles have been lost to the original holder. And there can be no doubt that under the land system of the United States, the interest of all claimants of lands in our newly acquired Territories, requires that their claims should be registered.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have said all I wish to say on this subject. I will only state further, as it is within my knowledge, that within the limits of the State of Louisiana, owing to a failure on the part of the Government to comply with these requisitions, or to enforce them, the titles, in a large extent of country, remained unsettled, and in consequence of it large bodies of the public land could not be brought into market because of the impossibility of determining the lines of demarcation between public and private property. Louisiana suffered under the evils growing out of this state of things for upwards of thirty years. The settlement of large portions of her territory was prevented during the whole of that time, because the public lands within her limits could not be brought into market. And again, sir, her citizens, because of the uncertainty hanging over many of their titles, were prevented from enjoying to the fullest extent their rights of property, for this uncertainty prevented them from making the improvements they otherwise would have made upon their lands. If the House desires that the people of New Mexico should escape similar evils, the policy on which this bill is founded must be carried out.

Mr. BLAIR obtained the floor, but yielded to Mr. RITCHIE. With the permission of the gentleman from Missouri, I desire to put a question to the gentleman from Louisiana in the case where the titles are inchoate and the land has been surveyed and the patent issued by the United States, is not the patentee under the United States entitled to take possession of the land?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. No patent issues until there has been action by some tribunal constituted by the Government.

Mr. RITCHIE. Suppose there is an inchoate title, and that the surveyor general goes on not knowing the title and surveys the land, and a patent is issued, is not that patentee entitled to take the land on that?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Where there is a title unconfirmed by the Government, it is always ousted by a title emanating from the United States.

Mr. BRYAN. What, under this bill, would be the condition of that class of settlers whose titles were destroyed by an invasion of the Apache Indians, at the time the land office at El Paso was fired? Texas has had occasion to legislate in behalf of her citizens on the northern frontier, whose titles had been destroyed during the invasions of the Apaches, and who had only transcripts given them by the priest. What, under this bill, would be the condition of a large body of men in New Mexico, who would have, for the reason I have stated, no title?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I have not examined the bill with all the care that its importance merits. There may be an omission in this bill. But in Louisiana a provision was made that parol evidence of the particular fact of possession should entitle the party to confirmation. For instance: in the Territory of Louisiana it was discovered, after long experience, that there were a multitude of individuals who had no written evidence of title, they having been destroyed by fire or lost. The Government of the United States, for the purpose of protecting that class of people who were in possession of the property to which they would have had no difficulty in obtaining a new title from the Spanish or the French Government, passed an act by which they authorized the commissioners to take into consideration all such claims, and to hear testimony showing the fact of their having entered upon them with the permission of the proper officer, and of having possessed them within certain boundaries, and authorized the commissioners to confirm those claims. At a subsequent period, when it became difficult, owing to the lapse of time, to prove the concession from the Spanish officer, then another act was passed, providing that a possession for ten years previously should be presumptive evidence of such a permission having been given.

Mr. LANE. I should like to put a question to the gentleman and the House, and that is, what is to become of the other territorial business, if this debate is to continue?

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I am sorry that I have taken up the time; but the subject demanded some explanation.

Mr. BLAIR. I was unfortunate in not being in the House when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] urged his objections to this bill. I am not apprised of what they are, only by what I have heard since I came in.

It has been the settled policy of this Government, in reference to its acquisitions, to confirm claims of the inhabitants to their property; and acts of Congress, similar to the one now pending before us, have passed with that end in view. The members from Louisiana, who have just spoken, have stated, I think, the effects of the treaty, in reference to their State, correctly. These grants are undoubtedly covered by treaty; but the United States required that the claimants should show their titles, in order that the Government might know what has been confirmed by treaty, and what not. I undertake to say that there are no titles in the State of Missouri, at least, which do not emanate from this Government. I say that no concessions or grants from the Spanish Government would be recognized in our courts, or have ever been recognized, which were not confirmed by the Government of the United States. Gentlemen have spoken of what are called perfect grants. In Missouri there were no perfect grants, with a few exceptions. The viceregal power on this continent was so far distant from Missouri while under the sway of Spain and then of France, that the forms by which perfect titles were acquired could not be complied with, except in rare instances. I cannot, now, call to mind one of them. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided, in one or two instances, that these titles must emanate from the Government of the United States.

Mr. QUITMAN. The gentleman is slightly mistaken. The Supreme Court have not gone so far as to reject all claims confirmed by treaty. They have acknowledged the perfectness of those grants recognized by treaty. I admit that they have construed the language of the treaty very strictly against the confirmation, as in a case under the treaty of San Ildefonso, Florida, where they construed the words of the treaty "shall be confirmed," as requiring some future action of Congress before they could be recognized judicially.

Mr. REAGAN. I will add, as an evidence that the action of Congress is not necessary to maintain perfect titles, that, under the constitution of the late Republic of Texas, the rights of property, and of action in the courts, was preserved to the former inhabitants of the country, as the right of property was reserved to the people of Louisiana by the treaty of 1803, and to the people of New Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, and that those titles have been adjudicated and sustained in the courts of Texas; and the decisions of her courts sustaining these titles have been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, without any other legislative affirmation.

Mr. BLAIR. We had a bill before this House this morning to confirm the titles of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico—titles granted one hundred and sixty-eight years ago by the Captain General of Spain, and to lands which have been occupied ever since by those Indians. What is the necessity for that confirmation?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. None in the world.

Mr. BLAIR. If any flaw could be picked by which those confirmations were made under the civil law, their titles would not have been perfect, and would not have been recognized; and if not recognized, they would have failed against any title given by this Government.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I will ask the gentleman whether he does not know that the right of property has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to exist even in an inchoate title; and that, though the title be inchoate, the right of title being secured by treaty, it is made perfect by force of the treaty?

Mr. BLAIR. I agree with the gentleman that this Government recognizes, and is compelled to recognize, the property guaranteed under these treaties; but the Government has a right to know what that property is. There is a case decided by the Supreme Court—Massey vs. Menard. The land embraced a large deposit of iron. It was in one of the interior counties of Missouri. There was a grant or concession from the Spanish Government; the Government of the United States sold the land, and the Spanish grantees sued for it. The court decided that, although their title was a good one, still, as the land was not located specifically, that they ought to have come in and had the land which was confirmed surveyed, or else they could not get it. Their title failed, and the title given by the Government held against them. The Government, in that instance, was compelled to make good what those grantees had been deprived of, by granting them scrip for land elsewhere; but the land that was valuable was, nevertheless, taken from them. Their title went before the court, as I have said, and it was there decided against them, because it was not surveyed and located. This bill is to ascertain and settle these land claims in New Mexico.

One of the gentleman's objections is, that if they come forward and show their titles, they will show the weak spots in them. I would ask whether the land system all over the world is not open to the same objection? Cannot you go into any recorder's office in the United States and find whether or not there is a flaw in this title, or that, or the other? Certainly you can. It is absolutely necessary that there should be some system, that a man may know where to find a title, and to ascertain whether it is a good or a bad one.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. In order that the gentleman may meet my objection, I will state it. My objection was this: that by this bill you required in every case the evidence of the party claiming to be sent to the Attorney General's office at Washington. To have a recorder's office in New Mexico, where people who wanted to buy lands in New Mexico might look at the titles, is one thing; but when you require a transcript of every title to be made out and sent here, that is another thing.

Mr. BLAIR. That is an objection to the details of the bill. If the gentleman from Kentucky, or any other gentleman, wishes to have the bill amended, and will offer an amendment to perfect it, he will have my cooperation. All I want is, that the people of New Mexico may have a title to their lands. They will get none until their lands have been confirmed. We recognize none other than our own titles. There are forms which have to be complied with beyond the treaty guarantees. We have to ascertain and settle these titles.

Mr. Chairman, I know of no mischief which could befall a people like that of an uncertainty in their land titles. The people in New Mexico who have these titles are the descendants of those who have lived there for a century; and I say that it is a shame that, at this day, not one of them should have a title to the land upon which he lives. There cannot be a title there not confirmed by this Government; and I ask the gentlemen who are so solicitous about the rights of the people there, to confine themselves to amending the details of the bill, and not prevent the passage of any measure for their relief.

Mr. BRANCH. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a few moments in expressing the views I entertain on the subject of this bill. I agree entirely in the last remark made by the gentleman from Missouri, that no greater evil can befall any people than uncertainty as to their land titles. If there was any uncertainty as to the land titles in New Mexico, which this bill was calculated to remove, I should be very much inclined to give it my support; but on looking through the bill I find nothing, and in the remarks which have been made here by those who advocate the bill, I have heard nothing, that indicates that anybody in New Mexico is making contests with those in possession of the lands.

Mr. SANDIDGE. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say to him that I have ascertained from an examination of the claims pending before the Committee on Private Land Claims, that contests have taken place before the surveyor general, who at present is authorized to examine such cases.

Mr. BRANCH. Now, here is a country that seems to have been settled about two hundred years. The parties whose claims were included in the bill which passed the House this morning had held their lands, it was stated, for one hundred and sixty-eight years. These people have lived in peace and quietness, and we have not heard of these bitter contests, these pressing exigencies, these dangers to their land titles, until this bill was brought in for the establishment of this board of commissioners. It seems to me that the only party here which is making difficulty with the people of New Mexico in regard to their land titles, is the United States. On the one hand are certain private claimants, and on the other hand the United States, now the possessor, in virtue of its sovereignty over that country, of all lands not owned by individuals; and the object to be attained by this bill, and the only object, as far as I can perceive, is to ascertain, as far as we can, what lands are owned by private individuals, in order that the Government surveyors may not run their lines over those lands, and produce confusion and difficulty between these claimants and purchasers under the Government. That is the evil to be remedied, and that is the only evil, so far as I have heard in this debate, that is to be remedied at all.

Well, sir, the act organizing the territorial government of New Mexico provides a remedy for that evil. That act provides that parties claiming lands under grants from the Spanish Government may come in and prove their titles before the surveyor general, and thereupon the surveyor general is prohibited from having those lands surveyed and brought into market as lands belonging to the United States. That remedy is complete. It covers the entire case, as far as I can see. It reaches every part of the evil that we are to remove; and I can perceive no need of establishing this board of commissioners—an expensive machinery—on the pretense that we are thereby quieting land titles, when we have already provided means by which the only contestant of these claims can be satisfied, in the act organizing the Territory.

Mr. SANDIDGE. With the permission of the gentleman, I will state that it is true, as he says, that such claims as are presented are noted on the maps made out by the surveyor general; but there has never been any survey of the lands in New Mexico, either by the authority of the Spanish Government, or of this Government. The lines of these private claims are not known. Some of them cover ten, twenty, and thirty square miles. They are referred to in the original grants, by natural boundaries, as reaching from one mountain top to another, or from one stream to another; and it is utterly impossible, until the lands have been confirmed and surveyed, that any one going to the Territory should know what are public and what are private lands. This Government will not survey these claims until they have been confirmed; and the consequence is that there is no way of knowing what are Government lands and what private lands.

Mr. BRANCH. I apprehend that the Government will not survey the private lands at all. It is no part of the business of the Government to do it. All we need do is to ascertain, to the satisfaction of the Government, what are private lands, in order that they may be left out of the public surveys. I understand the act, which has been repeatedly referred to this morning, to provide the mode in which that shall be accomplished.

But, Mr. Chairman, there is a principle in this bill that strikes me as something new. It is proposed that we shall put these claimants to the lands upon proof of their titles when there is no one contesting their rights. That is against all my notions of justice and law. Our courts all hold that if I contest the title of an individual to a piece of land, and bring an action of ejectment against him, I must recover on the strength of my own title, and cannot rely upon the weakness of his. The court will not allow me to introduce testimony to show that his title is not good until I have first shown the strength of my own title. I must rest upon that.

Mr. BLAIR. The treaty by which we acquired this country guarantees that the right of these parties to their property shall be respected, and we are called upon now to carry out the guarantee. How can we do it until we know what property these men claim as theirs?

Mr. BRANCH. We have provided means of ascertaining that in the act organizing the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. BLAIR. These means are very imperfect. The questions are left to one person. This bill gives the claimant a commission and an appeal to the courts, so that they may have a final decision upon their titles. So far from being new in principle, if the gentleman were familiar with the practice of the Government in the case of Louisiana and Florida, he would find that this bill proceeds on identically the same principle—that of requiring the people to make proof of their titles, in order that the Government may protect them in their rights in compliance with the guarantee of the treaty.

Mr. BRANCH. I agree with the gentleman that in those cases the Government did require persons to come forward and show the lands to which they had titles; but this is the first instance, so far as I know, except in the case of California, in which it has been proposed to establish a special board of commissioners for that purpose. In the case of Florida, if I recollect aright, the whole class of claims was referred to the district judge for Florida. In the case of New Mexico, we have already provided means to enable the Government to know to what extent the private claims go, and to what extent the public surveys should be carried. The simple question is, whether, in the case of New Mexico, we shall leave it to be determined by the surveyor general—the officer to whom Congress has heretofore determined that it is willing to intrust it—or whether, in lieu of that, we will establish this expensive board of commissioners.

But, Mr. Chairman, I desire only to occupy a few minutes of the time of the committee; and as I know the impatience of gentlemen, I will proceed in the line of remark in which I was indulging when I was interrupted. I say, sir, that we are establishing a new principle. We are putting these parties in New Mexico who are in possession of the lands upon proof of their titles, with a view to oust them from their lands, instead of adopting the principle of law that if we claim what they hold possession of, we must show that it is ours, and not rest on the weakness of their titles. And we not only compel them to come forward and produce their title papers, in order to show that we are not entitled to the lands, but we invite the whole world to come forward and contest their titles also.

The parties who have been in possession of their homesteads perhaps for one hundred or one hundred and fifty years, unquestioned by any one; who have held their titles untainted by suspicion, are invited by this bill to come forward, after they have contested their titles in the first place with the Government, and contest them with every individual who may choose to set up a claim. They have first to succeed against the Government, and then against every private individual who may choose to contest their titles.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the gentleman if this is establishing any new principle? if he ever knew a civilized country in the world where the courts of justice are not always open to any person who may choose to contest any title to any property?

Mr. BRANCH. I ask the gentleman if he ever knew the Government in any civilized country, to invite and encourage their citizens to enter the courts of justice for the purpose of carrying on litigation against each other in respect to their titles to land?

Mr. BLAIR. I answer the gentleman in this way: The courts of justice in all countries are kept open for any person who may choose to contest the right of another to any property, and in that respect they hold out as much encouragement to litigation of that description as is held out by this bill.

Mr. BRANCH. It is a right which belongs to every American citizen to go before the courts of the country to assert his rights. But this bill goes further. I call the attention of the committee to the fourteenth section, which says:

"That if the title of any claimant to lands in said Territory filed before the commission shall be contested by any other person after decision rendered in the case, it shall and may be lawful for such person to present a petition to the district judge of the United States for the district in which the land is situated, plainly and distinctly setting forth his title thereto, and praying the said judge to hear and determine the same—a copy of which petition shall be served on the adverse party within thirty days before the time appointed for the hearing of the same; and it shall and may be lawful for the said district judge of the United States, upon the hearing of such petition, to grant an injunction to restrain the party at whose instance the claim to said lands has been confirmed from suing out a patent therefor until the title to the same shall have been finally decided—a copy of which order shall be transmitted, through the secretary of the commission, to the Commissioner of the General Land Office; and thereupon no patent shall issue until such decision shall be rendered, or until sufficient time shall, in the opinion of the said judge, have been allowed for obtaining the same, and thereafter the said injunction shall be dissolved: Provided, That a copy of the said decision shall be filed in the office of the commission, and transmitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office."

That, sir, is what we propose. After we have dragged them before the board of commissioners, and they have shown there that we are not entitled to the land, we then drag them before the district court of the United States, in order there again to contest their titles with every private individual who, from the exposures we have compelled them to make, may be induced to enter into litigation with them.

Mr. OTERO. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me, I will say that we are all willing to be dragged before the tribunals to which the gentleman refers, for the purpose of having our claims established. We do not want any indefinite action. We are willing to expose ourselves to whatever litigation may be involved. The bill will do us no injury. We want our land titles settled. The present mode is insufficient. We are not willing to trust the settlement of our land titles to a single individual. We are willing to take whatever inconveniences may be involved by the system which this bill proposes.

Mr. BRANCH. The point which has been made by the gentleman from New Mexico and by several other gentlemen in this debate, is the unsatisfactory nature of the decisions made by the surveyor general and the definiteness of the decisions which will be made by this board of commissioners. Now, sir, I hold that these are matters which have been settled long ago—that they were settled in the treaty entered into between Mexico and the United States. It is only necessary to carry out the provisions of that treaty, and I submit that for that purpose the courts of the Territory are by far the best tribunals—courts in which, I presume, the people of New Mexico have confidence; and in which they go, not before strangers, but before juries of their own countrymen, to contest their rights. I submit that this additional tribunal is not only unnecessary, but that it is not as good as that already provided; that it will not possess so much the confidence of the people of New Mexico as a tribunal which is to pass upon their rights.

Now, sir, the draft of this bill shows full well that the gentleman who drew it was entirely aware of the fact that this court could settle nothing except contests between the United States and private citizens. The sixteenth section expressly provides that—

"The final decisions rendered by the said commission or by the district or Supreme Court of the United States, on any patent to be issued under this act, shall be conclusive between the United States and the claimants only, and shall not affect the interests of third persons."

Now, sir, here is a provision that does not quiet title at all, except as between the United States and the private claimant. Why, then, have all this expensive process? why compel these people to produce the evidence of their titles which have remained undisturbed for one hundred and fifty years, in order to show speculators and mischievous persons the weak points and flaws in their titles, whereas the result of that litigation only amounts to preventing the United States from obtaining their rights, which has been already provided, by requiring the surveyor general to obtain such information as may be necessary upon that point?

Mr. QUITMAN. I did not intend to say a word upon this subject, but since the discussion has commenced, I have obtained some information of the nature of this bill, against which in the commencement I was somewhat prejudiced. Having had some experience in this matter, I feel myself called upon to present to this House the beneficial consequences which I think must arise from a course such as the one proposed by this bill. I have practiced law in the State of Mississippi for a period of more than twelve years, and during that period I had frequent occasion to examine and see the effect of a similar law.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BRANCH] is mistaken in saying that this is a new precedent. Early in the history of the Territory of Mississippi, soon after its acquisition from Spain, a law passed Congress authorizing a board of commissioners to be established, requiring them to have a clerk, to keep a record, and to examine all those inchoate and equitable claims which, under the treaty, the citizens had against the Government—claims which they held against the Spanish Government and the British Government, both of which had been, at some period, in possession of that country, and which this Government had never canceled, but which should have been canceled. Now, sir, independent of the treaty stipulations that the United States should execute all these valid contracts made by those other Governments, and to place the property in the same position as if the Government had not changed, I claim that the great doctrine of natural rights would have preserved these contracts, even if there had been no treaty to that effect. The Government of the United States were bound to protect them, and perform in good faith the equitable obligations which had been entered into but not consummated at a period before we acquired the Territory. The records of that board are there, and they save litigations to the extent of millions of dollars. My honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. BRANCH] seems to consider this a matter of little importance to the United States. Sir, no Government, then or now, would undertake to decide by legislation or by the establishment of informal boards, between claims of third persons. This act will remove alarm from the minds of the people of New Mexico. They know that there will be new claims made under our Government—that the United States is a progressive Government, acting more rapidly than the Mexican Government—and that it will proceed to regulate the public lands that it possesses. They know that the attempt to do so will embroil them in difficulties and confusion. They know that without such a law as this they will have to prosecute their claims at considerable expense before the courts of the country. This board of commissioners is to be appointed on the part of the Government of the United States, to go and examine on our part into those titles, and to say if they are just under the law of nations and under the treaty; and, if they are equitable titles, that they shall be perfected by a general act. If any are questionable, they still have a right to examine them before the courts; but probably ninety-nine out of every hundred will acquiesce in the decisions of the board. It is a bill of relief, and to these people is a very important measure.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having submitted my views briefly, I will not trespass longer on the patience of the committee. I have witnessed the beneficial operations of such a measure in Mississippi and Louisiana; and I can see no harm that is to result from the passage of this bill. I have looked into it to some extent; and I believe it contains no provision which, by any possibility, can be abused. I consider it better that a board of commissioners appointed by the United States should act upon it, than a single officer who has other duties to perform. The experience I have had teaches me that it will prevent much litigation and dispute; and I see no objection whatever to the measure.

Mr. STANTON. I have but a few words to say in respect to this bill. There is a principle contained in the eighth section of it which, it seems to me, cannot be found anywhere else. I have no experience in these Spanish land titles; but the eighth section of the bill, on its face, prima facie vitiates every land title in New Mexico. It declares that no man's title shall be sustained until he has first produced the records on which his title rests. Here is a total reversal of all the principles on which titles to real estate rest.

Mr. QUITMAN. My construction of that section is, that it simply protects a landholder against the United States treating his lands as public lands.

Mr. STANTON. That section makes it the duty of every landholder in New Mexico to present the records and other evidence of his title; on failure to present them, the land is to be surveyed and to be sold as public lands. Your patent issues to the purchaser, and the title of the original occupant is cut up by the roots. Now, I had supposed that a cardinal principle of real estate law was, that possession was prima facie evidence of title, and that no possession of real estate can be disturbed or interfered with, or set aside, except on the production of superior title.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. The gentleman says that possession is prima facie evidence of title. The Government holds such possession. Then, if the title produced does not defeat that prima facie evidence, the presumption is that the land belongs to the Government. If a man is in possession and cannot show a higher title than that of the Government, which title will prevail?

Mr. STANTON. That is a different proposition, and I will not go into it. I do not apprehend myself that there is any such possession on the part of the Government of all the lands within the territorial limits as comes within the principle I have stated. The fact that there has been a conquest of the country and a change of the sovereignty does not change the principle of law applicable to the case. We have merely succeeded to the sovereignty and jurisdiction of Mexico, under which these people previously claimed. It does not affect their title any more than a change of administration in the General or State Government—not a particle more. Every man in possession of real estate, exercising acts of ownership over it, claiming it as his own adversely to the Government and to all the world, is presumed to be the owner until a better title is shown in somebody else. That, I take it, is the law. Now here are parties in possession of lands in New Mexico which they and their ancestors have held for one or two centuries, claiming ownership against all the world. This bill proposes that the parties so occupying shall now be required to produce the evidence of their title, and file it with this board of commissioners; and, on failure to make satisfactory proof of title, the party shall lose his land, and it shall be sold as public land, although it may have been in the occupation of his family for hundreds of years.

Mr. BLAIR. Have the persons who were in possession of land in New Mexico, under Spanish law, a fee simple in the lands?

Mr. STANTON. I do not know.

Mr. BLAIR. Well, if they have not, have we granted them such title?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly we have.

Mr. BLAIR. If they have possession, and that gives them a prescriptive right under the civil law in Mexico, they can prove it before the commissioners and get a fee-simple title from the United States; and I would like to know if it would not be better for these people to have their title from the United States than to go on with this simple prescriptive title?

Mr. STANTON. I do not care, for the purpose of my argument, by what name you call the title of the occupant under the Spanish Government. All I claim is, that a party who has claimed title, and whose claim has been recognized by the Spanish Government for a time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, shall have his claim recognized by this Government, as the successor of the Spanish Government.

Mr. BLAIR. It is recognized at this time.

Mr. STANTON. By this bill he is required, before his title is recognized, to file the proof. Many of these title papers may have been lost. And for whose benefit and convenience is all this to be done? For the convenience of the United States; that we may know our public lands. If the United States wants to know what lands it has a right to sell, let it find that out at its own expense, and not put the persons who have a perfect right to their lands to the expense of filing their title papers here.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Did we not acquire New Mexico by treaty?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. What did we acquire thereby?

Mr. STANTON. We acquired jurisdiction and sovereignty over the whole people, and acquired title to the unoccupied lands.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Then we acquired the fee simple of the whole Territory.

Mr. STANTON. No, sir.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. Except so far as another provision of the treaty recognizes the right of those who own the land in the Territory. That is an exception to the general provisions of the treaty which conveys to us the country. If we are bound to recognize the right of the citizens to the lands which they occupy, is it not, then, the duty of the citizen to show that he comes within the provisions of the treaty made for his benefit?

Mr. STANTON. I think not; and for this very plain reason. I do not hold that in the absence of an express grant in the treaty, the conquest of the country and the cession of the jurisdiction and title would vest the title of individuals in real estate in the conquering country. It only conveys to the conqueror such title as the conquered Government might rightfully convey. And of whatever portion of the soil or territory of the conquered country, grants may have been made to individuals, the individual rights of the party are not affected by the cession of jurisdiction, and of so much of the soil as was unoccupied.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I happen to have some familiarity with, and my constituents happen to have some interest in, a question somewhat similar, and which will illustrate this. The State of Virginia reserved, out of the cession to the State of Ohio, the lands lying between the Little Miami and the Scioto rivers, to satisfy land warrants. Nearly the whole of the territory has been covered by these warrants; but still there is a residuum of sixty thousand acres. It has never been surveyed. It has been ceded by the State of Virginia to the United States, and the United States holds the title to-day; and there is no means, except by a survey, of ascertaining the appropriated lands from the non-appropriated lands. Now, the United States might just as well call upon the landholders in that district to file their title papers, exhibit their titles, and show their boundaries, that the Government might know how much land it has got to lay off and sell, as do so in the case of New Mexico. Now, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, whether the people of that district would submit to a law calling on some one hundred thousand inhabitants there to exhibit, and file here, and send to the Attorney General's office, a chain of their title, and a description of their boundaries, that the United States might know how to survey the lands left?

Mr. BLAIR. Are not these titles, in that district, of record?

Mr. STANTON. Certainly they are.

Mr. BLAIR. They can be then ascertained by the surveyor of the Government. My position in this matter is, that the title of every man in this country to real estate should be of record somewhere.

Mr. STANTON. Very well, Mr. Chairman, that is just precisely the ground on which I desire to place the United States and the New Mexicans. A man may have a title by possession, and the surveyor can ascertain the extent of his possession. I ask the United States, in New Mexico as elsewhere, to ascertain at their own expense, and through their own agents, what is public and what is private land, and not subject the owner to the expense and hazard and inconvenience of filing his title.

Now I know, and every gentleman knows, who is familiar with that description of land title which originates in private surveys, where they are not made by the public authorities in sections, and quarter sections, and towns, and townships; but where the surveyor goes into an unsurveyed country, and lays off boundaries in whatever shape they may suit him—every man knows that when you come to make a minute resurvey of a country so located, when you come to file descriptions, and to plant these descriptions, you will find laps of conflicting surveys, and strips between surveys, shoe-strings, and three-cornered handkerchiefs, and things of that sort, which create an immense amount of litigation. That is the experience of everybody who knows anything about that description of title; and whenever you require these persons to exhibit, and place on plats and records, at a single office, all their evidences of title, you will find that you will create and bring to light hidden and secret defects in the titles of parties; you will show links wanting in chains of title, which will create litigations that the parties might have escaped for years, and perhaps for generations to come.

Now I protest against the principle contained in this eighth section, which, by a single sweeping clause, declares that prima facie no man has any title there until he exhibits his title papers to the officers of the Government.

Sir, possession is prima facie evidence of title against the Government as well as against everybody else; and I hold that where the officers of the Government find a party in possession claiming ownership, they should recognize the validity of that title until after they had made such inquiries as satisfied them that the title was not valid; and then they must show the invalidity of the title of the claimant.

I can never support a bill of this sort with such a provision in it. I believe that it would be a source of endless litigation. I know the evils resulting from real-estate litigation. I know there is no end to them, except from the statute of limitation, and from the title vested by long possession. Here you cut all that off. You say that no length of possession will avail a man anything. You make a new beginning to all titles, and declare that there shall be no possession that will avail the parties anything except what shall commence after the passage of this act.

Sir, instead of that, you ought to pass a law declaring that all parties who have been in possession twenty years, or a given length of time, shall hold the lands they possess. The amount that you would acquire by this bill would not be worth the amount which it would cost the parties and Government for litigation. I believe it is utterly unsound in principle, and that it would prove pernicious in practice, and I cannot give it my vote.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I offer the following amendment to the bill:

Amend the bill by inserting after the enacting clause as follows:

SECTION 1. The United States of America do hereby vest in the holder or holders of real estate in New Mexico, acquired from Spain or Mexico prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, all the title which would be vested in them respectively by a patent from the United States of America: Provided, The holder or holders of such claim shall exhibit his claim before the district court of the United States in the Territory of New Mexico, and said court, being guided by the treaty aforesaid, the laws of Spain and Mexico, the laws of the United States, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, shall decree in favor of the establishment of such claim, whether the same be inchoate or otherwise: And provided further, That twenty years' peaceful possession under claim of title shall by said court be accepted as conclusive evidence of title, and shall entitle the claimant or claimants to the decree establishing his or their claim. But the United States do not, by authorizing such decree, guaranty the title to such claimant or claimants against any title superior in law or equity, conflicting with the claim so established.

SEC. 2. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court to transfer to the office of the surveyor general of the United States in New Mexico an exemplified office copy of every decree so rendered in favor of the claimant, which the surveyor general shall record in his office; and the same shall be sufficient reason for him to abstain from surveying such claim as public land.

SEC. 3. In the event of a decision by the court against the claimant, he shall be entitled to an appeal to the circuit and Supreme Courts of the United States, the decision of which Supreme Court shall be final.

I believe that that amendment embraces all that we ought to do. I believe that it carries out the treaty, and invests these people with titles to their property. It establishes the rule, which bars an action of ejectment in our courts, that we will take twenty years' possession as evidence of the perfection of an inchoate title; and it refers to the decisions of the Supreme Court as the basis upon which the district court in New Mexico can establish the titles. What more do gentlemen want?

Mr. BLAIR. If the gentleman will allow me, I will simply say that I see no difference whatever between his substitute and the bill which I reported, with the exception that it substitutes the circuit court for a board of commissioners; and if the bill were not a report from a committee—if it had been introduced on my own motion—I would willingly accept his substitute. It does everything that I want done. It covers every point in the bill, with the exception which I have mentioned. It is precisely the bill over again, except that it substitutes the circuit court for the commissioners provided for in the bill; and I ask nothing more than it provides for.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am glad I hit the center so exactly; and I hope, as my substitute meets the views of the gentleman from Missouri, that it will meet the views of the committee at large. There is one thing that it certainly does. It saves the Government the expense of all the paraphernalia of this commission—commissioners, agents, attorneys, clerks, and so forth—and it leaves these people who have claims, to come into court if they wish to come into court. It provides an easy way of carrying out the treaty stipulations, and it relieves the Government of the United States from the charge very properly brought against it by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON,] that we propose to invalidate every title, unless everybody in the Territory brings his title into court.

Mr. BLAIR. I wish to say one word at that point. I think that the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Ohio are both mistaken in their allegations. This bill respects every title of every description which any inhabitant of that country held under the Mexican Government; and the gentleman's substitute does no more, except that it gives another title—which Congress has a perfect right to do—a title by twenty years' possession, and I believe that possession for that time would give a title under the Mexican laws. So that there is not one particle of difference between the substitute offered by the gentleman and the bill reported by the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who have prepared this bill have, doubtless, done so with a view to the protection and security of the rights of the citizens of New Mexico. The most substantial arguments urged in favor of the bill, those presented by the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. TAYLOR,] and the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. QUITMAN,] rest upon the ground of the necessity that the United States should provide means for the perfection of inchoate titles. That is all right. I concede that some action may be necessary if there are inchoate titles in New Mexico, as there doubtless are, to enable those titles to be perfected. But, in acting upon this subject, we should remember that the population of New Mexico is confined mainly to the Rio Grande and to a few other localities. We should remember that the people of that Territory have occupied it for ages past, and that their titles are as old as their origin, and have passed out of mind. They have their archives there and their laws of prescription; they may have their evidences of title; they at least have possession where they do not have evidences of title; and wherever they have titles, either written titles, grants from the Government, or titles by prescription, their right to their land is secured by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. I apprehend that those gentlemen who have argued that they have no title until the Government of the United States confers it, have not looked into the subject. Certainly they have titles under the eighth and ninth articles of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo; their rights are secured to them and are beyond the power of the Government of the United States, or of New Mexico or of any person on earth. If they have titles, those titles are secured to them and they cannot be divested of them unless it be by force; there are no lawful means of dispossessing them of those titles.

Then, sir, in addition to the fact that they have been long settled, there are large masses of the people who, as you have been told, are not learned; they are, in fact, to a great extent, an ignorant people; some of them are semi-barbarians almost; they are, besides that, not a wealthy people; they are not a commercial people; they are a people who have been raised there and have lived there all their lives, and who know little out of the limits of their immediate neighborhood; they know nothing about the machinery of courts and the investigation of titles. I speak, of course, of the large mass of those who will be damaged, in my judgment, if this bill passes. The great mass of the people upon whom this bill is to operate, if it becomes a law, are persons in the condition and of the description which I have mentioned. This bill will drive them into litigation, and require them, at great expense and in entire ignorance of the law, to investigate their titles. Now, I do not want to be tempted to remove from Texas; but if you pass this bill, the temptation to go to New Mexico, and practice law there, will be so great that I do not know whether I shall be able to resist it. But whether I go there or not, I tell you that the lawyers and the speculators will own one third or half the titles in New Mexico before the titles are quieted under this bill, and the people themselves, whom it is intended to benefit, will be broken up and ruined by useless litigation.

Now, if the object is to perfect inchoate titles, why not provide a bill for that purpose? If the object is to delineate the titles in existence on the maps of the country, in order to avoid conflicts between existing titles and titles obtained under the Government of the United States, why not provide for the delineation of those titles on the maps at the expense of the country, and not attempt to force ignorant and uninformed citizens into the courts of the country to adjudicate titles which are perfect to them, and may have been so for a hundred years past? Doubtless many of the titles to these lands are fifty or one hundred years old. I tell the House that if the object of this bill is to protect the people of New Mexico in their titles to their lands, I am satisfied it will not accomplish that object, but that it will be the means of breaking up many of the poor, ignorant settlers of New Mexico.

A class of titles, similar to those to which this bill especially relates, have been extremely litigated in the State which I have the honor, in part, to represent. The Republic of Texas, in its constitution, recognized the right to property in the former inhabitants of the country, as the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo recognized the right to property in the former inhabitants of New Mexico, and as the treaty of 1803 recognized the right to property in the former inhabitants of Louisiana. Without any other legislative authority confirming or guarantying the titles to the former inhabitants of Texas than the provision contained in the constitution, these titles have frequently been adjudicated; and wherever they have been found valid, they have been sustained by the courts of Texas; and upon appeal, in a number of those cases, to the Federal courts, those titles have been sustained.

I present this case to show that the principle is correct; that there need not be any specific recognition of title beyond the mere general recognition of the right of property, where the title has been vested under a former government. I, however, very much prefer the substitute which has been proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MARSHALL] to the original bill; but I am opposed to that part of the substitute which requires a citizen, who has a perfect title, to go into a court and investigate his title, which is already complete.

And I go further. I assert that we have not the constitutional power to pass this bill. I assert that, under the Constitution of the United States, we have no power to force upon men the necessity of adjusting their titles. I assert still further, that when you attempt to adjudicate upon their perfected titles, and undertake to declare such titles void, because they will not obey your laws forcing them to adjudication, you divest them of their constitutional rights, and your action is void.

Mr. QUITMAN. I think the gentleman is laboring under a misapprehension. I contend that these inchoate and imperfect titles, founded in the equity of the Spanish Government, must, in order to perfect them, have some specific action upon the part of the political government of the country; that the political government must, in some shape, be put in motion before the courts can recognize those titles which are inchoate, and exist only in equity.

I think the gentleman is mistaken in another statement. The Supreme Court of the United States have again and again decided that they could not recognize any claim to property founded in treaty, unless that claim was adjudicated by the Government. If something was required upon the part of the Spanish Government to perfect these titles, something is required on our part; and these titles cannot be completed without express legislation. It is the cheapest and best mode, and the mode which will avoid a large number of suits, to set a commission down in the neighborhood to examine these titles.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say this in reply to the gentleman from Mississippi. I recognize the correctness of the principle stated by him in reference to inchoate titles, that when the title is not complete under a former Government, the political action of this Government is necessary to perfect it. And I have already said in my remarks that if the object of the friends of this bill is to make provision for perfecting inchoate titles, let them introduce a bill for that purpose and I will support it. But, Mr. Chairman, if it is intended by the gentleman from Mississippi to assert the proposition that political action is necessary to maintain the perfect titles which existed under the former Government, then I say that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided against his proposition again and again.

Mr. QUITMAN. I am very reluctant to interrupt the gentleman again, but I think he misapprehends the point. The object we are seeking to attain is the settlement of these titles. Now it would be impracticable to act definitely upon these titles in gross, because they must be examined individually. No general bill would answer the purpose. The title of A or B must be examined upon its own merits, and therefore it is absolutely necessary that commissioners should be appointed.

Mr. REAGAN. I have stated that, in my opinion, you have no right to force the owners of perfect titles into an adjudication of their claims. I have conceded that the action of the political authority was necessary to render perfect inchoate titles. I am ready to vote for a bill to make perfect inchoate titles, whenever such a bill shall be presented. I am ready to vote for a bill which shall devolve upon the surveyor general, and those connected with him, in New Mexico, the duty of delineating upon their maps all the titles of the country.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. When I addressed the committee I called their attention to the fact that, so far as the titles which are complete is concerned, it was a matter of no consequence whether they were presented or not, as they are good under the treaty. I now give notice that, at the proper time, when the sections of the bill are before the committee for amendment, I shall move to amend the second section by inserting the word "inchoate," so that it shall read:

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That said commission shall decide upon the validity or invalidity of all inchoate private land claims brought before them, and for that purpose shall have the power to issue notices, summon witnesses, administer oaths, and do and perform all other acts necessary and requisite to be done in the premises.

I also propose to insert the word "inchoate," in the eighth section, so as to make it read:

SEC. 8. And be it further enacted, That each and every person claiming lands in New Mexico by virtue of any inchoate right or title derived from the Spanish or Mexican Governments shall present the same to the secretary of said board, in which claim shall be set forth, in writing, the amount of land claimed, the nature of the title or claim, and how derived; and in all cases where the claim has been located, the boundaries of the same with reasonable certainty, together with such documentary evidence, deeds and grants, or copies thereof, and testimony of witnesses, when said testimony is taken before the trial, or names of witnesses, and their residence, as the claimant relies upon in support of his claim, which said claims shall be entered by the secretary on a docket to be provided for that purpose; and it shall be the duty of the commissioners, when the case is ready for hearing, to proceed promptly to examine the same upon such evidence as may be presented, and upon the evidence produced in behalf of the United States, and to decide upon the validity or invalidity of said claim.

I do this for the purpose of making the act what it is in fact—an act to enable the board to exercise political power so as to carry out the obligations of this Government, and to enable it to do what the Mexican Government would have done if New Mexico had not ceased to be a part of Mexico.

Mr. REAGAN. I have no objection to the principle announced by the gentleman, but I do not know whether the details of the bill will conform to it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Unless this debate can be brought to an end, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ENGLISH reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union generally under consideration, and particularly business appertaining to the Territories, and had directed him to report back House bill No. 59, with an amendment, and with a recommendation that it do pass. Also that they had had under consideration House bill No. 544, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BRANCH. I move the usual resolution to close debate in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the New Mexico private land claims bill in five minutes after its consideration shall be again resumed in committee.

Mr. FAULKNER. I hope the gentleman will extend his resolution to the other bills, and limit debate to fifteen minutes on each.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had better first be disposed of.

Mr. BRANCH. I yield for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union have reported back to the House a bill in relation to the courts, and holding the terms thereof in the several Territories of the United States, with an amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand a division on that amendment, to see whether there is a quorum here to do business.

Mr. BRANCH. I hope the gentleman will not do that. It will serve to deprive us of an opportunity to attend to any further territorial business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is not a quorum here, and less than a quorum has no right to do business.

The amendment was read.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, and KELSEY, were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, no 1—no quorum voting.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that there be a call of the House; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. UNDERWOOD moved that the House adjourn.

Mr. BRANCH demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 43, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnold, Blair, Buffinton, Chaffee, Clawson, Comins, Cragin, James Craig, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dodd, Giddings, Gregg, Hatch, George W. Jones, Kelsey, Knapp, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Milton, Nichols, Pendleton, Phelps, Pike, Quitman, Reagan, Robbins, Royce, Ruffin, John Sherman, Singleton, Spinner, William Stewart, George Taylor, Thayer, Underwood, Wade, Waldron, and Watkins—43.

NAYS—Messrs. Andrews, Bingham, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Chapman, John B. Clark, Covode, Curry, Curtis, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gartrell, Grow, Howard, Huyler, J. Gladney Jones, Owen Jones, Landy, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Niblack, Phillips, Sandidge, Seates, Searing, Judson W. Sherman, Stanton, James A. Stewart, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, and Wortendyke—38.

So the motion was agreed to.

And thereupon the House (at four o'clock and thirty-five minutes) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, May 13, 1858.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, yesterday received from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 565) to confirm the land claim of certain pueblos and towns in the Territory of New Mexico—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (No. 170) for extending the land laws east of the Cascade Mountains, in Oregon and Washington Territories—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 564) to create a land district in the Territory of New Mexico—to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEARCE presented a memorial of the trustees of the Columbian College, at the city of Washington, praying for a grant of land for the endowment of that college; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRIGHT presented the memorial of Riggs & Co., praying for the reimbursement of money advanced by them to Charles Loring, late receiver of public moneys at Benicia, California; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GREEN presented a petition of citizens of Missouri remonstrating against the diversion of the proceeds of the lands granted to the State of Iowa for the improvement of the Des Moines river; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. POLK presented the memorial of Gilbert & Gerrish, praying for the payment of drafts drawn by J. L. Heywood, United States marshal for the Territory of Utah, for money advanced by them for expenses of the United States court in that Territory in 1855 and 1856; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented a petition of citizens of St. Charles county, Missouri, praying that the land office at St. Louis may be continued, and that the land offices in that State, about to be closed under authority of law, may be consolidated at St. Louis; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I present the memorial of Mrs. Georgiana M. Lewis, widow of Armstrong Irvine Lewis, a lieutenant in the Texan navy. This lady complains that, by the terms of the act which allowed five years' half pay to officers of the Texan navy, the phraseology was such as to exclude her husband, who lived more than five years after the annexation of Texas, but who died before the passage of the bill for the relief of those officers, and she is left with two young children without resources, and fully entitled, according to the equity of the provision of the act of Congress, to the same relief that the brother officers of her husband received. I move its reference to the Committee on Naval Affairs, expressing the hope that they will offer an amendment to the naval appropriation bill to amend that appropriation so as to include the family of those officers who did live five years after the annexation, but who, by the phraseology of the act, are excluded, although within the equity.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SLIDELL presented the petition of John I. Caldwell, praying for the remission of certain penalties imposed on him by the Post Office Department; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Louis F. Tasistaro, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, to whom was referred the petition of Nathan Scofield, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. STUART, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 300) declaring the title to land warrants in certain cases, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 299) to establish an additional land district in the State of Iowa, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. PUGH, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 124) to provide for the holding of the stated terms of the circuit and district courts of the northern and southern districts of the State of Ohio, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment.

COMMITTEE ON REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Mr. President, by the death of our lamented colleague, Mr. Evans, and by the inability of Mr. BATES to attend, both of whom belonged to the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, that committee is reduced in its number to three. I, standing at the head of the list, and with the approbation of the committee, wish to make this fact known, that their places may be supplied by other appointments; and I would move that the Vice President be authorized to appoint a chairman and another member to that committee. I do not know what else to do. There is not much business, I hope, to be transacted in the committee during the short remnant of the session, but we are hardly in a condition to act on it at all now, being reduced to the minimum of three members. The Senate can take such order as they please.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make a motion that the Chair appoint two members—not to appoint a chairman?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I have, by the ordinary course of business, become the chairman of that committee; but I really have not time to render that attention which the situation requires to the business of the committee; and, furthermore, I suppose another more acceptable to the Senate, if I may judge from the organization of the committees of the Senate at the commencement of the session, might be appointed. I therefore should desire that a chairman be appointed in such manner as the Senate may choose to direct. I move you, sir, that the Vice President be authorized to appoint two new members of that committee, and among them a chairman.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the President of the Senate be authorized to fill two vacancies upon the Committee on Revolutionary Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to take up and pass the bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, concerning the United States courts within the State of Arkansas. The relief which the bill proposes to afford is very much needed by those courts. I do not think it will take ten minutes to pass the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 278) concerning the courts of the United States in the district of Arkansas, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It provides for the appointment of a district judge of the United States for the western district of Arkansas, at an annual salary of $2,500, to have and exercise the same jurisdiction and powers which are now had and exercised within it by the judge for the district of Arkansas; and the jurisdiction and authority of the last-mentioned judge are to be hereafter confined to the eastern district of Arkansas.

It further provides that there shall be hereafter two terms of the circuit court of the United States held for the eastern district of Arkansas, of the second Mondays of April and October in each year.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will explain this bill reported from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STUART. Had not the Senator better let it pass at once?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Well, I will not make any further explanation unless it is demanded.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I was opposed, in the Committee on the Judiciary, to the reporting of this bill, and for this reason: I am opposed to all bills of this character unless there be an absolute necessity shown for them; and I did not think that necessity was shown in this case. This is the way that power and patronage are being concentrated in the Federal Executive constantly. We go on multiplying the judicial districts. By multiplying the judicial districts, we create a necessity for new court-houses; we multiply the district attorneys; we multiply the marshals; and in that way we are constantly drawing to the Federal Government powers which, in the origin of the Government, were not intended to be exercised by it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me to state, before he proceeds further with his remarks, a few facts in regard to this matter?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I had no opportunity to make any statement of facts before the committee, as the Senator himself is aware. I did not know that any gentlemen on the committee, other than the Senator from Missouri [Mr. GREEN] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. COLLAMER] had any doubt as to the propriety and necessity of this bill. If I had known that there was a necessity for a further explanation to the Senator from Illinois, I should have given it to him. I will state now to the Senate what is the exact condition of the case.

When Arkansas was organized as a State in 1836, the whole State was made one judicial district. There was then annexed to that judicial district all the Indian country west of that State, being a region of country more than one and a half times as large as the State of Arkansas itself, for the enforcement of the intercourse laws of the United States with all the various tribes of Indians. In 1848, upon the matter being presented here by the late Senator Ashley, upon a bill which had been previously passed in the House of Representatives, it was considered necessary, from considerations of humanity, that a court for the trial of offenses within the Indian country should be established upon the border, within reach, where people charged with the commission of offenses in the Indian territory could be brought to be tried, and where, when in prison, they could secure their witnesses at their trial, and have some hope, at least, of obtaining relief justly when it was within their power; and where there also should be some hope that the United States, without very great cost, should be able to obtain their witnesses for the prosecution.

Under these circumstances, an Indian court, in point of fact, was created; that is, a court for the trial of offenses in the Indian country. It was styled the western district of the State of Arkansas; but it was not a district of the State of Arkansas, properly speaking, for there were but five counties of the whole State included in it, and those five counties were taken, and the court located within them, immediately upon the border of the Indian country, for the purpose simply of giving the court a locality, and a point at which it could get jurors and public officers to reside.

That act has continued in force for ten years, and the court has been held twice a year. A prosecuting attorney exists for that district; a marshal exists for that district; a clerk, of course, exists for that district. The entire court is in existence for that district, but no additional judge was deemed necessary at that time, for the reason that the duties of the judge of the eastern district were not heavy, and it was supposed that he could hold all these courts. The facts in regard to the eastern, as well as in regard to the western court, now show the necessity of having a judge for each district. The Supreme Court judges of the United States never, in any instance, go to that country and hold the circuit court, and have not done for many years. The judge of the eastern district, therefore, presides in the circuit court as well as the district court. The circuit court in Arkansas, up to the present time, has held but one term a year. Those gentlemen here who are lawyers, and are accustomed to the practice of the courts, are aware that a great amount of jurisdiction exists in the circuit court which does not exist in a district court. The business has increased in that court, and it has been kept back from increasing as rapidly as it otherwise would, from the fact that the court itself could not, under the present law, render relief within any proper time, for the reason that but one term can be held in a year. The public business there demands that there should be two terms of the circuit court in the eastern district in each year. It amounts to a denial of justice to the people of every other State in the United States, who may have claims or debts to collect, or causes that would carry them into the United States courts in Arkansas, to say to them, "You shall go into a court where, if from any cause, light or trivial, there is a continuance granted, that continuance shall be for one entire year." Public justice imperatively requires that a second term of the circuit court of the United States should be held within that district.

That being so, there can be no question, I take it, that Congress will grant two terms of the circuit court of the United States to be held within that State. That will increase the duties of the district judge. As I said, in the absence of any Supreme Court judge, for they never go there in fact, he holds the circuit court. Now, he is to hold four terms a year; two terms of the circuit court, and two of the district court in the eastern district. If, to that duty, you add two more terms, to be held at the distance of one hundred and fifty miles, embracing all the Indian business of a region of country one and a half times as large as the State of Arkansas, you require him to hold six terms a year. Such a burden would be too heavy, and he could not possibly do justice to it.

Under these circumstances, when asking for another term of the circuit court of the United States in the eastern district of Arkansas, thus throwing additional burdens on the judge, and requiring additional time to perform his duty, it became necessary that the Indian district court should be taken off from him. Hence this bill provides that, for the two terms there to be held, and the circuit court jurisdiction which is granted by the act creating that western district, there shall be an additional judge. These are the facts of the case.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to ask my friend from Arkansas a question. We understood in committee that there were already a marshal and attorney in each district, so that there would be no additional officers of that class. Is that the fact?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That is the fact. I would also call attention to the circumstance, that the Departments, in the annual message and documents before us, have recommended that a district Indian court shall be created; in other words, that the court now held in the western district of Arkansas shall be transferred to the interior of the Indian country. I shall be compelled, from considerations of public duty, to oppose that proposition, because there can be no jurors inside of that territory but Indians, and a white man has no chance before them. That is one reason; and there are several other reasons why it will not do to put a court inside of the Indian country, beyond the reach of impartial and intelligent jurors. This is the Indian court, and as the burden is on the eastern judicial district, where there are four terms a year, two of the circuit court, and two of the district court of the United States, the Senate of the United States, I trust, will perceive at once that it is not reasonable to expect that so much service shall be rendered by one single judge. If there be other questions which the Senator from Illinois desires to understand, I shall be very glad to answer him. I saw from his first remarks that he supposed it would be necessary to create an entire set of new officers. That is not so, I assure him.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I had forgotten, if I had ever been aware of the fact, that there were already existing a district attorney and a marshal in the western district of Arkansas; but that circumstance does not change the reasons which I have for opposing this bill. I have no hostility to the creation of this particular judgeship more than any other. I am opposed upon general principles to that species of legislation which, in my judgment, has a tendency to draw within the vortex of the Federal Government business and powers which the men who made the Government intended should remain with the States. Now, the United States courts are swallowing up the whole litigation of the country; they are drawing within their vortex business which there is no particular reason for bringing within their jurisdiction—business which could be transacted just as well before the State courts; and by multiplying the United States courts and by establishing them at points convenient to every part of a State, you bring a great deal of business into those courts which legitimately does not belong to them.

The intention of the Constitution was to provide courts where suitors could obtain justice without any prejudice against them because they were residents of another State in the Union. It was apprehended that there might be a partiality in favor of the citizens of the State where the cause of action arose, when the controversy was between them and the citizens of some other State; and to provide against that class of cases chiefly, these courts were established, as also to decide questions arising under the laws and Constitution of the United States. But I apprehend that much the largest amount of the business which gets into those courts, and which is swelling their jurisdiction so unreasonably that now the judges of the Supreme Court of the United States have been compelled to abandon their circuit duties, and which has swelled the docket to such an extent that it takes years to obtain a decision in that court, is in cases between citizens where there is no peculiar reason for resorting to the Federal jurisdiction, and where citizens would not resort to it except that it becomes more convenient, and enables them to get a judgment quicker than they can in the State courts.

I know how it is in the State of Illinois. Whenever a non-resident has a claim against a citizen there, if he can get a judgment quicker in the United States court than he can in the State courts, he will resort to that tribunal. By multiplying the terms of that court, having it held frequently and at different points in a State, you afford that opportunity; and the result is, that the collection business of the country is thrown into the United States court, not by reason of any prejudice existing which would prevent a non-resident from obtaining a judgment in a State court, but because he can get a judgment more speedily in the Federal tribunal. This was not the intention in the formation of the Constitution of the United States. We have at this time pending before Congress many applications for dividing judicial districts; this is not the only one. Numerous applications have been made to divide judicial districts, appoint new judges, marshals, and district attorneys. There is such an application from Indiana; there is one from Iowa, one from Texas, and I do not know how many more. I am opposed to the whole of them; and I wish to present a fact or two to the Senate, if I can get its attention, in regard to this case in Arkansas.

The House of Representatives adopted a resolution at the last Congress, requiring the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain from the clerks of the United States courts in the different States, the amount of business before them; and in a communication from the Secretary of the Interior transmitted to the House of Representatives on the 28th of February, 1858, in answer to that resolution, we have that statement. I find in it the amount of business in Arkansas, in one of the districts; there is no report from the other. In the State of Arkansas the whole number of cases on the docket, on the 1st day of January, 1856, in the eastern district was forty-nine. Now, how many do you suppose were added during the whole year 1856? Ten, and ten only. The eastern district court of Arkansas had but ten cases brought in it during the year 1856, as is shown by this official report. From the western district of Arkansas there are no returns; I cannot state how many cases there were there.

Now the Senator tells us that the judge is required to hold four terms in the eastern district, and he makes up the four terms by speaking of two terms of the circuit, and two terms of the district court. We all understand, sir, that the circuit and district courts are held by the same person, and the district and circuit court meet at the same time. I do not mean at the same instant; but the same judge holds those courts, and sitting upon the bench he will one hour call the docket of the district court, and the next hour he will lay aside that docket and call the docket of the circuit court. It is really but one court.

Mr. FOSTER. He tells the orier to adjourn the district court, and open the circuit court.

Mr. TRUMBULL. They do not even go through that formality in my State. They do not go through the formality of having the orier to cry that the district court has adjourned. The judge just lays aside one docket and takes up the other, and goes on with circuit business or district business as suits him, so that really there are no four terms; there are but two terms a year.

Now, I ask the Senate where this course of things is to stop. I ask State-rights Senators, gentlemen who are in favor of preserving the rights of the States, and opposed to a great consolidated central government, that shall swallow up all the powers of the States and the rights of the citizens, and bring them all within its control, are they prepared to vote a new judge to a State, in regard to which, it appears, that in one of its districts there were but ten cases to be tried during the whole of the last year reported? Is there any necessity for it? If this precedent is set, and if ten cases are as much as a judge can attend to in a year, the State of Illinois will want forty judges. The judge of the northern district of Illinois holds court nearly the whole year? We had a report from that district last year, I think, showing that the judge held court some three hundred days in the year. This statement before me shows the number of cases. I have not before looked to see how many there were, but I see now at a glance that seven hundred and fifty-four cases were added to the docket during the year 1856, in the northern district of Illinois. In the district of Arkansas there were ten.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. How many terms of the court are held in each year in that State?

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not prepared to say, probably more than two regularly. I do not recollect, but the court is in session by adjournments nearly the whole year. There is a great deal of admiralty business.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Where does it sit?

Mr. TRUMBULL. It sits at Chicago, and was in session, I think, something like three hundred days last year. We had a statement, I know, in regard to it. I may not speak with entire accuracy, but I think it was three hundred days. You see from the number of cases, seven hundred and fifty-four, put on the docket during the last year, that there is a great deal of business for the judge in northern Illinois to do.

Now, sir, I do not think there is any necessity for another United States judge in the State of Arkansas, so far as any documents before us show, and this is but the beginning. It is already said they have a district attorney and marshal. True, but there is now an application pending before Congress for a jail for the western district of Arkansas. I am for putting a stop to this species of legislation; and it must be an urgent case, so far as I am concerned, that will induce me to vote one dollar to build court-houses and build custom-houses and create Federal offices where they are not actually needed by the wants of the country. If we mean to prevent this monstrous expenditure of money by the Federal Government, and this monstrous accumulation of power in the hands of the Federal Executive, we must stop this class of legislation; and I think here is a good place to begin, and this is a good time.

Mr. TOOMBS. Mr. President, I concur in a good deal of what has been said by the Senator from Illinois—indeed almost all of it; but he makes a wrong application of the principle. While I was a member of the Judiciary Committee, these questions came up, and I think the committee very generally concurred with him in the views he expressed to-day, and all these applications were rejected but this one; and this was made exceptional for a particular reason. The western judicial district of Arkansas has jurisdiction over those vast regions where the Choctaws, Chickasaws, and other Indians live, west of the Mississippi river. All violations of intercourse laws; all other violation of law in the Indian country, are brought to this point to be tried, and therefore it is much more a territorial court than a State court; and while the committee rejected every similar application made at this session, they made this case an exception because it was not local. That very reason was given, that here was a vast extent of jurisdiction, extending over a country running to the Rocky Mountains, applying to persons going there and committing crimes, violating the intercourse laws, or guilty of any other offenses against the United States; and that this court was simply held in Arkansas, and was not for the use of the citizens of Arkansas, in any sense whatever. That is the reason why, as a member of the committee I supported it, and I believe on that principle the committee agreed it was an exception.

Therefore, all the argument of the Senator on the general principle is out of place here, though exceedingly appropriate and just in regard to other propositions. I agree in every bit of his argument except its application to this case. The jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States is very great and increasing, and it ought to be diminished. Their jurisdiction in admiralty is outrageous. Their jurisdiction in bringing in corporations of different States under the pretext that they are within the rule, is outrageous, and it ought to be arrested. The system ought to be arrested by which, where controversies are really between citizens of the same State, claims are transferred to a person living out of the State merely to give jurisdiction to the Federal courts. That is the proper subject for the Judiciary Committee to consider in reporting general legislation. It was brought before the committee while I had the honor of being a member, and a bill was ordered to be prepared for the purpose of removing these very evils. Unless these various heads of jurisdiction are restrained and limited, the district courts will break down, the circuit courts will break down, and the Supreme Court here will break down. They have stretched out their arms and embraced within their jurisdiction questions properly belonging to the State courts, and which they are totally incompetent to discharge. You talk of relieving the court below. You may leave it as Æneas said the gates of hell were, always open, and it never could discharge its business; it is impossible. This subject is attracting the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary, who have come to a conclusion thereon, and I have no doubt will report a remedy for this great and crying evil.

Mr. BAYARD. The honorable Senator from Georgia stated exactly the reason that influenced the members of the Committee on the Judiciary who were in favor of making an exception as to creating this new judge. Two districts exist in Arkansas. There is a peculiar jurisdiction connected with the Indian country which we supposed would be more properly exercised by a judge for that particular district. That is the general basis on which we went. We were satisfied that it was right it should be established. The district is already organized. There will be no additional expense except the salary of the judge. We do not propose to give any additional jurisdiction to the Federal courts, or to increase their existing jurisdiction in one atom.

I am as little disposed as the honorable Senator from Illinois to increase the jurisdiction of the Federal courts, though I think that, to the extent to which the Constitution intended it should go, it ought to be carried, and no further. I am equally satisfied that the whole judicial system of the United States requires reorganization; but whether we shall be able to agree sufficiently in opinion to reorganize it until the system becomes even more complicated in its details, and the evils of the present system become more apparent, I am doubtful. I am satisfied, however, that in this particular case the recommendation of the committee is in accordance with what is right, owing to the peculiar character of the functions performed by the judge of the western district of Arkansas. I have but little reliance on the mode of statement resorted to by the Senator from Illinois, who, to show what are the duties of a judge, gives an abstract taken from a report of the Secretary of the Interior. The mere number of causes may show nothing of judicial labor. If they are collection causes they may be disposed of in a single day. The judicial courts of the United States are, in the general, organized—except for admiralty and maritime jurisdiction—not for the purposes of the people of the State in which they exist, but they are organized under the Constitution to give an option to the people of the other States to seek the Federal tribunals for the adjudication of questions existing between them and the people of a State in which the suit is brought, if they see fit to do so. It was not the intent that they should interfere with, or should draw jurisdiction as between, the citizens of a State from the State judiciary. But in the particular case before us, as it is all Indian country, of necessity the judge in the western district must administer that species of justice between the people resident there, and it is more in the character of a territorial court.

The honorable Senator from Illinois has brought into this debate also the application for a jail. What has that to do with the merits of this proposition? The committee have reported on that subject. I believe the opinion of the committee was against any act of that kind, and the Senator had the authority of the committee to report adversely on that proposition. It has no connection with the propriety of appointing a judge there. Whether we shall build jails or not, there or elsewhere, is a totally distinct question. Nor does it at all follow, from establishing a separate judge for a peculiar character of jurisdiction, that we shall therefore build a jail.

In reference to the paper alluded to by the Senator from Illinois, I will say that the true measure of the business of a court will be found far more in its jury trials and in the length of its sessions. These are far better evidence of the time occupied by the judge, and the labors of the court, than the mere enumeration of the number of suits brought, which, to my mind, amounts to very little. It fluctuates in different years. Suits may oftentimes be frivolous in themselves. They may be mere collection suits arising out of a commercial crisis, or other causes, in a particular year; but they afford no true indication of what may be the general business of the court, the occupation of the judge, or the length of time necessary to enable him to perform his judicial duties. Some consideration also must be paid to the extent of area of the State, and the peculiar jurisdiction which the judge has to exercise in this case as regards the Indian country.

For these general reasons the committee made this an exception. In all the other cases in which applications have been made for a subdivision, so general was the opinion of the committee that Federal jurisdiction had gone far enough in the creation both of Federal offices and judicial districts, that I am under the instruction of the committee, in all these cases, about to make adverse reports, and shall do so before the session closes. I am in hopes that this bill will pass. It is founded on the fact that there is a district of a peculiar character, and that there should be an allotment of a judge to that district because he has peculiar duties to perform.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. There are several points in the remarks of the Senator from Illinois, to which I should like to reply. They can be easily explained and replied to; but I see that the hour for the special order is so close that I may not get action on the bill if I say anything, and therefore I shall waive it, in view of the representations made by Senators from the Judiciary Committee, and I hope we may have a vote on the bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I have an amendment that I desire to offer. It is to insert as an additional section:

And be it further enacted, That in any suit at law or in equity for the recovery of any debt or demand arising upon contract, express or implied, prosecuted in any district or circuit court of the United States, unless the amount recovered shall exceed the sum of $2,000, the plaintiff in said suit shall not recover any fees, costs, or disbursements of any nature whatever, nor any fees or costs in the execution of any mesne or final process.

I should like to have this matter lie over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. HUNTER. The hour for the consideration of the special order has arrived.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the hour set apart for the consideration of the special order.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will the Senator himself call up this bill, if it goes over?

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Yes, sir; to-morrow morning.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Then I shall consent that it go over.

The bill was postponed until to-morrow.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1859.

Mr. CLAY. I have hitherto yielded to the chairman of the Committee on Finance upon such motions; but now, as we have approached the close of the question on the fishing bounties, I trust the Senate will consider it this morning, and give us a vote.

Mr. HUNTER. If I had any assurance that the vote could be taken at once, I would waive my motion; but I have no hope that it will be taken at once, and I feel it to be my duty to submit my motion. The Senate will decide whether to go on with the appropriation bill or not.

Mr. SEWARD. I call for the yeas and nays on this motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask whether the question cannot be divided, so as to take the vote first on postponing? because, if the prior orders be postponed, I desire to move to take up the Oregon bill. I ask for the division of the question, so that we may have a vote first on postponing, and next on taking up.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope it will not be divided. If it is to be, I would rather withdraw the motion. I wish to get the simple question on taking up the appropriation bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I desire a division for the very reason that I wish to put the Oregon bill ahead.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It occurs to the Chair that it is susceptible of division.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia to let us finish the fishing bounties bill, which has been debated here six or seven days already. It will only take an hour to vote on it.

Mr. HUNTER. If we could agree on an hour to take the vote on that bill to-day, I would give up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Louisiana is very much mistaken.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If it is going to be debated, it is an extra reason for continuing its consideration. It ought to be got rid of at some time or other.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It occurs to the Chair that, a division being asked, the first question will be on the motion to postpone the prior orders. Then the question will come up on the other branch of the motion to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. PUGH. I should like to understand what are the prior orders. I do not see how to divide the motion. It is moved to postpone the prior orders in order to take up such a bill; and if we postpone the prior orders, it seems to me we postpone the entire lot. What has become of the arrangement which was made in the Senate about a week ago, by which, if we would then take up an appropriation bill out of its order, this system of cutting everything off was to be stopped?

Mr. HUNTER. I understood it was the sense of the Senate that they would give precedence to the appropriation bills over other matters. I am merely submitting the motion. If, however, the Chair decides that my motion is divisible, I shall withdraw it. I am not willing to postpone the other prior orders. I do not think the motion is divisible.

Mr. DOUGLAS. It has been always held to be divisible.

Mr. HUNTER. No, sir; it is a motion to take up a particular bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the first time the Chair has ever had the question raised. It occurred to him that in its nature the question was susceptible of division.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Chair will allow me to make a suggestion—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will hear the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. HAMLIN. If the Chair will look at the parliamentary law, he will find it laid down very clearly that a question susceptible of being divided must be one which, when divided, contains two or more separate distinct propositions. Now, take the motion of the Senator from Virginia. His motion is to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up a certain bill. If you divide that, the second branch of the motion will not be a proposition by itself; and the motion must therefore be taken as a whole. If it were a distinct proposition by itself, it might be susceptible of division, but not otherwise. I am aware that when no objection has been made, a division has been taken; but never when there has been an objection.

Mr. BAYARD. It seems to me that it is but a single proposition. The point the Senator from Virginia seeks to arrive at, is whether the Senate will take up for consideration the appropriation bill. In order to reach that, it necessarily involves the postponement of the prior orders. Then it is all one proposition. The object to be attained by the motion is a single one, and the Senator can attain it in no other mode; it is all one proposition. It is, whether the Senate, in order to take up the appropriation bill, will postpone the prior orders.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state his reason very briefly. There are certainly two propositions involved; one is to postpone the prior orders, the other is to take up the appropriation bill. The prior orders have first to be postponed, which is an independent proposition. If the motion had been simply to postpone the prior orders, and that were agreed to, the Chair would then take up other business on the table. The Senate may choose to postpone the prior orders; and then, if no motion is made to take up any particular business, the Chair will take up the business next in order on the table. It occurs to the Chair that the motion is divisible.

Mr. GREEN. It all amounts to the same thing. When you make a motion to postpone all prior orders to take up a certain bill, it means all those orders that are prior to that bill. It is a relative term, and it carries every order that is prior to that bill. Prior is not a word that means anything by itself. It is only by relation that it has its meaning. Now, what is meant by prior orders? Those prior to the bill that you propose to take up; and hence the Senator from Illinois will be defeated, even if he divides the question; for his bill is one of the prior orders that will be postponed.

Mr. HUNTER. I think the Senator from Missouri is right. The motion is to postpone the orders prior to this bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understood the Senator to move to postpone the special orders.

Mr. HUNTER. All prior orders.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The motion made was to postpone the special order to take up the appropriation bill. I called for a division of that motion for this reason: when the special order is postponed, I wish to move to take up the Oregon bill. He may make his motion to take up the appropriation bill, and I shall vote "no," for the purpose of taking up Oregon. If, however, I can first get a vote on the Oregon bill, and I am voted down on that, I shall vote to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I submit a motion to postpone the prior orders and take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That is a new motion.

Mr. HUNTER. That is what I intended before, but I modify my motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion as made, and it cannot be modified by the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The yeas and nays have been ordered. Perhaps the Senator's motion is susceptible of the construction he gives it as a motion to postpone the prior orders, but the Chair understood it was to postpone the special order.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders, for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the Chair will consider that as the form of the motion, with the leave of the Senate. The Chair does not see any use in dividing the question on that view of it.

Mr. BRIGHT. It is an every-day practice here, I think, to move to postpone one subject for the purpose of taking up another, and the mover so states. If no one objects it is taken up; but if any Senator calls for a division of that motion, the first question is, "Will the Senate agree to postpone?" If they agree to postpone, it is in order then to take up any other subject; it is the privilege of any Senator to move to take up any other subject; but the majority of the Senate control. On a division being called for, the question is, "Will the Senate postpone the pending bill?"

Mr. HUNTER. I submitted a motion to postpone the prior orders and take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. And I asked for a division.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question being entirely new, the Chair has been thinking about it in the progress of the discussion, and he believes, on reflection, that he was originally right in saying that the question was divisible. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and he will cause the roll to be called first on the proposition to postpone the prior orders.

Mr. HUNTER. If we postpone the prior orders, will not this bill come up as a matter of course?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be in the power of the Senate to decide what it will consider.

Mr. HUNTER. Does it not come up, and will not the question be on postponing?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is inclined to think so.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I ask for the vote on the motion to postpone the prior orders.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will cause the roll to be called on that motion.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 32, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bell, Bigler, Cameron, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Mason, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wade, Wilson, and Wright—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Bright, Broderick, Chandler, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Gen. Gen. Hammond, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, King, Mallory, Polk, Pugh, Trumbull, and Yulee—20.

So the motion to postpone the prior orders was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I now move to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The motion made by the chairman of the Committee on Finance is to take up the appropriation bill at this time. I understand that now it is discretionary with the Senate to say what proposition they will take up for consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will make a single remark in this connection, with the Senator's permission. The Chair felt himself obliged to consider the motion of the Senator from Virginia as divisible, because it contained two separate and distinct parts. The question has been but half put. There remains another branch to be put, or would, under ordinary circumstances; but the motion originally made by the Senator from Virginia hardly seems to the Chair to be a strictly parliamentary motion. If his motion had simply consisted of one part to postpone the orders prior to the appropriation bill, and that were carried, the appropriation bill would come up without any further motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Will the Chair allow me to make a suggestion? The Senator from Virginia made the simple motion to postpone, but he gave as a reason for the postponement, that he desired to take up another bill. The latter part of his proposition was only a notice of what his second motion would be; and that has been the uniform ruling of the Chair, I think. His motion was to postpone, and he accompanied it by a reason, and it was a notice that he would follow it with the other motion.

Mr. HUNTER. I did submit the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It occurs to the Chair that the appropriation bill is now before the Senate unless some motion be made to postpone it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I have no disposition to make a point with the Chair upon the decision he has made; but I understand him to rule that the appropriation bill is now before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair makes that decision, not regarding the Senator's motion as entirely parliamentary, but treating it as a simple motion to postpone prior orders.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. A motion to postpone the appropriation bill and take up the homestead bill would be in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I move to postpone the appropriation bill, with a view to take up the homestead bill; and I have a few words to say in support of this motion.

Mr. IVERSON. I rise to a point of order. I think the Chair decided that a motion to postpone and take up was not a competent question for a division. The Senator from Virginia moved to postpone all orders prior to the appropriation bill, and that has been agreed to. The homestead bill is included in that proposition; the homestead bill is one of the prior orders, and, by the vote of the Senate, it has been postponed. Now, the only question before the Senate is the appropriation bill. The Senate can postpone that; but then, when it postpones that, the next business in order comes up as a matter of course, because all prior to it have already been disposed of. The homestead bill having already been disposed of, we cannot take it up. I make that point.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair considers it is in the power of the Senate to control its own business; and it occurs to him that the motion to postpone, with a view to take up the homestead bill or any other bill, is in order.

Mr. IVERSON. It is divisible, however, is it not?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. IVERSON. I ask for a division.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. To accommodate the Senator from Georgia, and for the purpose of preventing hair-splitting questions of order under the Manual, I will simply make a motion to postpone this appropriation bill; and I will give, as a reason for making the motion to postpone, that my purpose is to take up the homestead bill. I presume that is legitimate and in order.

It is not often, Mr. President, that I obtrude myself upon this body; but when prompted to do so by principles of right, I shall do it with that respect and courtesy to which the Senate is entitled. This homestead proposition has been standing on your Calendar, as a special order, since the 19th of January, now nearly four months. I have been waiting patiently, with a view to have the business of the Senate taken up in its proper order, and disposed of, so that we might reach it. It is a proposition that has been determined in the public mind. It is a proposition that the country has decided should have been passed by the Congress of the United States long ago. It is a proposition that comes home to every man in the Confederacy; and it is strange that a measure calculated to promote the interests of the great mass of the people can scarcely get a hearing in this deliberative body.

Now, does not every Senator here know, and does not the country know, that appropriation bills have a specific weight that always carries them through? Who ever heard of an appropriation bill being lost? We know that the combination of influences interested in appropriations that take the people's money from the Treasury is such that there is no chance of their being stopped by the wayside. Why this great press for the appropriation bills? There is always a great press, and the necessity is said to be great and crying when the object is to put the hand into the people's pockets and take out their money; but when legislation is brought forward to advance and promote the common weal of the great mass of the people, there is not so much anxiety to consider them. Then, some contractor, some stock-jobber, is pressing his claims before Congress. Suppose some one of these Departments was to run out of money for a short time: do you think the great mass of the people would suffer much? Suppose some of these Departments were fed on bread and water, as they used to feed the jurors in olden times: I think it would bring about a state of depletion, and lead to economical appropriations and economy in sending their estimates to the Congress of the United States, that would be beneficial to, and approved by, the people.

When we come to legislate upon measures that promote the common weal, and that carry themselves home to the great mass of the people, they can have no hearing; but appropriation bills, to get money out of the people's pockets, are urged as required to be passed immediately, on account of some pressing necessity. For whom, sir, is three-fourths of the legislation of this country done? Even go to your State Legislatures, and there nineteen twentieths of it is for monopolies, for classes, for stock-jobbers, for bankers, for corporations. The people are scarcely heard, nor are their interests understood or felt. When you come to the Congress of the United States, how is it? For whom is the legislation here done? How much of it is done for the country? That which is to take money out of the Treasury, to transfer it from the pockets of the many to the few, can always get a hearing; their bills and measures are of the most urgent necessity!

Why cannot the homestead bill get a hearing? Why cannot it be taken up and considered? Why cannot it be disposed of? I had determined not to be obtrusive; I had determined not to be offensive to the Senate in pressing it pertinaciously upon the body; but here it is standing as a special order, waiting and waiting for action. When we approach one measure that is to cut off bounties, and relieve the people from taxation on their salt, that is shoved out of the way to take up an appropriation bill. We have no salt manufactories in my State, but we live in their immediate vicinity. Our people are interested in having cheap salt; but when there is a proposition pending that is likely to take a bounty away from the salt manufactories of the country, you cannot get a sufficient combination to postpone the bill that withholds bounties from them. We can see how these combinations are effected. Here is a proposition to retain money in the Treasury on one hand and save the people that much tax, and here is another proposition to take away bounty from the manufacture of salt, which is a measure that comes home to every man throughout the whole country; and that must give way to an appropriation bill; and now the homestead is to yield.

I do not intend to consume the time of the Senate; I have not done so since I have been a member of this body; but I intend to press this measure every morning, I hope not offensively or disagreeably. I intend to press it every day from this time until the termination of the session, until it is disposed of by the Senate in a proper way. I hope the Senate will postpone this appropriation bill. The people's money will be got out of the Treasury fast enough by this or any other Administration. Let us do a little legislation for the country, for the great mass of the people. Let them be heard; let their influence be felt, and let their will be obeyed. I hope the Senate will postpone the appropriation bill and take up the homestead bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, I respect the zeal which the Senator from Tennessee shows in behalf of his bill, one which it is his duty to press, and I shall not say one word in reply to him; for the reason that I expect to vote for his measure when it does come up, and to vote for taking it up at any reasonable time, when I can do so without doing injustice to a measure in my charge. I shall vote for this postponement, and then I shall vote against taking up the homestead bill in order to take up Oregon. If I am voted down, I shall wait until a calm and suitable opportunity occurs to take up the Oregon bill.

Mr. HALE. I am not perfectly clear how I shall vote about this appropriation bill; but I rise simply to thank the Senator from Tennessee for the remarks he has made about the manner in which measures that look to the public interest are postponed. But as his remarks were rather general, I want to direct public attention to some particulars. The reason we have not attended to great public measures, the reason why the great masses of the country who want homesteads have not been gratified, is that the President of the United States has urged upon our consideration a great party measure, and it was considered necessary to take care of that and let the people take care of themselves. It was not until after that was disposed of, that either the President or we had any time or inclination to attend to public matters. As soon as that is over, and the session is nearly over, it is time to begin to think of the people! I should have been glad if this zeal which I have no doubt is sincere and honest in the mind of the Senator from Tennessee, had found vent when we were taking up week after week, and month after month, and urging in every shape in which party ingenuity could put it, the Kansas bill. The reason why the public interests have not been looked after is, that our time was taken up and our attention engrossed by that great party measure.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. GWIN. I intend to sustain this measure, but I will not vote to postpone the appropriation bills at this time, and give it precedence over them.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am exceedingly glad that the Senator from Tennessee has made this motion, and very glad to hear him give notice that he will press it. This is an important measure. It has many friends, and it ought to be urged upon the consideration of Congress. I hope that the homestead bill may pass; but I rose more particularly to protest against the rule which I understand has been adopted in caucus—that everything else, all the business of the country, is to give way to the one thing of getting money out of the Treasury. When a bill comes in here to vote away the people's money, everything else must give way. That has been the practice during this session of Congress. The chairman of the Committee on Finance comes in with an appropriation bill from the Finance Committee; it is now first brought to the notice of the Senate. This great bill, appropriating many million dollars, is just brought to our attention; and without time to examine it, everything else must be postponed to that one consideration of getting money out of the Treasury, and complying with the estimates of these Departments. Have these estimates been looked into? How do we vote money? Why, sir, we vote it simply upon the estimate of some officer, without examination. We passed the other day an appropriation of eight or ten million dollars because the Department asked for it. Has it come to this, that the Congress of the United States is the mere register or accountant, the treasurer, if you please, that is to furnish whatever money is asked for; and is all other business to give way to that one thing?

I am very glad that the Senator from Tennessee has made this motion; and I will go with him, and I hope he will press this great proposition which is to furnish homes to the mass of the people upon the consideration of Congress, even to the exclusion of measures for taking money out of the Treasury. Let us do the business of the country; let us resort to some means to prevent so much money getting into the Treasury, devote our time to something else rather than to the passage of loan bills and the issue of Treasury notes, and then to the appropriation of money which we raise by borrowing.

Sir, I have no doubt that if the expenses of this Government were looked into, if a committee were appointed to investigate the means by which the expenditures of this country could be brought down to the economical wants of the Government, one half of the $100,000,000, which I expect will be expended in the next fiscal year, would be sufficient to defray all the legitimate and necessary expenses of the Government. Let us quit multiplying offices, quit making unnecessary improvements and building custom-houses where they are not needed, and establishing ports of entry where they are not needed, merely to give an office to some politician who may have performed service in an electioneering campaign.

Sir, I shall vote to postpone this money bill; and I hope a majority of the Senate will vote to postpone it, and let us attend to some of the other business of the country, and not merely devote ourselves to voting what money the Departments want, or the Administration wants, and then go home. I am opposed to an adjournment until the legitimate business of the country is done; and I would hold back these appropriation bills until the legitimate business was done; for it seems to be understood that, until they pass, no adjournment is to take place. Let us keep them back, and do the other business first. The present fiscal year does not expire for some time yet. Let us attend to this great public measure which the Senator from Tennessee has in charge, and other public measures for the benefit of the country.

Mr. HUNTER. This is a bill making appropriations for the legislative, the executive, and the judicial expenses of the Government, for the year ending 30th of June, 1859. It is a bill which provides the means for carrying on the judicial system, the legislative and the executive departments of this country; but it is treated as a matter in which the people have no interest. This is to be postponed; this measure, which is essential to carry on the representative Government of this people, is to be postponed to take up another—in which it is said the people have a great interest—which is to squander the public land; a bill which is to distribute gratuitously, amongst the settlers, the public lands.

But, sir, I am not disposed to go into that question now. This is no place to discuss the relative merits of the different measures which are proposed for consideration. I say that this bill is bound to be passed, unless you mean to put an end to the Government; and if you do pass it, you have to give it precedence over other measures; because, to get at it, everything on your Calendar has precedence over this bill, unless the Senate makes an order to take it up out of its order; and how do we postpone other measures? By taking it up. Let us take it up, and devote proper consideration to it; and, after we have disposed of it, let us sit here, if the Senate thinks so, long enough to discharge all the public business of the country. I was not one of those who fixed the day of adjournment in June. I voted against it. I was voted down; and having been voted down, what else can I do but press the necessary appropriation bills with all proper dispatch? Let it be taken up; and, if the Senator says time enough is not given for considering these bills which appropriate so much money, does he not perceive that the best way to obtain that time is to take them up at once and devote whatever time is necessary? The longer we postpone it, the less time we shall have to consider these expenditures. There is every reason, therefore, it seems to me, for taking up this matter for consideration.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, on the motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, rescheduled—yeas 18, nays 35; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Chandler, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, Jones, King, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Cameron, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Fitzpatrick, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Pugh, Rice, Sebastian, Shields, Sibley, Thompson of New Jersey, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—35.

So the motion was not agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

The first amendment reported from the Committee on Finance was in page 8, after line one hundred and sixty-five, to add the following:

Botanic Garden.

For procuring manure, tools, fuel, repairs, purchasing trees and shrubs, for botanic garden, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $2,300.

For pay of horticulturist and assistants in the botanic garden and green-houses, to be expended under the direction of the Library Committee of Congress, $5,121 50.

For reglazing and repairing damages to the green-houses by the hail storm, of June, 1857, $1,044 16.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in page 10, after line two hundred and twenty-one, to add:

To enable the Secretary of State to carry into effect the act entitled, "An act for the admission of the State of Kansas into the Union," $10,000.

Mr. HUNTER. That is a mistake. I am authorized by the committee to move $5,000, instead of $10,000.

Mr. COLLAMER. I prefer that that change shall not take place. I think the amount ought to stand at $10,000. I think the chairman should give some reason for the change. I understand that the sum of $10,000, to carry through the election in Kansas, is asked by the Secretary of State. Why should we not vote what he considers is necessary? Is it pretended that you shall cut it down, so that you shall not have money enough to carry out the election?

Mr. HUNTER. I will explain. The estimate was for $10,000, but the Committee on Finance thought $5,000 would be enough, and they cut it down one half on that supposition.

Mr. COLLAMER. I think the only effect will be that the Secretary of State will have a good excuse for not carrying out the election at all, on the ground that he has not money enough. Give him what he wants.

Mr. HUNTER. I thought that we should have pleased the Senator from Vermont by cutting down the appropriation.

Mr. BRIGHT. Perhaps it is proper I should state that I asked the Secretary of State if he had any data on which to make an estimate for this anticipated service. He said he had not, and thought it a little conjectural, and after making the calculation he thought $8,000 would be sufficient. I voted in committee to make it $5,000, but I see no objection to reinstating the original estimate of $10,000. I suggest to the chairman that it would be better to put it at that.

Mr. HUNTER. If that is the sense of the Senate I will withdraw my amendment and leave it at $10,000. If it is not wanted, it will not be expended.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Do I understand the chairman of the Finance Committee to say that they have no data at all by which to estimate the amount wanted in the bill?

Mr. HUNTER. There is a conjectural estimate from the State Department. On what data the Secretary of State made it, I am not able to say. It was that amount which he supposed would be necessary to carry out the act. Of course it has to be a matter of discretion. They cannot estimate with certainty and precision.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Then it is mere supposition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I differ from my friend from Vermont on this point. I remember the information we had from the Secretary of State, and it was mere guess work. There was no computation about it at all. It was a general opinion, just such as anybody could form precisely as well as the Secretary of State. He guessed $10,000; the majority of the committee guessed $5,000; and therefore put it at $5,000. That is the simple fact about it. If a majority of the Senate think it will take $10,000, so be it.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add to the items for the general purposes of the Southeast Executive building, the following:

And the authority conferred upon the principal clerk of public lands, of Acting Commissioner ad interim, in the absence, and so forth, of the Commissioner, by the second section of the act reorganizing the General Land Office, approved the 4th of July, 1856, shall be, and the same hereby is, transferred to the chief clerk of said General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add the following items, in page 17, amongst those for the contingent expenses of the Department of the Interior:

For the preservation of the collections of the exploring expeditions of the Government, $4,000.

For the transfer to, and new arrangement of those collections in, the Smithsonian Institution, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert amongst the same items the following:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to pay the superintendent of the building occupied by said Secretary and his Department, from the 1st day of January, 1855, to the 30th day of June, 1858, the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed two thousand dollars per annum, the sum of $700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add to the items for the same Department, on page 19, the following:

For clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and lights at the several district land offices of the land States and Territories, to be apportioned in such manner as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest may require, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, in page 31, the following:

Territory of Minnesota.

For defraying the expenses incurred in taking the census of the Territory of Minnesota, under the act approved 26th February, 1857, $20,000: Provided, The compensation to the officers taking the same shall not exceed that allowed by the acts of 23d May, 1850, and 30th August, 1850, to those who took the census in California, Oregon, Utah, and New Mexico.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert among the items for the office of the Attorney General, the following:

For services of special counsel, and other extraordinary expenses, in defending the title of the United States to public property in California, $10,000.

For the employment of such number of clerks, not exceeding three, by the district attorney of the northern district of California, as may be necessary to transcribe the records of the district court, in land cases, upon which appeals have been or may be taken to the Supreme Court, such sum as may be necessary is hereby appropriated, provided the compensation shall not exceed one hundred and fifty dollars a month for each.

For the reasonable expenses of the late and present district attorneys for the northern district of California, for assistance in their office, such sum is to be paid out of the judicial fund, if such expenses shall be approved by the Attorney General: Provided, That those expenses shall not exceed three hundred dollars per month: And provided further, That this appropriation shall be applicable only to the present fiscal year, and the next succeeding fiscal year, which will terminate on the 30th day of June, 1859.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to increase the appropriation for the support and maintenance of the penitentiary of the District of Columbia from $5,511 25 to $7,920, and to add the following:

For compensation of two additional guards, hereby authorized, $1,320.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was a substitute for the second section on page 36. The section was in these words:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That no part of the amount appropriated by any act of Congress for the service of any one fiscal year shall be used for or applied to the service of any other year, nor be transferred to or used for any branch of expenditure than that for which it may be specifically appropriated: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall apply to appropriations for the present or next fiscal year."

It is proposed by the amendment to strike out all after the word "that," and insert:

Hereafter, the estimates for the various Executive Departments shall designate not only the amount required to be appropriated for the next fiscal year, but also the amount of the outstanding appropriation, if there be any, which will probably be required to be used for each particular item of expenditure.

Mr. HALE. I hope that section will not be stricken out. I think it is one of the greatest measures of reform that has ever been proposed by the House of Representatives; and if we mean to preserve our control over the Treasury, and discharge our constitutional duties, we ought to retain it. I simply ask for the yeas and nays on striking it out.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HUNTER. This section proposes to change the mode of keeping accounts and using the public moneys, which has heretofore been practiced throughout the whole history of the Government. The part which seems to commend itself to the approbation of the Senator from New Hampshire is, that it puts an end to transfers entirely. Well, now, this system of transfers has always been found necessary. It is limited by law; the transfers which can be made are specified by existing statutes, and there are a great many laws on that subject to which it can hardly be necessary now to refer. Those laws have been passed as experience has suggested them; but the effect of abolishing the power of transfer would be this: we should only have to increase the sum appropriated specifically under each particular head; we should have to appropriate not only enough, but something more in order to provide against contingencies, or else we should hold out a temptation to still larger deficiency bills than are now presented to us. The check which is designed, and which is afforded in the present system of accounts, is that an appropriation lasts but two years; after that it has to be balanced up, and the balance goes to the surplus fund; it can no more be used. An additional check is, that these expenditures have to be reported annually to Congress; and if members of Congress were to examine them particularly, year by year, as they are published, it would be a sufficient check; but unfortunately this is not always done; perhaps it is hardly practicable with the engagements they have. There was one other protection which suggested itself to the Committee on Finance, in order to complete this chain of responsibility, and to make it, as it seemed to us, perfect, and that is to require the Secretaries, when they send in their estimates, not only to estimate for the amount of new appropriation which they want for each particular item, but also to show the outstanding appropriation which they propose to devote to that purpose.

When that is done, it seems to me we have all the responsibility we can require. We know annually the receipts and expenditures; we know annually what is proposed to be appropriated, not only in new appropriations, but what is proposed to be used out of the outstanding and existing appropriations; and for the rest, for the facility and convenience of the Departments, we allow the appropriations to be used for two years, requiring them to be balanced at the end of two years, and to pass to the surplus fund. Now, I think experience has shown that this system works well. I believe that if we were to alter it, it would lead to a great deal of inconvenience; and for that reason the Finance Committee thought it was better to strike it out, and substitute this provision requiring a different form of estimate.

Mr. HALE. If the Senate concludes to adopt this reform—for I cannot call it anything but reform—of the House of Representatives, I will tell you what the effect will be. It will compel the Administration in making their estimates to be a little more specific. It is little more than a joke to call our appropriations specific, for they gather together in one general clause a hundred objects, as dissimilar as the races of men, and appropriate a sum in gross for that, taking millions, and leaving it to the discretion of the Administration to distribute it as they see proper. Then, in addition to that, a general power of transfer from one head of appropriation to another is allowed; and we have no sort of control over the expenditures. For instance, the Postmaster General will ask for $100,000 for mail-bags perhaps, and not buy a mail-bag; but he will go and spend that money in establishing a new line in some State or Territory, or giving some additional mail facilities, or something of that kind. I only give that as an illustration.

Now, sir, some gentlemen here are very learned in regard to all the kingdoms of the earth. I do not know what the practice is in the British Government, but I am told that they do not have this power of transfer. One thing I do know, because I have looked at their estimates frequently in this connection: their estimates are vastly more specific than ours are. When the British Administration come to the Commons for money, they put in one column what they want for a very minute purpose and in a parallel column, they give precisely the pounds, shillings, and pence which they spent for that identical object the year before, so that the expenses cannot grow up without the Commons knowing something about them. We have nothing of that sort here. Our appropriations are loose and indefinite to such a degree that it is a false name to call them specific. They are general and gross, and then the power of transfer on the top of that, virtually takes away all our discretion, especially when we have retained what I consider to be a very vicious feature of legislation, and that is the power in the Quartermaster General and the Secretary of the Navy, while Congress are in session, to pledge our credit for ten millions or any number of millions without asking us. The Constitution says no money shall be taken from the Treasury but by appropriation we make. We sit still and let the Administration pledge our credit to an indefinite amount. We have allowed that; and then with these general appropriations and the power of transfer, we might as well give up at once and pass a general act that the Administration may help themselves at their pleasure out of the Treasury and come here next year and tell us how they have spent it if they please to do so, and if they do not, they need not.

I would rather do that than to keep up the forms of the Constitution, the pretense of guarding the Treasury, the pretense of specific appropriations, when our appropriations are general, indefinite, and with a power of transfer, and a power to the Cabinet to run us in debt to any amount. If we mean to take into our hands that trust which the Constitution imposes on us, we must make the appropriations specific. We must annihilate this power of transfer, or else our control is but a name. I hope the Senate will not on this bill, which appropriately, and by the universal custom of the Government, comes to us as an original bill from the House of Representatives, put themselves in opposition to the other House, who are the legitimate guardians of the Treasury, upon this great measure, which is so necessary for the full discharge of their duties as guardians of the public Treasury.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator from New Hampshire would point out wherein the appropriations we make for the support of the Government are so general and vague as he declares them to be. I think if you will examine the bills you will find that our appropriations are about as specific as it is possible to make them. In regard to transfers he seems to think that there is a general power to transfer from one object of appropriation to another. That is not so. The law has prohibited transfers from the service of the Government in one branch to the service of the Government in another branch, except in certain specified cases. I recollect that as late as 1852 we made provisions on that subject. There are about thirty laws on the subject scattered throughout the whole book of our statutes, and in 1852 we made two provisions in regard to it; the first in reference to the Navy:

"All acts or parts of acts, authorizing the President of the United States or the Secretary of the proper Department under his direction, to transfer any portion of the moneys hereby appropriated for a particular branch of expenditure in that Department, to be applied to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be and the same are hereby, so far as relates to the Navy Department, repealed."

That is in the naval appropriation bill. Then we come to the Army appropriation bill, and we find that the power of transfer there has been repealed except in specified instances, for which, I think, ample reasons were given, and which have been already reproduced at this session of Congress and sanctioned by the Senate:

"All acts or parts of acts, authorizing the President of the United States or the Secretary of the proper Department under his direction, to transfer any portion of the moneys hereby appropriated for a particular branch of expenditure in that Department to be applied to another branch of expenditure in the same Department, be and are hereby, so far as relates to the Department of War, repealed; and no portions of the moneys appropriated by this act shall be applied to the payment of any expenses incurred prior to July 1, 1852. But nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to prevent the President from authorizing appropriations for the subsistence of the Army, for forage, for the medical and hospital departments, and for the quartermaster's department, to be applied to any other of the above-mentioned branches of expenditure in the same department."

That is the exception. No such power as the gentleman seems to suppose, exists.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That only applies to the Army and Navy.

Mr. PEARCE. I know that; but is there any authority of law, or will any gentleman allege there is a practice of transferring the appropriations for the pay of diplomatic agents to pay for Indian agents? I presume not. I think, at all events, when gentlemen indulge in these general charges, it would be as well to specify. Let us know wherein such a case has occurred.

Mr. HALE. I will. I have sent for the appropriation bill we have passed this session to supply general deficiencies, to answer one branch of the question of the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. PEARCE. It comes within the excepted cases provided by law, I suppose.

Mr. HALE. I do not mean the transfer. I mean the generality of our appropriations, instead of being specific. Now, I will give him an exact answer to his other question. He asks me if I know of any case? and he wants a specification. I will give him one, and I will refer to one brought before the Senate not long ago. Congress appropriated some two hundred thousand dollars, more or less, to run the boundary line with Mexico. Major Emory brought home with him $100,000. It was appropriated to run the boundary with Mexico. When he got home, Major Emory reported to the Secretary of the Interior that he had not spent all the money, and he would like to use what was left for engraving the illustrations in the work he was about to publish; and Secretary McClelland, of the Interior Department, on his own authority, without coming to Congress, told him he might take the $100,000 which had been appropriated to run the line, to make the illustrations and ornaments of his work. I am not going to say that it was not a proper appropriation to make of the money; but I do say it was an appropriation that should have been made by Congress, and not by the Secretary of the Interior. This limitation, which the Senator from Maryland says exists against transfers, has been applied only to the Army and Navy, but has not been applied to the other Departments. He has asked me for a specimen of our general mode of appropriating moneys. At the expense of being a little tedious, I ask the attention of the Senate while I read one part of a section of our appropriations to show that they are obnoxious to the charge which I brought against them. Here is an appropriation of I do not say how much, but I will read you the different subjects which are included within one single appropriation:

"For the incidental expenses of the quartermaster's department, consisting of postage on letters and packages received and sent by officers of the Army on public service; expenses of courts-martial and courts of inquiry, including the additional compensation to judges-advocate, recorders, members, and witnesses, while on that service, under the act of March 16, 1802; extra pay to soldiers employed under the direction of the quartermaster's department, in the erection of barracks, quarters, storerooms, and hospitals; the construction of roads, and other constant labor, for periods of not less than ten days, under the acts of March 2, 1819, and August 4, 1854, including those employed as clerks at division and department headquarters; expenses of express to and from the frontier posts and armies in the field."

Mr. HUNTER. Will the Senator allow me to ask what he is reading from?

Mr. HALE. The deficiency bill, passed this year. I am only telling you what we have done, because I am answering a question of the Senator from Maryland. Now, going right on in one head of specific appropriation, I find:

"Expenses of escorts to paymasters, other disbursing officers, and trains, when military escorts cannot be furnished; expenses of the internment of non-commissioned officers and soldiers; authorized office furniture; hire of laborers in the quartermaster's department, including hire of interpreters, spies, and guides, for the Army; compensation of clerks to officers of the quartermaster's department; compensation of forage and wagon masters, authorized by the act of July 5, 1838; for the apprehension of deserters, and the expenses incident to their pursuit; the following expenditure required for the two regiments of dragoons, the two regiments of cavalry, the regiment of mounted riflemen, and such companies of infantry as may be mounted, namely: the purchase of traveling forges, blacksmiths' and shoeing tools, horse and mule shoes and nails, iron and steel for shoeing, hire of veterinary surgeons, medicines for horses and mules, picket ropes, and shoeing the horses of those corps, $190,000."

I hope the Senator is answered.

Mr. PEARCE. Mr. President, I stated that the appropriations were as specific as it was possible to make them. Now, in regard to the very items the gentleman has read, who is there that believes that any Secretary of War, or any other officer in the employment of that Department, could by possibility ascertain beforehand what the precise expenditure in each case would be? Who knows how many men are going to desert? How can he ascertain the sum? He would refer to the practice of previous years. He would estimate there would probably be so many; so many have deserted in one year, and therefore probably so many will in another year; and he forms his estimate on that basis. But if you were to appropriate a precise sum, say five thousand dollars, for the purpose of apprehending deserters, and you should expend the whole of that sum in the recovery of a given number of deserters, and twice that number should happen to desert, you must let them go scot free because of this very specific system of appropriations. Sir, it is not the thing, and it has not such marvelous utility in it as the Senator seems to imagine. Under that system, the Army Department would be tied up so that they could not pursue these other deserters. Who can tell what will be the movement of troops in the course of a year; what the exigencies of the Government may require; what Indian outbreak may require a necessity for the movement of troops in the large military departments in the United States? We may require movements of large bodies of troops; and who can specify how many traveling forges it will be necessary to take along?

So of every one of these items. You cannot ascertain them beforehand because they are uncertain in their nature, and it is impossible to estimate with precision what these expenditures will amount to. If, therefore, you appropriate only a given sum to be applied to one of these objects, and the course of service in the year should demand a larger appropriation, the service must go unperformed; the Army must travel without its forges; the cavalry officers are to go unshod because you have not appropriation enough to cover the demands of that branch of the service. It is very obvious that it is not in the nature of human affairs to appropriate with that specific accuracy which the Senator from New Hampshire seems to demand. It is enough that we specify all these different branches of expenditures and appropriate such a sum as upon fair and reasonable calculation seems to be sufficient to supply all demands in that regard. Any attempt to do more than that would only produce confusion and loss and injury to the public service.

Mr. HALE. When I took up this bill I read the first section that came under my eye, and I think it was enough to satisfy anybody that it did not deserve to be called specific. But there is another item commencing in the thirty-first line, and covering three pages of about ninety lines, and it will average a separate appropriation for a line, more than ninety different objects all gathered together in one heap, and the round sum of $5,400,000 is appropriated for them in one single collection. I will not take up the time of the Senate in reading the whole, but I will only mention a few of them.

"For transportation of the Army, including the baggage of the troops, when moving either by land or water; of clothing, camp and garrison equipment from the depot at Philadelphia to the several posts and army depots; horse equipments and of subsistence from the places of purchase and from the places of delivery under contract, to such places as the circumstances of the service may require it to be sent; of ordnance, ordnance stores, and small arms from the foundries and armories, to the arsenals, fortifications, frontier posts, and army depots; to freights, wharfage, tolls, and ferrages; for the purchase and hire of horses, mules, and oxen, and the purchase and repair of wagons, carts, drays, ships, and other sea-going vessels and boats for the transportation of supplies and for garrison purposes; for drayage and cartage at the several posts; hire of teamsters; transportation of funds for the pay and other disbursing departments; the expense of sailing public transports on the various rivers, the Gulf of Mexico, and the Atlantic and Pacific; and for procuring water at such posts as from their situation require that it be brought from a distance; and for clearing roads, and removing obstructions from roads, harbors, and rivers, to the extent which may be required for the actual operations of the troops on the frontier, $5,400,000."

Here are one hundred different objects of expenditure gathered together in one appropriation. I was not attacking this specially, but the general system, and I say, while such a practice prevails, there is a greater necessity for preventing transfers.

Mr. PEARCE. I wish to supply a word which I forgot when I was answering the Senator before. There was something said about the boundary commission, and Major Emory having brought $100,000 of the appropriation for that purpose back to the seat of Government, and then having without law applied it to the publication of the work.

Mr. HALE. I did not say any such thing. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. PEARCE. Then applied by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. HALE. I said it was applied by the Secretary of the Interior; and, I suppose, it was by law, and I want to see the law giving him that authority repealed.

Mr. PEARCE. Well, sir, what I was about to say was this: when the estimate was made, provision was found in it for draughtsmen, artists, and savans, to accompany the expedition, and, if I am not mistaken, it will be found that there was express authority in that appropriation for the publication of the report of the commissioner. I will only add that the $100,000 was not appropriated to engraving and printing, though a portion of it was, under the authority I have mentioned; but I believe $60,000 remained in this manner and went back to the Treasury or will go back. The amount of it, therefore, is, that instead of having been done without authority of law, it has been done under authority of law. I think that is the case. I will look for it, and if I find I am wrong, I shall correct my statement.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I moved in this matter in the committee, and therefore, I suppose, I may as well give a reason for my position. The House of Representatives is making an attempt to do what I thought ought to be done on the bill which has been referred to, and a portion of which has been read by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire. It was argued at that time, however, that there was no power to make these transfers, except in the same Department; and that the nature of the business in the War Department was such that it was absolutely necessary the power should exist, and the Senate was of that opinion.

Mr. PEARCE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him, as I have found this passage, and I wish to read it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Certainly.

Mr. PEARCE. In the appropriation for the boundary survey, voting this very money which it is charged has been misapplied by the Secretary of the Interior, and devoted to a purpose not authorized by law, I find this provision:

"For engraving maps, views, and sections of the survey of the boundary between the United States and Mexico, $10,000."

We have heard this matter referred to very often. I trust it will not be referred to again; or if it be, that there will be no further mistake about it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That was not an original appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. PEARCE. It was the appropriation made in 1855, when the boundary commission was re-organized.

Mr. FESSENDEN. This was an appropriation of more money for that purpose. This was $10,000; and twenty or thirty thousand dollars were transferred. That did not meet the expenditures, and consequently it was considered necessary to use some other funds.

Mr. COLLAMER. They used the other, and then got the $10,000 voted.

Mr. FESSENDEN. That might have been. Well, sir, this is an attempt on the part of the House of Representatives, who have been appealed to as the proper authority, under the Constitution, to raise money, to be a little more specific in reference to the use of it than we have hitherto been, and to prohibit transfers in other branches of the Government where they have been in the habit of making them.

The Senator from Maryland knows, and the Senator from Virginia knows, that we exercise a discretionary power over proposed appropriations. One of the Departments comes here in a certain branch of its business and says it wants so much money for such a purpose. We say, on examining the matter, "you do not want so much money," and we cut them down one half. We have done so in this very bill in one particular. We have cut an estimate down from over one hundred thousand dollars to $50,000 in this very bill, and made several changes of the same description. Well, what is the consequence of the law, as it stands now, in that particular Department? They say the money appropriated is not enough; but they find they have got more money than they want in another particular branch, and they just take these odds and ends, these balances, and make up the amount of their original estimate. The result always is, necessarily, that instead of Congress saying how much money shall be appropriated to a specific object, the Departments say so, by using money which they do not want for other purposes.

That is the truth of it, and therefore the proposition of the honorable chairman will not meet the case. All he says is that they shall report at the beginning of each session what balances they have on hand. What do we gain by that? We acquire no new information; we have no new guards; we accomplish nothing. The same difficulty remains that has always existed hitherto, that we are contending against, and have been contending against from the beginning. If by chance (and they are very apt to do it, because, after all, they know ten times as much about how they may make these things come out, as we do) they attempt to use money in this way, I am of opinion that we should have something to say about it. They find that what Congress disapproves on a certain particular point, they can accomplish by using money which has been appropriated to other objects in the same Department, and they take the liberty to do it. A very flagrant instance of it was cited here in the argument on the deficiency bill, where there had been a proposition before Congress to appropriate money for a particular purpose—for the payment of a certain Territorial Legislature—and it was refused by Congress; and yet the Department took money which had been appropriated for the Legislature of another year and used it for that purpose, because it was within the two years, and paid the bill, and it is so returned in the documents. How much advantage do we get in a case of that kind by their simply telling us at the end of the next year that they had a balance for another purpose, and used it for an object for which Congress did not appropriate it? We have no safety of any kind or description in that.

The argument then is, that this is inconvenient in reference to keeping the accounts, &c. I examined that matter before. I should prefer much, from my examination of the question thus far, that we should let the deficiencies exist if they must, and examine them when a claim comes for deficiency and expenditures. I believe it is safer. Persons have talked a great deal about deficiency bills, but they must necessarily arise from the imperfection of human calculation in reference to these questions. When they come in and exhibit their accounts to us, as to particular branches of expenditure, it is then perfectly in our power to see how they have expended the money, and to decide whether we shall grant money by way of deficiency to make it up, or what other course we shall take in reference to the disobedience of the orders of Congress in regard to the expenditure of the money they have appropriated.

Now, sir, this effort, which is made in the House of Representatives, I exceedingly approve. You will see, by the original proposition, that it is not to apply to the present year. It is not even to apply to the next year—that is, to the year ending June 30, 1859. It is to begin after that period. It is giving fair notice of a change of system which Congress thinks it necessary to adopt, and I see none of the evils and none of the difficulties suggested, and have not been able to do so, though I have examined the matter with all the attention I am capable of giving to it. I have not been convinced by the views of the chairman of the Finance Committee in relation to this matter, and certainly, if he cannot convince me, I do not believe anybody can, for he knows more about the subject, unquestionably, than most other, if not all other, members of the Senate. I hope that the provision, as it was drawn originally and sent to us in the bill by the House, will stand, and will not be displaced by the amendment of the committee.

Mr. COLLAMER. If I understand the question aright, it is proposed to strike out a section in the bill of the House of Representatives, providing against transfers of appropriations, and to substitute in lieu of it a provision that the Departments shall annually report, in their estimates, the balances on hand unexpended of the last appropriation for each object. I do not see how this proposition of the committee is any substitute for that of the House, and yet I like it as it now strikes my mind. I understand that a motion to strike out and insert is not divisible. Now, I wish to say that, though I am in favor of inserting the matter proposed to be inserted, I do not wish to vote for striking out the section of the House bill in order to get at it; but I shall vote against striking out and inserting, because I wish to retain that feature of the House bill, and, at the same time, I desire, if I can, to secure this provision in addition to that. I think the proposition a good one; but it stands as no substitute for, and does not supply the place of, or answer any of the purposes of the first provision.

Suppose there is a specific appropriation for a particular purpose for the use of one year, and it is necessary to provide for the same purpose the next year. Let us say that provision is made for supplying the surgeon's department of the Army with medicines, and a specific sum is appropriated for that object for this year, and next year another appropriation is wanted for the same object. All this talk about transfer is out of the case, and yet I think it perfectly proper that, in making their estimates for those medicines for next year, they should let us know what balance they have unexpended of the present year. I say that, under the present system, every necessity which demands the provision which the chairman has suggested of having unexpended balances reported to us, showing what they have on hand, and therefore showing that more is required, exists just as much when there are not transfers as when there are. I therefore desire it to be understood that, in voting against the proposition to strike out and insert, I am not voting against the adoption of the provision reported by the committee, for I think it should be adopted; but I do not regard it as a substitute for the other. As to whether the power of transfers should be preserved, I have nothing to say. I am satisfied with the remarks of the Senator from Maine on that point.

Mr. DAVIS. I think the amendment proposed by the committee is better than the section contained in the House bill; but I think the existing law is better than either. I believe there is some misapprehension as to the operation of this right of transfer in the minds of many gentlemen who have spoken upon it. It is now confined by law to a very narrow limit, and in those cases I think it is useful, I might say, necessary, and I will illustrate it by a single example, so as to be as brief as possible. The Quartermaster General estimates for a certain amount for forage; he estimates for a certain amount for transportation. His calculation is based upon the contingencies of the service, as well as he can foresee them, for the coming year. For instance, he supposes a certain amount of transportation will be needed by the public teams, and a certain other amount by contract, and upon that supposition his estimate is made. It turns out in the course of the year, however, that he cannot make contracts, and he is obliged to use the public teams to a greater extent than he anticipated. Then the money appropriated for transportation is in excess, and the money appropriated for forage is deficient, and if you do not enable him to transfer the money from one head to the other, there would be great practical difficulty in administering the Army. The right of transferring appropriations is very much restricted at the present time, and I know of no instance in which it exists, where I do not think it should remain.

Again, the proposition of the House of Representatives is to make every excess of appropriation a surplus at the end of one year, the practical working of which would be to hasten the expenditure of the appropriation within the year, when a more just economy would lap over into the next year. At present, at the end of two years, an appropriation always lapses and passes to what is called the surplus fund, unless, upon the application of the head of the Department, it be continued on the books of the Treasury, subject to the purposes for which it originally was appropriated. It thus is made a public transaction at the end of two years, and sometimes it will happen, as oftentimes it has happened, that at the end of two years money has not been expended; and an honest man could not have expended it for the purpose for which it was appropriated, and it remains in the Treasury. The head of the Department believes it will be necessary to expend it within the next year; and he asks, therefore, that it shall continue subject to the purposes for which it was appropriated. This is merely diminishing the labor of Congress. It relieves the head of a Department of no responsibility, and gives him no discretionary power which it is not for the interest of the country he should possess.

I know of no instance in which this power has been abused. In the one specially referred to, where money was applied by the Secretary of the Interior to the publication of a work, the appropriation, as my memory serves me, included, as one of its purposes, the preparation of a report; and under that language the office was kept up by the Secretary of the Interior, and the maps finally engraved. Nor can I join in this clamor which seems to prevail at the present moment against all illustrations in a work. When I heard a reference made to that particular report, I turned to the illustrations—I am not able to read the text—and I found but three on which I should have any doubt. They may or may not be useful; I am not able to say; but throw the three out, if you please, as merely ornamental, the rest were absolutely necessary to define the line for posterity. The mere marking of the line on the surface of the earth and setting up monuments along it is but a temporary work. The topography, however, on each side of the line, if it be accurately defined, and with the report of the survey recorded upon the map, stands forever. The monuments may be taken away; the surface of the country may be changed by settlement and cultivation; but the great topographical features of it remain, and the line can be traced at any future period. Otherwise it is a line traced upon the stars and not upon the earth.

I hope, sir, in the first place, that the section as contained in the House bill will be stricken out; and in the next place, that the provision reported by the Senate committee will not be adopted; but if the question is to be taken on the whole together, I must vote for the amendment as reported.

Mr. HALE. As the honorable Senator from Mississippi has stated that he has never known this power of transfer to be abused, I will not say that it has been; but I want to give a history of it in one case in the Treasury Department, since I have been a member of Congress. Some dozen or more years ago we passed a bill for raising a certain amount of funds by Treasury notes, and it turned out that the Treasurer and the Register charged a cent a piece for signing the notes, which came to some hundreds or thousands of dollars, I do not know which, more or less. Congress were dissatisfied with it. There was a good deal of dissatisfaction expressed in the House of Representatives, and the next time that Congress passed a bill for Treasury notes they inserted an express provision that no part of the money raised by the bill should be appropriated to pay any officer who had a salary, for signing these Treasury notes, and they thought they had done the business. Well, sir, the bill passed with this provision in it, that no part of it should be paid to pay these persons for signing the notes; but next year, when the accounts came in, it appeared that the Treasurer and Register had got just exactly the same sum, a cent apiece, notwithstanding this provision in the law. An inquiry was instituted at the Treasury Department to know why it was that these men were paid in the face of this provision of law, and it turned out to be under the transfer power. There was some other appropriation in the Treasury that was not expended; and inasmuch as the bill only prohibited taking any of the money raised by the Treasury notes to pay these officers, the Secretary transferred some other appropriation and paid them. Now, with all deference, I would ask the honorable Senator if he thinks that was a fair and honest exercise of the transfer power?

Mr. DAVIS. I will answer the Senator at once. I know nothing of the case which he cites; I know nothing of it now beyond what he has stated; but it was not an abuse of the power contained in the law, but a usurpation of power not granted in the law, as he states it. I cannot conceive how any claim of transfer, under the strict limitations of the law, would authorize such a practice as the Senator has described. I know nothing of the facts of the case.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator does not understand me. The prohibition was, that no portion of the money raised from the Treasury notes should be used to pay the officers of the Treasury; but they went on and signed notes as before, and were paid as before; and when the inquiry was made how they were paid, the only answer was that they were not paid from the fund raised from the notes, but from another fund.

Mr. DAVIS. I understood the Senator perfectly, and my answer was intended to cover his remark—that it was a usurpation of power not authorized by law; and the restriction is to be found, not merely in that appropriation act, but in a dozen laws, spread over a long portion of time. An officer surely cannot draw from the appropriation for one purpose an amount of money to increase his salary, and call that the power of transfer. It is prohibited in various acts in different language.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I did not hear the extent of the remarks made by the Senator from Mississippi in regard to one case in which the transfer power was used—the case of Emory's boundary commission.

Mr. DAVIS. I cited the case of transfer from forage to transportation accounts.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I thought the Senator spoke of the boundary survey.

Mr. DAVIS. The answer that I made on the case of Emory was, that according to my recollection the appropriation act for the boundary survey contained authority for the publication of the report, as well as the running of the boundary line.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Well, sir, in the course of a discussion here in regard to the question of transfer, I took occasion to vote against an amendment embodying this provision as it comes from the House of Representatives, and I shall vote against it again, because I am not disposed to take away from the Treasury entirely the power of transfer; but there is one case in regard to which, after considerable discussion in a committee of which I am a member, there was not a dissenting opinion as to the propriety of its abolition. I allude to the transfer of a fund appropriated by law for the running of the Mexican boundary to the preparation of the report and printing it after it had been prepared. Congress was afterwards involved in the printing of a concern not complete in itself, and which has brought us now to the printing of a second volume of what is called an appendix, the cost of which must amount to over one hundred thousand dollars, with, I think, two hundred and seventy or two hundred and eighty plates of natural history. All this we are involved in by an act of transfer which I do not believe any proper construction of the law would have authorized.

I should not have alluded to this matter but for the fact that the Senator from Mississippi speaks of a clamor that has been raised upon this subject. Now, if I understand the definition of the word, a clamor is a senseless noise. I do not know of any clamor that has been raised about this matter. I do not think that what has been said is entitled to that designation at the hands of the Senator. He has not been here during the time these discussions were up. I presume that he has read everything that has been said on the subject; and it may sound to him as clamor; and, if he had been here to give us the light of his information, it might have been apparent to us that it was a clamor, and we might have had it in our power to correct our impressions. We knew, however, that these matters had run to very great excess.

The Senator from Mississippi has twice made this remark, or I should not have noticed it. I did not choose to notice it the first time. I do not think any clamor has been raised here; and I must therefore protest against his asserting that there is a clamor upon the subject of illustrations of public works, or upon the extent to which the publication of any of them has gone. Whilst I take the same view that he does of the power of transfer as a general principle that should continue to exist in the Treasury, I must, at the same time, declare that, with reference to the question of commencing the publication of explorations hitherto made, it has been carried to too great an extent, and ought to be abridged and abolished; for I am satisfied it has not been justly exercised.

Mr. DAVIS. The Senator from Arkansas attributes to me the use of the expression to which he alludes, as directed seemingly against the committee of which he is the worthy chairman. The use of the word, whether well or ill selected, was not directed against the committee, certainly not against the chairman. There has been complaint in the Senate which I think unjust, and there has been complaint in the country too, which I think is certainly unjust; and I believe the remarks in the Senate have given rise to great misapprehensions through the country. In regard to these misapprehensions, I think the censures which might have been attached properly to some works, have been improperly applied to those where the illustrations were generally topographical, such as were necessary to make the boundary stand for posterity. The great mass of illustrations in the report of Emory is composed of topographical sketches, which sketches alone, as I endeavored to explain, could define the line so as to make it permanent. The Senator did not hear my remarks, or he would not have supposed that I urged that question as one of transfer. I did not so consider it. If money has been transferred from the purpose for which it was appropriated, namely: to run and mark the boundary, to prepare the report beyond what was legitimate under the use of that term, to the printing of books outside of the preparation of the report, (which would be confined merely to such printing as might be done cheaper than copying in manuscript, and to such engraving as would be necessary, and which I suppose would be the form in which it reached Congress;) if that be the case, it would not come under the head of a transfer authorized by law; and if the Senator had heard my remarks, he would not have supposed my application to be made to his view in relation to the printing of these books.

But a word more in relation to that report made by an officer in every way worthy as a gentleman and a man of science. In reference to the second volume, which is spoken of as an incomplete one, he desired only the publication of a very small edition. If that very small edition had been published, the great expense to which the Senator from Arkansas has referred would not have been incurred. That volume was not the report of the officer; it was the discussion of those specimens he had brought in, whether of ornithology, entomology, or of the mineralogy of the country. Those reports made by scientific men were afterwards presented to Congress. If Congress ordered a large edition, it is apparent they must have expected to incur a large expense. No large edition of that volume was necessary. It is not popular in its nature. It is only required for learned men and learned societies. They alone will read it. Such a book is composed mostly of illustrations.

It is not fair to say that the expense has been incurred in engraving, for colored engravings of that character multiply the expense each time you repeat them. The expense of mere engraving is soon covered; but every new repetition of a colored engraving increases absolutely the whole expense. They are thrown into the country; they support the supposition that the Senate is printing picture books; they are but mere picture books except to the learned men; they are picture books to those who cannot examine them with any view to classify them, who merely look at them as beautiful engravings, the more beautiful to them because they are colored, and colored properly only because they thus present the specimens in the true light in which they should be brought to the eye of the naturalist. I think the corrective there would have been the publication of a small number of copies. It was not necessary, because the first volume required a large edition to be thrown into general circulation, that therefore the second, which was purely a scientific volume, should be published upon the same scale.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 26, nays 18; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Davis, Green, Gwin, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Shields, Stuart, Wright, and Yulee—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Chandler, Clark, Doolittle, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Fugh, Seward, Simmons, Toombs, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I send up another amendment. In page 2, line twenty, strike out all after the word "messengers," and insert "at $1,080 each." That is to carry out a change made two or three days ago in the office of the Secretary of the Senate. He had formerly two messengers, one at $1,080, the other at $730; and, by resolution, both have been put on the same footing.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment. On page 3, line forty-five, to strike out "$7,584," and insert "$7,914." That is to make the amounts correspond. It belongs to the same subject.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. On page 3, after line forty-six, insert:

For the additional compensation allowed by the resolution of the Senate of the 11th of May, 1858, to a messenger in the office of the Secretary of the Senate, for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1858, $330.

That is to carry out the same resolution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment; in page 3, after line sixty-one, to insert:

For stationery for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1858, $5,000.

That is an estimate furnished by the Secretary of the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to add:

For miscellaneous items for the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1858, $3,000.

Mr. COLLAMER. Miscellaneous items for what service?

Mr. HUNTER. The contingent fund; it is for money that we voted to the representatives of Senators who died—Senators Bell, Butler, and Rusk.

Mr. COLLAMER. For the use of the Senate?

Mr. HUNTER. All this is for the Senate.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I have another amendment in page 6, line one hundred and twenty-nine, strike out "seventy" and insert "fifty." The item in the bill from the House is:

"For binding twenty-four copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and delegate of the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, $8,007 60: Provided, That no greater price shall be paid for the same than seventy cents for each volume, or part, actually bound and delivered."

The Committee on Finance move to strike out "seventy cents" and insert "fifty cents," which we understand is the price we pay for the same service.

Mr. BROWN. I think the Senator is mistaken about it. My recollection is that the price we pay is sixty cents.

Mr. HUNTER. That information was given us by the Senators on the Printing Committee from Pennsylvania and Maine.

Mr. BROWN. It was changed at the last session, I think, on my motion. I move to amend the amendment by inserting "sixty" instead of "fifty."

Mr. HUNTER. Our object was to put it the same as it is here. Is the Senator certain about it?

Mr. FESSENDEN. What is the remark of the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BROWN. I think fifty cents was found to be too small, and we increased it to sixty cents. That is my recollection.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I can only say that, in the new printing bill that we passed the other day, the price fixed for quartos is fifty cents, and that is ascertained, on examination, to be sufficient to cover the cost of binding.

Mr. BROWN. Very well; let it go.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. I move, on page 21, from line four hundred and ninety to line four hundred and ninety-four, to strike out:

"For compensation of the surveyor general of Utah, and the clerks in his office, $6,000.

"For rent of the surveyor general's office in Utah, fuel, books, stationery, furniture, and other incidental expenses, $1,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. On page 7, lines one hundred and forty-three and one hundred and forty-four, I move to strike out:

"Draughtsmen, and clerks upon the land maps."

The explanation of that is this: It seems that they have had in the Land Office heretofore nine clerks, appointed by the Clerk of the House of Representatives, at a salary, I think, of $1,800 each. The House of Representatives, upon debate, diminished the number from nine to five, and appropriated for that number here; but it seemed to us that it was improper that the Clerk of the House of Representatives should appoint clerks in the General Land Office of the United States. They keep their office in the Department of the Interior. They are there not under his control, and the Committee on Finance move to strike out the appropriation for these clerks.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUNTER. In line one hundred and forty-six, I move to strike out "seventeen" and insert "eight." That is to carry out the same object.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. IVERSON. I have an amendment from the Committee on Claims to offer:

To enable the Clerk of the Court of Claims to pay the two laborers employed by the court, in order to make their compensation forty dollars per month from the commencement of their employment, $680.

I will state the fact that there are two laborers, colored freemen, who have been employed by the Court of Claims from the commencement of the sessions of the court up to the present time. The amount appropriated heretofore to pay the expenses for laborers, &c., did not authorize the clerk of that court to pay these two laborers forty dollars a month. I think they have got only twenty-five or thirty. It is now proposed to pay them forty dollars a month for the time they have been employed, that being the smallest compensation allowed to any laborers about the Capitol. I can bear testimony to the efficiency of these laborers. They have been waiting upon the Committee on Claims during the present session. They are clever men, both of them. In this bill an amount is appropriated which covers forty dollars a month for them hereafter from the 1st of July next, but does not provide for the compensation of forty dollars for the time they have been employed.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we have generally treated that matter of back pay as a private claim. If the appropriation is made prospectively for the next fiscal year, it seems to me that is as much as the Senator from Georgia ought to ask. It will be a matter of private claim to give them this compensation hereafter.

Mr. IVERSON. It is never considered a private bill. You add twenty per cent. on the general appropriation bill to the pay of laborers and messengers. You increase salaries in the appropriation bill. It is germane to the subject-matter.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I think if the bill contains such a provision as my colleague suggests it ought to be amended; but certainly I do not see any reason for going back and giving this additional pay for past years. These persons have served in that capacity, it appears, for some years past, and I think had very ample compensation. I see no reason for giving more, unless it be, that in the general looseness which prevails, the Government is to pay more than individuals would for the same service. I believe I can hire in this city excellent men of the class these are, of the same description, for fifteen or twenty dollars a month. I have done it frequently. The only object is to make little jobs for these people. As good colored men as can be got in the District can be had for fifteen or twenty dollars a month. I think if we want men for this purpose, the best plan would be to buy a couple, because then they would only cost the interest on the purchase money. They could be bought for $1,000 apiece, and the interest on that sum would be but $120 a year; whereas, the forty dollars a month would be $960 a year. If there is any wisdom in having these men, I think it will be better to buy a couple of them [laughter] than to hire them for this purpose; but certainly to go back and give them forty dollars a month back pay is ridiculous.

Mr. IVERSON. The object of this amendment is to place these laborers on the same footing with all others employed by the Government. Others have got forty dollars a month, and these have not got it because there was not a sufficient appropriation.

Mr. TOOMBS. Does not this show what ought to be the rule of appropriation? Ought the Government to pay twice or thrice what the lowest unskilled labor can be had for at this place? or is the Government to pay the same as individuals? I take the sound rule to be, that it ought to pay the price for which labor of that description can be hired at the place where it is wanted. Everybody knows that you follow no such rule, and hence you are worried to get offices and places for men, because you are profligate, because you make them jobs. You do not act so as to get the public work done on the terms on which honest men get theirs done, but you set up offices to be given out. Everybody knows that fifteen or twenty dollars a month will hire the best labor in this city, and do twice as much work as these men who wait on the Court of Claims. To give them back pay is clearly wrong; and if the committee have reported a provision allowing them forty dollars a month in the future, I shall propose to strike out the forty dollars, and fix it at twenty or twenty-five dollars. Surely it ought to be no more than that.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know where there is such a provision in the bill as the Senator from Georgia suggested. I am not aware of it.

Mr. IVERSON. I will tell you where it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. While the Senator is looking for what he wants, I will say a word. As the Senator from Georgia does not propose to buy these men, I hope he will not conclude to starve them. Rather than do that, I would almost agree with him to buy a couple, though that would not be quite according to our rules. I understand that these men have been employed for some time without receiving the ordinary compensation of laborers who perform the same service. I have been called out of the Senate by one of them, who I find keeps a pretty good run of the appropriation bills. I believe he is as good a servant as there is in the employment of the Government; and I do not see why he should not have the same pay for taking care of these rooms that the other laborers about the Capitol have. If you will go for striking them all down, I shall make no objection to that; but I do not know why laborers in one suite of rooms here should not have the same price that the laborers in another suite of rooms have when they do the same work. All I ask is, that you shall not visit this economy on one or two victims, but make a pretty general rule of it.

Mr. TOOMBS. I take all abuses as they come.

Mr. SIMMONS. Why do you not go on a larger scale?

Mr. TOOMBS. I take them all when I come to them, but you do not take them at all.

Mr. HUNTER. The item to which the Senator from Georgia alludes is on the 8th page of the bill:

"For labor and miscellaneous items for the Court of Claims, $4,000."

Here is a general estimate. We did not know at what prices they intended to employ laborers. The appropriation of $4,000 for miscellaneous items seemed to be reasonable. If these appropriations were used properly, one advantage of making them in a lump, as miscellaneous items would be, that they could employ laborers temporarily at less than the existing wages given, because, as has been very properly said, the Government gives a higher rate of pay for labor than private individuals. It was supposed that when we made these allowances for contingencies, they would not be brought within the general rule of large expenditures; but would lead to a more economical application of the money. When the appropriations made for the court were smaller, it seems it employed laborers for smaller wages, and they were glad to get it. It may be safe to appropriate for contingencies; but first under an appropriation for contingencies they get messengers who are not allowed by law because they pay for them out of the contingent fund, and the next thing is they come in and ask to put them on a regular salary, and thus enlarge the corps of officials employed. I am opposed to that. The number of messengers is fixed by law, and if the Court of Claims, out of its contingent fund, chooses to employ laborers for temporary purposes, let it employ them at the usual prices.

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended. The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. Foor in the chair.) If no exception be taken, all the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole will be taken together.

Mr. GWIN. I wish one on page 19, after line four hundred and nineteen, reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question will be taken on all the others in the aggregate.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on concurring in the amendment indicated by the Senator from California, as follows:

For clerk hire, office rent, fuel, and lights, at the several district land offices of the land States and Territories, to be apportioned in such manner as, in the judgment of the Secretary of the Interior, the public interest may require, $50,000.

Mr. GWIN. I move to strike out "$50,000" and insert "$60,000;" and I am authorized by the Committee on Finance to do so. It is on a statement made by the Commissioner of the General Land Office that the addition of two land districts in California, which has been passed very recently, will involve additional expense, and I move that amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. I will state that this amendment comes in this way: under a section of the law passed in 1856, the Secretary of the Interior was required to make a general statement beforehand of the expenditures in the way of clerk hire and rent that would be necessary for the offices of the registers and receivers. He did make a statement under that law, and it was supposed he might have had the authority to make the expenditure if he had chosen to. He made no expenditure until he consulted Congress. He did make an estimate of $134,000. The committee cut it down to $50,000, but on considering the circumstance stated by the Senator from California, they have agreed to raise that sum to $60,000.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I wish to move an amendment to come in the ninth line. After the word "dollars," insert:

And a sufficient sum in addition thereto to pay the mileage of the newly-elected members of the Senate in attendance at the called executive session, commencing on the 4th day of March, 1857; but nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to allow constructive mileage.

So that the clause will read:

For compensation and mileage of Senators $162,750, and a sufficient sum in addition thereto, to pay the mileage of the newly-elected members of the Senate, &c.

Mr. HUNTER. I raise no question of order on that, because it relates to members, and it ought to be the privilege of every member to move it. I will vote to pay the expenses of the trip, but I do not know that I can vote to give a third mileage for the Congress. I merely say this.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I would state, in regard to the question of order, that I have the authority of the Committee on the Judiciary to offer the amendment, and I suppose there can be no question of order about it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that no question of order has been raised.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time: It was read the third time, and passed.

SAN FRANCISCO POST OFFICE.

Mr. CLAY. I move now to proceed to the consideration of the next special order, being the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. BRODERICK. Yesterday I gave way to the Senator from Alabama, when a resolution calling for information from the Post Office Department was under consideration. I have since conferred with the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, and I am ready now to offer a resolution that will cause no debate, and I hope it will be passed at once.

Mr. CLAY. I yield to that.

Mr. BRODERICK. I offer this resolution:

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be requested to inform the Senate whether any sums and if so what sums have been returned by the postmaster of San Francisco as rents received for the use of the post office lobby from July 1, 1854 to December 31, 1857.

Resolved, That the Postmaster General be also requested to inform the Senate at the same time, whether there are on the files of the Post Office Department any complaints of malfeasance in office, or violations of law on the part of the San Francisco postmaster; and if so, when the same were filed, and in what manner they are substantiated, and the nature of the charges, the specific sections of the law which the alleged acts are in violation of, and what action, if any has been taken in regard thereto.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

CAPTAIN CRAM'S REPORT.

Mr. DAVIS. The Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of War communicating, in compliance with the resolutions of the Senate of the 15th of February and March 8, a copy of T. J. Cram's military topographical memoir and report, with maps on the department of the Pacific, with a letter from the Hon. I. I. Stevens, and a letter from Captain A. A. Humphries on the character of that memoir, have had the same under consideration, and report that the Secretary of War, in his communication, dated March 15, 1858, says:

"The resolution of the Senate having directed my attention to the report of Captain Cram, I find that a large portion of it is devoted to subjects irrelevant to these objects as indicated by the title, and contains certain animadversions upon public functionaries which are out of place in a topographical communication, and which are in no sense sanctioned or indorsed by this Department."

The committee, under the circumstances, ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the report, and that the memoir be returned to the War Department. I have had no ability to examine the report. I find, however, the reasons set forth in the letter of the Secretary of War quite sufficient, I think, to justify the committee in the request which they make to the Senate to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, and that the papers be returned to the War Office. With the consent of the Senate, I ask that that order be made at once.

It was so ordered.

FISHING BOUNTIES.

On motion of Mr. CLAY, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 10) repealing all laws or part of laws allowing bounties to vessels employed in the bank or other cod fisheries, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. TRUMBULL, to add "sugar" to the amendment offered by Mr. ALLEN.

Mr. HARLAN. My colleague and myself regard ourselves as instructed to use all fair means to secure a repeal of the duties on sugar, and I prefer to present this case in the precise words of the Legislature of Iowa giving these instructions. They say:

"Your memorialists, the General Assembly of the State of Iowa, respectfully represent that, in the opinion of this General Assembly, the present duty of twenty-four per cent. ad valorem on sugar imported imposes a grievous burden on the people of the United States."

Mr. DOOLITTLE requested the Senator from Iowa to yield to him the floor, that he might move a reconsideration of the vote by which the appropriation bill had just been passed.

Mr. HARLAN yielded; the vote was reconsidered, and a long discussion ensued on a proposed amendment to add an item for the usual compensation of the reporters. Without disposing of the subject, after a session of nearly seven hours' duration, the Senate adjourned. [The remainder of this day's proceedings will be published in the Appendix.]

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, May 13, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. J. N. HANK.

The Journal of yesterday was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a correction of the Journal. The Journal omits to state that the report accompanying the bill for the organization of the Territory of Nevada was ordered to be printed, as well as the bill itself.

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made. The Journal was then approved.

MEMBERS FROM MINNESOTA.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, the Representatives from the State of Minnesota are present, and I now present their credentials, and move that they be sworn in.

The Clerk read the credentials:

I, Samuel Medary, Governor of Minnesota, hereby certify that at a general election held on the 13th day of October, 1857, under the constitution adopted by the people of Minnesota preparatory to their admission into the Union as a State, W. W. PHELPS received a majority of the votes cast at said election as one of the members of the United States House of Representatives of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, from the State of Minnesota; and by an official canvass of said votes was, on the 17th day of December, 1857, declared duly elected one of said members.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand, and of Great Seal caused to be affixed the great seal of Minnesota, at the city of St. Paul, this 18th day of December, 1857.

S. MEDARY.

The certificate of JAMES M. CAVANAUGH, which was read, was in the same terms.

Mr. PHILLIPS took the floor, but yielded to Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I object to the swearing in of the persons named in those credentials; and I will submit the reasons why I object.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have not yielded the floor, and it was my purpose to call for the previous question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would ask whether, in view of the facts in this case, these credentials ought not to be referred to the Committee of Elections?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the oath be administered to the members elect from Minnesota, and on that motion he calls for the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I thought I had the floor before the previous question was called. I only desire to state my reasons for objecting. I do not wish to discuss the question at any length.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania retained the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I hope the previous question will not be seconded, in order that I may submit my reasons for objecting to the swearing in of these alleged members.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The Senators from Minnesota have been sworn in, and I do not see why the State should be longer withheld from representation here. I will yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio if he will renew the call for the previous question when he has concluded his remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I seldom call for the previous question; and in this case I do not care to call it. I hope the House will vote down the previous question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio, and take my chance of getting it again.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. SHERMAN took the floor at the same time.

The SPEAKER recognized Mr. SHERMAN.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Speaker, if I am entitled to the floor, I wish to call for the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. REAGAN. Had he a right to do so?

The SPEAKER. The call for the previous question was withdrawn; and then the gentleman from Pennsylvania yielded the floor to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I yield the floor to the gentleman from Ohio to state his objections.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, we know from the constitution of Minnesota—which is now a part of the records of the country, the State having been admitted under it—that it provides for the election of three members by general ticket. The ninth section of the schedule is in these words:

"For the purposes of the first election, the State shall constitute one district, and shall elect three members to the House of Representatives of the United States."

I desire to know, then, where are the credentials of the third member? Are they here? and if so, are they in the same terms as those which have just been read? I would like the gentleman from Pennsylvania to answer my question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will say that those are the only credentials which I have ever seen.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. If those are the only persons elected from the State of Minnesota, it is clear that they have not been elected in pursuance of the constitution of Minnesota, and have no right to represent that State here; for that constitution provides for the election of three members by joint ticket, and those two gentlemen cannot appear here with separate certificates claiming to hold their election under that provision of that constitution.

There is another ground of objection. These certificates are signed by Samuel Medary. Is he the Governor of the State of Minnesota? You will see from the particular manner in which these credentials are drawn up that this question is avoided. He signs himself Governor of Minnesota; whether the Territory of Minnesota or the State of Minnesota he does not say. We know that he is not Governor of the State of Minnesota. We know that he was appointed Governor of the Territory of Minnesota. Now, Mr. Speaker, by another provision of this same constitution, the term of the Governor of the State of Minnesota did not commence until after Congress had admitted Minnesota into the Union. I will read it:

"Sec. 7. The term of each of the executive officers named in this article shall commence upon taking the oath of office after the State shall be admitted by Congress into the Union, and continue until the first Monday in January, 1860, (except the auditor, who shall continue in office until the first Monday in January, 1861,) and until their successors shall have been duly elected and qualified."

Therefore the term of the Governor commences after Congress shall have admitted Minnesota into the Union as a State; and the only mode by which we can judge of the election of a member of Congress is by the certificate of the executive officer of the State, under the seal of the State. Samuel Medary, sir, is not Governor of the State of Minnesota; on the contrary, the term of the first Governor commences after Congress shall have admitted this State into the Union. Minnesota was admitted but the other day, and who is Governor of the State is a contested question, not yet determined.

Mr. LETCHER. Will my friend allow me to correct him?

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Yes, sir.

Mr. LETCHER. When the gentleman says that nobody can certify but under the seal of a State that a person is elected to Congress, he is mistaken. In my own State, the sheriffs meet, compare the polls, and give the certificates, transmitting one copy here, and giving the other to the member elect. The Governor has nothing to do with it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. There is one point which my friend from Virginia will not deny, and that is, that the credentials of a member elect must be certified from some officer of the State government pointed out by the constitution or law of the State. Not only that, we know as a matter of history, and we know from the official records of the Government, that Samuel Medary, whose name is affixed to these credentials, is postmaster at Columbus, Ohio, and is a resident of that State now. So, then, these gentlemen come here with credentials signed by a resident and officeholder in Columbus, Ohio, who has no connection with the government of Minnesota; and with such credentials, they ask to be sworn in as members of Congress.

If any persons are entitled to seats here as members of Congress from Minnesota, they are those three who, under the constitution of that State, were elected on joint ticket. There are no credentials, no papers, showing that three persons were elected members. And, sir, I do not know by what power, by what authority, or in what lottery or scheme of chance, these two particular persons were selected out of the three voted for. Where is the other man? Who is he? How many votes did he get? How many did each of these get? Why are these credentials drawn up in this singular and disingenuous language? Why is a certificate given to each of these members, when they were elected by joint ticket, if they were elected at all?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will answer the gentleman. When the members elect came here from the State of California, they came, although elected on joint tickets, with separate certificates. They came here, and their credentials were presented exactly as these from Minnesota are presented to-day.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The difficulty did not occur in California, because she elected but two members, to which number she was entitled under the law. Here the State of Minnesota elected three members, when she was only entitled to two.

Mr. PHELPS. These members from the State of Minnesota have been elected on joint ticket. I need only refer the gentleman from Ohio, to relieve him of his objection, to the cases in the Twenty-Eighth and Twenty-Ninth Congresses. My first election to Congress from Missouri was under the joint-ticket system; and yet my certificate was issued to me separately. I was elected by the duly qualified voters of the State of Missouri. In the preceding Congress the question of the power of Congress to provide for the election of members to this House, by the States, by separate districts, was discussed, and was decided by the House adverse to the principles of that law.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I know that there are many instances where, in violation of law, members have been elected by joint ticket, but I know of no case where more members have been elected than the State was entitled to.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. Shall the members elect, whose credentials have been read, be sworn in as members of this House from the State of Minnesota?

Mr. REAGAN. I did not know that that question was directly before us.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will follow the precedent, which he thinks is a correct one, which was set in the case of the California members. The Chair did not undertake then to decide that the members should be sworn in when they presented themselves, inasmuch as the Constitution of the United States provides that each House shall be the judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of its own members. The Chair then referred the question to the House to let it decide whether the members purporting to be elected should be sworn in or not. Therefore the Chair now entertains the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] as a proper one, which refers the question to the House to decide whether they should or should not be sworn in.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. In my judgment, Minnesota, under the enabling act of Congress, is entitled to but one Representative in this House; and, I believe that, as yet, no Representative has been legally elected. Under the law which was recently passed, she is entitled to two Representatives; but these two Representatives have not been elected at all. It is no hardship to require the State of Minnesota to elect now two Representatives by separate districts in accordance with the law. I again ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania by what arrangement, chance, or lottery, was it that these two men were selected out of the three?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I do not know the fact that the gentleman assumes in his question, and consequently I cannot answer it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Does not the gentleman from Pennsylvania know that the people of Minnesota voted for three members of Congress by general ticket?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I have so heard; but I have never seen any credentials except those which I have presented to the House.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman if he does not know from the constitution itself, for which he voted, that three members have been elected to this House by the people of Minnesota, and I desire to know by what chance, scheme, or lottery, these two were selected out of the three?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to remind him, that by the act admitting Minnesota, this House has laid down its own rule, to wit: that two members shall be admitted, and it is a matter for the House to decide which two shall be admitted?

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia how he would select these two. Three were elected. By what mode do you propose we shall exclude one and admit the others? I desire to know whether the gentleman will vote for Messrs. Cavanaugh and Phelps, or for the other, Mr. Becker, who, I am told, received the highest number of votes?

If this House is to elect members for the State of Minnesota, let the names of the three gentlemen be sent to the Clerk's desk, and let us all have a chance of voting by ballot which of the three shall have the seats. We can then determine whether the members of Congress from the new State of Minnesota shall be elected by lottery, by chance, by the members of this House, or by the people of Minnesota. Three members of Congress, if any, have been elected by the people of Minnesota, and we have no right to say which of the three shall hold the seats; nor have they a right to say which of their own number shall hold the seats. They have no right, by tossing up a copper, or by any other mode of chance or lottery, to say which two out of the three shall hold the seats. I think that, under the circumstances, neither of these gentlemen ought to be sworn. There is no doubt that at the October election two gentlemen will be elected in separate districts to represent Minnesota, and will come here on the first day of the next session. Until then Minnesota has no Representatives in Congress. I move that the credentials be referred to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. REAGAN. I move the previous question.

Mr. MILLSON. If the gentleman from Ohio will allow me, I have prepared a resolution which I think will accomplish the purpose he has in view.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the certificate and credentials of W. W. Phelps and James M. Cavanaugh, claiming seats as members of this House from the State of Minnesota, be referred to the Committee of Elections, with instructions to inquire into and report upon the right of those gentlemen to be admitted and sworn as members of this House.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. That is the substance of my motion, and I accept it.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I appeal to the gentleman from Texas to withdraw the demand for the previous question. I should like to say a few words.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. Is the order, assigning this day to territorial business, superseded by this application?

The SPEAKER. This is a question of privilege.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. But the order is a special order.

The SPEAKER. The special order would take precedence of a privileged question, but this is a question of privilege.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. PHILLIPS obtained the floor.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to inquire whether the resolution of the gentleman from Virginia proposes to refer these credentials to the Committee of Elections after these gentlemen have been sworn in?

[Cries of "No!" "No!" and laughter from the Republican side of the House.]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is what it ought to be.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Ohio had manifested any desire for the admission of Minnesota into the Union, why, then, we might give him credit for thus seeking to keep her Representatives out of their seats; but opposed as the gentleman has been to the admission of Minnesota, I think it is not right or fair for him now, when Minnesota has been, by a large vote of this House, declared to be in a fit condition for admission, and by the concurrent vote of the Senate, and the approval of the President, has been admitted into the Union, to endeavor to keep the State without representation, when she presents herself here, through her chosen Representatives, in the same condition in which each one of us presented ourselves here.

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania answer me one question? I desire it to govern my vote. I wish to know of the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he is able to inform the House which two of the three gentlemen certified had the highest number of votes? My judgment is, that, inasmuch as but two members are held to be legally elected, it must be the two who had the highest number of votes; and the election must be treated as having been an election in which there were but two candidates to be elected, and the two having the highest number of votes were elected.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I can answer the gentleman by a reference to the certificate, which says, if I recollect aright, that these gentlemen had the highest number of votes.

Mr. STANTON. Not at all. It says they had a majority.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to me a moment?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to these interruptions.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I can give the gentleman from Ohio the information he desires. I have here the vote at the election.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object to these interruptions.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Mr. Becker, the man who does not present his certificate here, received the highest number of votes.

Mr. PHILLIPS. All I know, and all that the House has a right to know, is what I obtain from these credentials. What right has the gentleman to rise in his seat and assert a state of facts of which he has no certain knowledge, and about which he is liable to be contradicted by any one else? Must not we have some fixed rule of proceeding? Do we not know that some years ago there was great agitation throughout the whole country, because the broad seal of a State—a State whose broad seal was no better, in point of merit and value, than is the broad seal of this State, as I will show in a moment—was disregarded. The State of Minnesota has been admitted into the Union. Here is her constitution, which directs that the returns shall be made and certified exactly as they have been, by the territorial Governor. The two members to which she is entitled, come here and present credentials such as most gentlemen here have themselves presented, though I tell gentlemen that I presented none, for my State furnished her members with none.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Does the gentleman say that Samuel Medary is Governor of the State of Minnesota?

Mr. PHILLIPS. I know that when he gave these certificates, he was Governor of the Territory of Minnesota. [Laughter on the Republican side of the House.] I am glad there is something that excites the good humor of gentlemen on the other side of the House. If gentlemen will read this constitution instead of laughing, they will find that the returns were to be certified by that Governor. If, instead of picking out detached portions of the constitution with which to find fault, gentlemen will read the twenty-first section, they will find that the returns of the election were required to be certified exactly in the manner in which they have been certified.

It is very well for gentlemen to laugh, and try to laugh a State out of its representation. That State stands here as my State stands—as the State which any of these gentlemen represent. Sir, I ask gentlemen representing new States how much regularity attended the admission of their States? California came here with the certificate of a Governor of a State which was not a State, nor even an organized Territory. And then the objection of the gentlemen, that they were elected by general ticket. Sir, it does not so appear, except from the fact that the constitution so provides. For any information which we have before us, they have been elected in conformity with our law.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania a question, which is somewhat in reply to the suggestion he has made.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I cannot yield for a reply; I will yield for a question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Then I desire to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if he thinks that a territorial and State government can both exist over Minnesota at the same moment? And if they cannot, how can it be that a territorial Governor can certify to the election of Congressmen from a State?

Mr. PHILLIPS. Because the constitution confers upon the territorial Governor, eo nomine, the power. That is an answer to the gentleman's question. The gentleman will find that the certificates of these members are regular, and in conformity to law. The provision in the schedule to the constitution providing for the issuing of certificates, is the following:

"The returns of said election, for and against this constitution, and for all State officers and members of the House of Representatives of the United States, shall be made and certificates issued in the manner now prescribed by law for returning votes given for Delegate to Congress," &c.

That was, by the territorial Governor—the Delegate to Congress only representing the Territory. Mr. Speaker, with this paper regularly in our hands, with these credentials, superior in form to those which some of us have brought here, against nothing but the gentleman's ideas, gathered from the newspapers, and other unofficial sources, I hope the House will not refer this matter to a committee. The effect will be to carry out the opposition to the admission of the State; to effect, by an indirect manner, that which they could not effect by a direct vote, namely: the exclusion of Minnesota, so far as this House is concerned, from all participation in the administration of the Government. I demand the previous question.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I should like to ask a question.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I object.
Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Then I desire to state that the gentleman who received the highest number of votes in this election was Mr. Becker. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What will be the effect of the previous question?

The SPEAKER. It will be to bring the House first to vote upon the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] to refer the credentials which have been presented to the Committee of Elections.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I have accepted the modification suggested by the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. MILLSON.]

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. BINGHAM demanded the yeas and nays upon the motion to refer.

The yeas and nays were ordered.
The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 92, nays 85; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clemens, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Danrell, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Grainger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, J. Morrison Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Hughes, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leach, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Millson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Nichols, Ohio, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ricard, Ritchie, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Wood, and Zollcoffer—92.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bowie, Branch, Burns, Caruthers, Caskey, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, Cockrell, Burton Craigie, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Gartrell, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Thomas L. Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hopkins, Houston, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Letcher, Maclay, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Miles, Miller, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quimman, Reagan, Reilly, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Savage, Seales, Scott, Searing, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Sickles, William Smith, Stephens, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Watkins, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—85.

So the amendment to refer the credentials to the Committee of Elections, with instructions, was agreed to.

Pending the call of the roll,
Mr. COLFAX stated that Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE had paired off with Mr. Cox.

Mr. BINGHAM stated that Mr. GIDDINGS had paired off, for the remainder of the session, with Mr. WARREN.

Mr. RUSSELL stated that he had paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS on all political questions. He understood that the announcement had been made that Mr. BURROUGHS had paired with Mr. AHL. He also understood that he [Mr. BURROUGHS] had since paired with a lady. [Laughter.]

Mr. POTTLE. Mr. AHL has paired off with me. I called on him yesterday, and stated that it had been announced that he had paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS. He replied that he had only paired with me, and that he would so announce in the House. I do not, however, now see him in his seat.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood from the reporters that Mr. AHL had paired with Mr. BURROUGHS.

Mr. POTTLE. Mr. AHL has paired with me.

Mr. RUSSELL. Well, sir, I paired with Mr. BURROUGHS upon all political questions. I do not regard this as a political question, and I therefore vote "no."

Mr. CLEMENS. Regarding this question as one—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CLEMENS. I do not wish to debate. I only wish to assign a reason for my vote.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can only do that by unanimous consent.

Mr. DEAN. I object.

Mr. CLEMENS. I vote "ay."

Mr. HUGHES stated that, for the purpose of moving to reconsider, he voted in the affirmative.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The motion is not in order, the previous question not being yet exhausted.

Mr. HUGHES. I then move that the House adjourn.

Mr. BOWIE. I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Did the Chair decide that a motion for a call of the House was not in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has not exhausted itself.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The motion, as I understand it, is to reconsider and lay on the table.

The SPEAKER. The motion is to reconsider the vote by which the House agreed to the amendment. When the motion to reconsider shall be disposed of, the question will then recur, under the operation of the previous question, on the original proposition as amended.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Would not that be debatable?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The previous question does not exhaust itself until the pending propositions, on which the previous question was called, shall have been disposed of by a vote of the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I hope that these motions will be withdrawn, and that this question will be allowed to go to the committee. I voted against its reference, being willing that the members should be sworn in, and that the matter might subsequently go there. But, as the House has decided to send the question to the committee, let us not take up time with these side motions. The committee will probably meet in a day or two, and dispose of it. Instead of wasting time in this way, I think it better that the public business should go on.

Mr. FLORENCE. If, by unanimous consent, these gentlemen can be sworn in now, there can then be no objection to the matter going to the committee.

[Laughter, and cries of "Oh, no!" from the Republican side of the House.]

The yeas and nays were ordered on the motion to adjourn.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 32, nays 139; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Andrews, Bennett, Burlingame, Case, Ezra Clark, Davis of Maryland, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Farnsworth, Howard, Kelsey, Kilgore, Leiter, Matteson, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Nichols, Potter, Savage, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Thayer, Wade, Walbridge, Walton, and Wood—32.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bliss, Bowie, Branch, Buffinton, Burns, Caruthers, Caskey, Chapman, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Cockrell, Colfax, Comins, Covode, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Damrell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dean, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hawkins, Hickman, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Maynard, Miles, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Oliver A. Morse, Niblack, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Pottle, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricaud, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Scott, Searing, John Sherman, Shorter, Robert Smith, William Smith, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Waldron, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, Wilson, Winslow, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollicoffer—139.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the vote, there being much confusion in the Hall, which caused a suspension of the call—

Mr. MORGAN said: Mr. Speaker, I object to gentlemen on the other side of the Hall delaying the business of the House in this manner. The noise and confusion is all on that side of the Hall, whereas on this side all is quiet and orderly.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that there is a great deal of confusion on both sides of the Hall; and if gentlemen desire the business of the House to proceed, they must suspend conversation.

Mr. CURTIS. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; let the vote be taken.

The SPEAKER. It cannot be done, without unanimous consent.

Mr. CURTIS. This is the only day left for territorial business.

The Clerk then concluded the call of yeas and nays, when the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose a call of the House would be in order now?

Mr. GROW. It would not be.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. To make a proposition is not debating.

Mr. AHL stated that he had seen by the Globe that he was announced as having paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS on the Minnesota question; whereas he had really paired off with Mr. PORTLE.

The question recurred on the motion of Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, to lay on the table the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 97, nays 93; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clemens, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, J. Harrison Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Leach, Leiter, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Milson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Ready, Ricaud, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Wood, and Zollicoffer—97.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Burns, Caruthers, Caskie, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Cobb, Cockerill, James Craig, Burton Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Letcher, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miles, Miller, Moore, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Quitman, Reagan, Reilly, Rufin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Scott, Searing, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Sickles, Robert Smith, William Smith, Stephens, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Watkins, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—93.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The question recurred on the resolution as amended.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I desire to ask the Chair whether, if the proposition as amended be defeated, that will defeat the motion to swear in?

The SPEAKER. It will defeat the pending motions.

Mr. FLORENCE called for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Can there not be a division of the question? It seems to me that they are independent propositions. Will the Chair be good enough to have the resolution as amended reported?

The resolution, as amended, was read.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I respectfully submit that that is not inconsistent with the right these gentlemen claim to be admitted to their seats on this floor, because the subject can be referred afterwards.

Mr. RUFFIN. I object to discussion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] moved that the members presenting their credentials be sworn. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] moved to strike out all of the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and insert that which has been adopted by the House. The question now recurs on agreeing to the proposition as amended.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If that be voted down, will not that be equivalent to a rejection of the application? I think this side of the House had better let it go.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it in order to move to lay this resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to ask the Chair this question. In the event of the House determining to lay it on the table, or voting the motion down, will it not still be in order for the members elect from the State of Minnesota to present their credentials to-morrow, and ask to be admitted to their seats on this floor?

Mr. STANTON. Will the gentleman add—with the same credentials?

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask the question the way I want it answered; and as to the gentleman's amendment, while it may suit him, it certainly was not in my contemplation, when I proposed it, that there should be a change of credentials. I do not know who has authority to change them. That is not the practice on this side of the House, and I am astonished that the gentleman should have suggested such a thing.

Mr. LOVEJOY. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order. The credentials having been presented and read to the House, they are in possession of the House. If the motion to lay on the table be made, the Chair intimates the opinion now, that, in his view, there is nothing to prevent the gentlemen presenting themselves every day until the question is determined by the House whether they shall or shall not be sworn, the House being in possession of their credentials.

Mr. STANTON. Do not the credentials go on the table with the motion; and, if so, how can they get possession of them again?

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Ohio that credentials are oftentimes presented and laid upon the table before members make their appearance at all. It is the constant practice in the other wing of the Capitol for the credentials to be sometimes submitted six or twelve months before a member presents himself to be sworn in. Although that question does not arise at this stage, the Chair merely gives the intimation in response to the inquiry.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. If the motion to lay on the table be carried, would that not operate as the decision of the House that these gentlemen are not to be sworn in and allowed to take their seats? Would not that be the logical and necessary consequence?

The SPEAKER. The intimation which the Chair has given will be open for the consideration of the House when the question shall properly arise.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to lay the resolution on the table; and on that I ask the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 17, nays 172; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ahl, Bowie, Davidson, Houston, Hughes,

George W. Jones, Kelly, Kilgore, Jacob M. Kunkel, Maclay, Mason, Peyton, Purviance, Russell, Savage, Henry M. Shaw, and Shorter—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bocoek, Bonham, Boyce, Branch, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Caruthers, Case, Caskie, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, James Craig, Burton Craige, Curry, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dewart, Dick, Dimmick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Gartrell, Gillis, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Granger, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Robert B. Hall, J. Harrison Harris, Haskin, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Horton, Howard, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, Lovejoy, McKibbin, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Miles, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Niblack, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pendleton, Pettit, Phelps, Phillips, Potter, Pottle, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricaud, Robbins, Royce, Rufin, Sandidge, Scott, Searing, Seward, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Watkins, Wilson, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—172.

So the House refused to lay the resolution upon the table.

* Pending the vote,

Mr. CRAWFORD stated that he did not think there were any merits in the question, and therefore he declined to vote.

Mr. EUSTIS stated that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, having been obliged to leave the Hall on account of illness, he (Mr. Eustis) had paired off with him.

The question recurred on the resolution as amended, on which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 108, nays 83; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Andrews, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bocoek, Buffinton, Burlingame, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, Clawson, Clemens, Cobb, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Damrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Garnett, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Shaw, Shorter, Robert Smith, William Smith, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Watkins, Winslow, Wortendyke, and John V. Wright—83.

So the resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution as amended was adopted, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I desire to say, if not out of order, by way of personal explanation, that at the time the vote was taken on the report of the conference committee in the Kansas matter, I was absent, having paired off with a gentleman from New York; and that if I had been here I should have voted for the bill as proposed.

DOORKEEPER OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I am instructed by the Committee of Accounts to present a report to the House, which is a privileged matter.

The report was read, as follows:

The undersigned, Committee of Accounts, being required by its 102d rule to "superintend and control the expenditures of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives," and "to audit and settle all accounts which may be charged thereon," &c., having had under consideration the accounts of persons said to be employed by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, report:

That prior to the commencement of the present session of Congress the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives was authorized, by resolutions of the House, passed from time to time, to make the following appointments, namely: One superintendent of the folding room; one superintendent and one assistant superintendent of the document room; one messenger in charge of the Hall of Representatives; with salaries ranging from one thousand seven hundred to one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum, and thirteen other messengers with salaries ranging from one thousand two hundred to one thousand five hundred dollars a year. On the 23d of December last, on the motion of a member from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER], six additional messengers were allowed him, as it was very properly supposed that the comfort of the members required an increase in these assistant officers after the House had removed its sittings to the present Hall. The total number of this class of officers to be appointed by the Doorkeeper, is therefore limited by law to twenty-three. Notwithstanding this express limitation of his authority and power, the Doorkeeper, it is believed, has issued his appointments to thirty or more persons, who claim compensation for their services as messengers of the House. Twenty-three of these messengers, as above stated, are returned by the Doorkeeper on his pay-rolls monthly, with the receipts of the parties named therein attached, who are regularly paid the proportions of annual salaries due each of them respectively. It is known, however, to the undersigned, that some of them are not performing the customary duties belonging to the nature of their employment, and constantly engaged as book-keepers and assistant clerks in the folding room; one of them is a private secretary or clerk of the Doorkeeper; and two others are used as firemen to the furnaces in the vaults of the Capitol under the old Hall of Representatives; whilst on the other hand, persons who are known to be daily in attendance as messengers and assistant doorkeepers, during the sittings of the House, and who attend upon the several committee rooms, not being returned by the Doorkeeper upon his regular monthly pay-rolls, have received no compensation for their services, but depend upon the grace and bounty of the House for remuneration. This gross abuse of the confidence and trust reposed by the House in one of its chief officers cannot be too severely censured, and in the judgment of the undersigned requires an immediate remedy. It has been admonished, again and again, to correct these abuses, but without effect, as he still persists in acting against both usage and law, and openly defies the control of this committee.

Abuses of a similar or worse nature exist in the folding-room. It will be seen by reference to "A statement showing the names of each person employed by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the United States, the nature of their employment, time appointed, amount of salary paid each one, and the authority for the same," (Mis. House Doc., 109,) made by Mr. R. B. Hackney, Doorkeeper, in response to a resolution of the House, that he represents the unusually large number of laborers and folders employed there, amounting in the aggregate to thirty-four, as by authority of the Committee of Accounts. Such is not the case. That statement made to the House is false.

By resolutions of the House of August 8, 1854, and December 23, 1857, the Doorkeeper is authorized to employ eight laborers about the Hall, and in attendance in the cloak rooms, &c. He nevertheless represents the committee as giving him authority to employ eleven.

He had instructions from said committee to employ not more than four regular folders, at $2 50 per day. He has reported the committee to the House as his authority for the employment of six at that price. The salaries of the four regular folders authorized by the committee amount to $300 per month, which it was supposed would be sufficient to defray nearly one half the usual expenditures heretofore incidental to the folding room.

The economical object of your committee has been entirely frustrated, and the expenditures thus increased from an average amount of six or eight hundred dollars to two thousand or twenty-five hundred dollars per month. Here, too, the regular folders, who are returned on the pay-rolls, and are paid as such, do not perform any such duty. But a throng of piece-folders, unauthorized by your committee, are employed by Mr. Hackney, who permits false returns to be made on the books of the amount of piece-work done, and returns false accounts of the same to be audited and settled by your committee, as is shown by the following comparative table, made out by the Clerk of the House, and contrasting the number of documents actually delivered during the three months ending May 1, by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the number alleged and returned as folded by the Doorkeeper.

OFFICE OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
May 6, 1858.

STR: In compliance with your expressed wish, I have examined the subject of folding documents for the months of February, March, and April last; and find that the number of documents folded in the folding room of the House of Representatives, for each of the months above named, according to the pay-rolls returned to this office, to be as follows, namely: for February, 73,274; March, 194,539; extra documents 2,329; total 196,868; and for April, 30,804; extra documents 19,708; total 50,512; for all of which I have declined payment, for the reason that, according to the returns as furnished by the Superintendent of Public Printing, there appears to be too great a discrepancy between the number of documents purported to have been folded and the number actually delivered by the said Superintendent. Below I submit a comparative table, showing the number of documents delivered during the last three months by the Superintendent, and the number alleged to have been folded, as returned by the Doorkeeper:

Delivered by the Superintendent in the month of	Alleged to have been folded during the month of
February..... 45,921	February..... 73,274
Do. March..... 45,935	Do. March..... 196,868
Do. April..... 30,790	Do. April..... 50,512
Total..... 122,646	Total..... 320,654

Or, in other words, there appears to have been an excess of 198,008 documents folded over the number as delivered by the Superintendent.

Very respectfully,
J. C. ALLEN,
Clerk of House of Representatives, United States.

Hon. J. M. KUNKEL, Committee of Accounts.
There are other charges of mal practice in office and venal character preferred against Mr. Hackney; but your committee conceive that it would not be strictly proper to report the declarations of Mr. Hackney's subordinates, over whom he domineers most unjustly.

In conclusion, the undersigned, Committee of Accounts, are unanimous in believing Mr. R. B. Hackney unworthy of the trust reposed in him by this House. They believe that he is either entirely and hopelessly incompetent to perform the duties belonging to his office, or shows a willful and deliberate purpose to pervert improperly and abuse the power with which he is invested.

Your committee, therefore, unanimously recommend the adoption of the following resolution.

JOHN DICK,
JOHN A. SEARING,
FRANCIS E. SPINNER,
J. M. KUNKEL,
PAULUS POWELL.

Resolved, That Richard B. Hackney, the Doorkeeper of the present House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, dismissed forthwith from that office.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do not desire to occupy the attention of the House now, but I am willing to answer any interrogatories that may be propounded. As this day has been set apart for territorial business, I move that the report be printed and made the special order for Saturday, at twelve o'clock.

Mr. GROW. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to indicate some other day, and let us have Saturday for private business.

Mr. COVODE. We can dispose of this matter in a short time to-day, and I think we might as well do so.

Mr. FLORENCE. Oh, no.

Mr. HOUSTON. It will hardly be insisted that the House shall take action on this report at this time. There is a principle of justice which ought to control the action of the House, as well in the disposition of a case like this as of any other matter. We ought to see the report printed. It may be that something can be said on the other side. I know nothing about it, and I certainly would be unwilling to dispose immediately of a case of this magnitude, involving all that is dear to the Doorkeeper of the House.

Mr. NICHOLS. I desire to make a motion in connection with this matter; and that is, that the party who is arraigned here shall have leave, between this time and the time to be fixed for the hearing, to file with the Clerk of the House any written statement which he may desire to submit.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. We have a special order for to-day, and we cannot have another day this session for the consideration of territorial business. I therefore trust that without further debate, this matter may go over till Monday, that we may take up territorial business.

Mr. LETCHER. I hope the House will dispose of it on Saturday. That will give ample time for its consideration.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move to amend the motion by striking out Saturday, and inserting Monday, at twelve o'clock. We want Saturday for private business.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to.

The proposition as amended was then agreed to.

The report, and such statement as the Doorkeeper may submit, were ordered to be printed.

OHIO CONTESTED ELECTION.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois, from the Committee of Elections, to whom was referred the memorial of Clement S. Vallandigham, contesting the right of the Hon. Lewis D. Campbell to a seat in the House of Representatives as a member of the Thirty-Fifth Congress from the third congressional district of Ohio, made a report, stating that a majority of the committee were unable to agree upon a report; that one minority was in favor of reporting that Mr. Campbell was entitled to his seat; that another minority was in favor of reporting in favor of the claim of Mr. Vallandigham; and still another minority was of opinion that neither of the gentlemen was entitled to the seat; and recommended that the case be sent back to the people.

The committee asked that the views of their minorities respectively accompanying this report, may be received by the House.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. In compliance with the directions of the committee, I now ask that the views of the several minorities be received, laid upon the table, and ordered to be printed; and I present the views of a portion of the committee.

Mr. KELSEY. I rise to a question of order. Can there be a report from a committee, unless the majority of the committee agree to it?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. As soon as the reports have been printed, I shall call up the case—perhaps on Tuesday or Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would state to the gentleman from New York, that this paper appears to be a majority report.

Mr. KELSEY. It is not a report on any question submitted to the committee. It is merely a report that they cannot agree.

Mr. GILMER presented the views of a portion of the Committee of Elections.

Mr. LAMAR presented the views of another portion of the committee.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. What becomes of the question of order raised by the gentleman from New York?

The SPEAKER. The Chair overruled the question of order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Do I understand that the House has consented, upon this report, that the views of these minorities shall be brought here? The majority of the committee report that they cannot agree, and that is all. They cannot, therefore, report, and they ask the House to suffer the views of the minorities to be brought before the House. I do not understand that the House has yet consented to receive those views of these minorities. I regard it, in fact, as a declaration upon the part of the Committee of Elections, that they cannot agree to a report.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky rises to a question of order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. If the report of the Committee of Elections has been brought in, and it means what I suppose it means, I suppose that it would be proper to refer the case to a special committee, in order that the House may try and see if it cannot raise a committee that can make a report. And, under the circumstances, I will move that the Committee of Elections be discharged from the further consideration of the case, and that it be referred to a select committee.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a question of order. I understood my colleague to rise to a question of order; and my point of order is, that if he rose to a question of order, it is not competent for him to submit a motion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Kentucky to rise to a question of order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I did rise to a question of order. My point of order was, that the House had not consented to receive the views of the minority, and that, therefore, they could not be submitted. If the Chair decides that a report of a majority has been made, I wish to submit my motion.

The SPEAKER. The report was submitted by the gentleman from Illinois as coming from a majority of the committee. It was proposed by him that the minorities should submit their views. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. GILMER] submitted a paper which he asked should be considered as the views of a portion of the committee. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HARRIS] presented another paper, and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LAMAR] another. The Chair is of opinion that the objection of the gentleman from Kentucky comes too late.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. KELSEY] raised the question of order that this was no report. These documents have not been received. The Chair says that my objection comes too late. But the documents have not been received. There has been no action on the part of the House; and it is clearly a violation of the parliamentary rule, as

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1858.

NEW SERIES.....No. 133.

laid down by the Chair, that a minority of a committee can make a report or submit its views without the action of the House. I take the floor, and submit my motion just as soon as I have an opportunity. These papers are not before the House, although these gentlemen may have sent them to the Clerk's desk; because there has been no permission given by the House, and no action upon the report of the majority.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I do not wish to discuss this question; but if the gentleman from Kentucky had paid attention to the reading of the report he would have observed that these views of the minority accompany the report. The report was the unanimous report of the committee, and was accompanied by these papers.

The SPEAKER. The Chair considered the report as being properly presented, but his attention was not particularly called to the portion of it relative to the papers accompanying it as a part of it. The paper was presented as a report from a majority of the committee. Whether it is a satisfactory report to the House or not, is another question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I certainly do not want to interfere with the territorial business which has been assigned for to-day. Do I understand the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to be to print all these reports and documents?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. My motion is, that the report of the committee, which has been read, and the accompanying papers, be laid upon the table, and printed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Well, that is a new mode of getting minority reports before the House. That is all I have to say about it. But I will let it go.

Mr. HARRIS's motion was then agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I now call for the regular order of business.

PAID FIRE DEPARTMENT FOR WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I desire to report a bill in relation to the District of Columbia, in order that it may be printed and be ready when that business comes up.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, then, from the Committee for the District of Columbia, reported a bill to organize a paid fire department in the District of Columbia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COURTS IN TERRITORIES.

The House then proceeded to the consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 59) in regard to courts, and the holding of the terms thereof, in the Territory of Nebraska, reported yesterday from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union with an amendment, in the nature of a substitute, making the bill apply to all the Territories.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was then amended, so as to read: "A bill in regard to courts, and the holding of the terms thereof, in the several Territories of the United States."

Mr. FAULKNER. I move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I insist on calling the committees for reports of territorial business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia moves that the rules be suspended for the purpose of going into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I trust that the gentleman from Virginia will not insist on his motion. There is much business yet to be reported.

Mr. FAULKNER. Very well, I will withdraw the motion.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE TERRITORIES.

Mr. BRANCH, from the Committee on Territories, reported the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior cause to be prepared and submit to the House—

1. A plan for a building suitable for the accommodation of the executive offices and Legislature of one of the Territories, with detailed estimates of cost, taking, as the basis of his estimates, the average prices of labor and materials in the States.

2. A plan for a jail, or public prison, with similar estimates of cost.

3. That he procure from the Governors of the several Territories in which public buildings have been commenced and are yet unfinished, or which the appropriations already made are insufficient to finish, information as to the size and materials of each of said buildings; how much has been expended, and how much money will be needed to complete them, and to lay said information before the House at the earliest practicable time.

Mr. BRANCH. I am instructed by the Committee on Territories to say, that there have been large appropriations made by Congress, from time to time, for the purpose of erecting public buildings in the various Territories; but there has been no system or plan adopted on which these appropriations have been made. In some of the Territories the appropriations have been expended, but the buildings are incomplete. In others they have not been commenced, because it was supposed the appropriations made were not large enough to complete such a building as the local authorities desired. For other Territories no appropriations at all have been made. In one instance, after all the money appropriated by Congress had been expended, the local authorities have advanced money for the purpose of completing the public buildings, and are now asking to be reimbursed by Congress for the advances made by them.

The Committee on Territories, taking into consideration all the circumstances of the case, have determined, inasmuch as it is now late in the season—too late for much to be done during the present season if we were now to make an appropriation—and as it is desirable that there should be some system adopted for the expenditure of the public money, to instruct me, and they have instructed me, to report that resolution, with a view of adopting some system or plan which shall be applicable to all the Territories hereafter. The object of the committee is not only to consult economy in the expenditure of the public money, but also to bring about such a system as will do justice to the several Territories, so that the expenditure of this branch of the public service shall place all the Territories, in future, upon the same footing, and under the control of Congress, and not under that of the local authorities who are intrusted with the power of expending these appropriations.

I am further instructed by the Committee on Territories to report adversely upon the several bills referred to them making appropriations for public buildings in the several Territories. But, in making these reports, the committee do not intend to be understood as determining not to report appropriations for these buildings in future, but simply to recommend that no further appropriations shall be made until some plan shall be devised which shall be applicable to all the Territories. The committee will then be prepared to report such appropriations as shall be necessary to complete the public buildings. I move the previous question on the passage of the resolution.

Mr. COVODE. I ask the gentleman to allow me a moment.

Mr. BRANCH. I should be very glad to accommodate the gentleman, but there will be a dozen other gentlemen who will desire to be heard.

Mr. OTERO. I desire to say a word in relation to the appropriations contained in the bills relative to the public buildings in New Mexico.

The SPEAKER. That question has not yet come before the House.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

The resolution was then adopted.

Mr. BRANCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH. In pursuance of the policy which I have indicated, I now ask leave to report back the various bills making appropriations for public buildings in the Territories, which have been referred to the Committee on Territories with the recommendation that they be laid on the table, and the committee discharged from the further consideration thereof.

The following bills were then reported back, the Committee on Territories discharged from their further consideration, and the bills laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. No. 180) making additional appropriation for the erection of the buildings in Washington Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 433) making appropriation for the erection of a public prison in Kansas Territory;

A bill (H. R. No. 187) to provide for building a penitentiary in the Territory of Nebraska; and

A bill (H. R. No. 424) to complete the capitol building of Nebraska Territory.

Mr. BRANCH, from the Committee on Territories, reported back bills of the following titles, and moved that they be laid upon the table, and the committee discharged from their further consideration:

A bill (H. R. No. 174) making appropriation for the completion of the capitol building of the Territory of New Mexico; and

A bill (H. R. No. 173) making appropriation for the completion of the penitentiary building of the Territory of New Mexico.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, while I agree in the main with what the gentleman from North Carolina has said in respect to the public buildings in the Territories, and while I admit the necessity for estimates for these buildings, I do not think that the two bills just reported from the Committee on Territories ought to be laid upon the table. On the contrary, I think that they ought to be passed. Estimates have been made already for these buildings in New Mexico, and have been furnished to this House from the Treasury Department. The capitol and the penitentiary are now in a state of progress. The superintendent of public buildings of New Mexico has recommended these appropriations, and I hope they will be made. I move to disagree to the report of the Committee on Territories.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I would suggest that the gentleman from Missouri move to refer the bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, where the subject can be considered. The bills cannot be acted on in the House, as they contemplate an appropriation.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I propose to make my remarks now, to show why the House should disagree to the report of the Committee on Territories. I presume that is in order.

Mr. PHELPS. I would suggest to my colleague that he pursue the course proposed by the gentleman from Georgia. Let the bills be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and then when the bills come up there my colleague will have an opportunity to express his dissent to the views of the committee.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri. I make the motion, then, that these bills be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand that not a dollar has been spent on the penitentiary building, and, indeed, that no building has been begun.

Mr. OTERO. The gentleman is mistaken. The penitentiary building of New Mexico has been begun, and I have the estimates before me of the superintendent of public buildings in that Territory. These estimates have been furnished by that superintendent to the Treasury Department. I hope that the course suggested by the gentleman from Georgia will be adopted, and that the bills will be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The question was taken on Mr. CLARK's motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. Speaker, I hope that, by unanimous consent, the bill in reference to the capitol of Nebraska Territory, at Omaha City, will be taken from the table, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. I wish to say simply that there has been a great deal of work done on that capitol. It has been certified to by the proper officers, but the amount has not been paid on account of the appropriation having been exhausted. I undertake to say that there is money now due on that capitol to mechanics and laboring men for work done and materials furnished. It has not been paid for the reason I have stated. Let us, if we do nothing more, provide for the work done and the materials furnished.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I thought that the bill to which the gentleman has referred was disposed of.

The SPEAKER. It has been laid upon the table, and the gentleman now asks unanimous consent of the House for leave to take it from the table, and refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I cannot give my consent. I want some system adopted.

Mr. BLAIR. I state to the gentleman the facts in this case, and then if he objects, of course the bill must pass by. A large amount of money is due to mechanics and laboring men.

Mr. McQUEEN. I object to debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill to complete a capitol building in Nebraska Territory was laid upon the table.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to; and then,

On motion of Mr. UNDERWOOD, the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEES DISCHARGED.

On motion of Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Territories be discharged from the further consideration of a memorial for indemnity for property lost in Utah; and that the same be laid upon the table.

Mr. CLARK, of Missouri, from the same committee, reported adversely on a resolution of the territorial convention of Oregon, praying for an appropriation to pay the expenses of the convention which framed the constitution of the Territory; on a memorial of certain citizens of New York with reference to an overland mail route to the Pacific; and on a memorial of the constitutional convention of the Territory of Utah praying to be admitted into the Union as a State; and asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of them respectively; and that the reports be laid on the table, and printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER, from the same committee, presented an adverse report on the petition of certain citizens of Memphis, Tennessee, with reference to donations of land to actual settlers in Arizona, and asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof; and that the report be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. GRANGER. I am directed by the Committee on Territories to report adversely on a memorial of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of New Mexico, asking for an appropriation for the benefit of public schools in said Territory, and to ask that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the petition be laid on the table.

It was so ordered.

Mr. GRANGER. The committee has also had under consideration a memorial of Abelard Guthrie, praying for compensation as a Delegate from the Territory of Nebraska, and I am instructed to report adversely thereon. The service for which this remuneration is claimed was done before Nebraska was a Territory. I ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the memorial, and that it be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. KNAPP, from the same committee, reported adversely on the memorial of John Beeson, and asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration thereof, and that it be laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

It was so ordered.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Territories what has become of the bill which I introduced at the beginning of the session, and which was referred to that committee, providing penalties against polygamy?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The Committee on Territories have made no report on that subject. My attention was called to it yesterday, and I have searched for the bill, but could not find it among the papers of the committee.

Mr. GROW. That bill, I believe, was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have searched among the papers of the Committee on Territories, and have not been able to find the bill. I do not wish, however, to have the time of the House this morning taken up with that subject.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

I now move the usual resolution, closing debate on House bill No. 544, in five minutes after its consideration shall have been resumed in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I now move that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. ENGLISH in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of territorial business.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS IN NEW MEXICO.

The first bill on the Calendar of territorial business was House bill (No. 544) to ascertain and settle the private land claims in the Territory of New Mexico, the pending question being on the following amendment, submitted yesterday by Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky:

Amend the bill by inserting after the enacting clause as follows:

SECTION 1. The United States of America do hereby vest in the holder or holders of real estate in New Mexico, acquired from Spain or Mexico prior to the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, all the title which would be vested in them respectively by a patent from the United States of America: Provided, The holder or holders of such claim shall exhibit his claim before the district court of the United States in the Territory of New Mexico; and said court, being guided by the treaty aforesaid, the laws of Spain and Mexico, the laws of the United States, and the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, shall decree in favor of the establishment of such claim, whether the same be inchoate or otherwise: And provided further, That twenty years' peaceable possession under claim of title shall by said court be accepted as conclusive evidence of title, and shall entitle the claimant or claimants to the decree establishing his or their claim. But the United States do not, by authorizing such decree, guaranty the title of such claimant or claimants against any title superior in law or equity, conflicting with the claim so established.

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court to transfer to the office of the surveyor general of the United States in New Mexico an exemplified office copy of every decree so rendered in favor of the claimant, which the surveyor general shall record in his office; and the same shall be sufficient reason for him to abstain from surveying such claim as public land.

Sec. 3. In the event of a decision by the court against the claimant, he shall be entitled to an appeal to the circuit and Supreme Courts of the United States, the decision of which Supreme Court shall be final.

Mr. OTERO. I desire to occupy the time of the committee for a few minutes on the bill now under consideration. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky provides for the rectification of these land claims by the courts of the Territory of New Mexico. Now, I submit that the United States courts in the Territory of New Mexico have got something else to attend to than adjudicating private land claims. Under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo the Government of the United States is under an obligation to ratify and make our land titles good. It is not, as the gentleman from Kentucky says, that, by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, they are good; but the Government is bound to make them good. And how is it to be done? Only by carrying out the provisions of this bill; by sending a board of commissioners, as you have sent boards to Louisiana and to Missouri; and by ascertaining and fixing private land claims there. That is the only way in which you can carry out the provisions of the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo. I agree with the gentleman from Kentucky that, by that treaty, we are secured in our titles; but you must make them good in some other form. It is necessary that Congress and the Government should act upon this matter. Squatters come and settle on our lands, and dispute our rights. We have to go before the courts; and everlasting litigations will come up. If I have three leagues of land, the squatters may come by hundreds on my property; and I have got to bring ejectments against each one of them. They do not recognize any act of Mexico, or any treaty. They have not done so in California. Everybody knows that the squatters went on the lands of the Mexicans there, and never recognized any of their rights. They will do the same thing in our Territory. This bill has been prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The surveyor general of the Territory recommends that such a bill should be passed. The Secretary of the Interior has also recommended it. He says:

"A due regard for the public interests, as well as a proper respect for the prosperity and advancement of New Mexico, would justify if not loudly call upon Congress to establish a land office and a board of commissioners for the adjudication of Spanish and Mexican claims in that Territory. It is important to its future prosperity promptly to separate private property from public lands, before the settlements become dense, and consequent conflicts of claims and titles arise."

That is what the Secretary of the Interior says. Your public surveys cannot go on in the Territory of New Mexico until you separate the private land claims from the public domain; and no lands can consequently be put up for sale.

Here the hammer fell, the hour having arrived at which the general debate upon the bill was closed by the order of the House.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I offer the following amendment to the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL:]

In section one, after the word "claim," insert the words, "to six hundred and forty acres of land, including the homestead," so that it will read:

And provided further, That twenty years' peaceable possession under claim of title shall by said court be accepted as conclusive evidence of title, and shall entitle the claimant or claimants to the decree establishing his or their claim to six hundred and forty acres of land, including the homestead.

And at the end of the second section add:

"And the boundaries thereof shall be established by said surveyor general, and reported to the Government;" so that it will read:

Sec. 2. It shall be the duty of the clerk of the district court to transfer to the office of the surveyor general of the United States in New Mexico an exemplified office copy of every decree so rendered in favor of the claimant, which the surveyor general shall record in his office; and the same shall be sufficient reason for him to abstain from surveying such claim as public land; and the boundaries thereof shall be established by said surveyor general, and reported to the Government.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to oppose that amendment. It seems to me that it is rather a novel proposition. Suppose a man in New Mexico owns one thousand two hundred and eighty acres of land: is it to be insisted here under this amendment that he shall have only six hundred and forty acres of what he actually owns? or if he is only entitled to three hundred acres, and owns no more, is he to have six hundred and forty acres under the orders of this board? My friend from Oregon suggests that we might as well give up all the lands in New Mexico. I think it very probable that they will never yield much from land sales. This donation act will give them nearly all the land in the Territory pretty much as fast as they can come in to occupy it; and until the lands are taken up by the donation acts, nothing like regular sales can be had.

But, sir, I really do not see the necessity of any legislation upon this subject at all. Here we are legislating for the protection of the land titles of these parties, when nobody is controverting the titles, or raising questions in regard to them. Now, who is assailing the claims of these parties in New Mexico? Who is raising questions in regard to the validity of the titles by which they hold their lands? Is the Government of the United States doing it? Not at all. Are private parties doing it? Suppose they are: why not let them go into the courts and adjust their difficulties there? And besides that, I am reminded that it is expressly provided in this bill that all that you do is to relinquish the claims of the Federal Government, and you then turn the parties over—the squatters and others—to contest their rights before the courts of the Territory. Now, it seems to me that if there is nobody controverting the rights of the parties, the best thing we can do is to dispose of this bill by rejecting it, and go on with something about which there is need of legislation.

Mr. BLAIR. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to say a word.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. The gentleman says there is no controversy about these land titles.

Mr. LETCHER. None at all.

Mr. BLAIR. And that we are making a controversy.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR. Now, I wish to say that, under the decision of the Supreme Court, the people of New Mexico have really no titles to their lands at all.

Mr. LETCHER. What does that matter, if they have possession, use, and enjoyment of the lands, and nobody is contesting their rights?

Mr. BLAIR. They cannot drive trespassers off the lands, because they have no titles to go into court with. They cannot sell the land, because they have no title from the Government of the United States, and the Supreme Court does not recognize the Spanish titles.

Mr. LETCHER. The treaty expressly recognizes them. If I understand language, the treaty expressly recognizes the titles in so many words. And suppose any parties should undertake to eject them from their lands: those parties would have to show a better title in themselves than the titles of the parties whom they are seeking to eject.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, then, how can there be any controversy?

Mr. BLAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that the Supreme Court, which is the final interpreter of all our laws and treaties, have interpreted just such a treaty as this as conferring no title upon any person, without legislation of this kind by the Government, and confirmation.

Mr. LETCHER. I have a single remark to make in reply to the gentleman from Missouri. If they have no titles, how do they hold the lands now? How is it that they are in possession of the lands at all?

Mr. BLAIR. Under the Mexican Government.

Mr. LETCHER. Very well; did the treaty destroy that possession?

Mr. BLAIR. No, sir, it did not destroy it.

Mr. LETCHER. Certainly not. Then, if it did not, they are now in exactly the same position in relation to the possession and enjoyment of the land that they were before the treaty was made—exactly the same. They are no worse off. I think, therefore, that there is no need of any legislation upon this subject.

Mr. FAULKNER. I would inquire of my colleague if he has made any estimate of what would be the cost to the national Treasury under this bill? And, in that connection, I ask him to permit me to have read a very extraordinary paragraph from the report of the Secretary of War, made in 1852—remarking, however, that I do not concur in his idea of the abandonment of New Mexico.

Mr. LETCHER. I understand that the cost of this board of commissioners will be between sixteen or twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Upwards of twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. LETCHER. And we have never derived a dollar from the sale of lands in New Mexico yet.

Mr. FAULKNER. I ask for the reading of the extract from the report of the Secretary of War, which I have sent to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

"By the last census, the total population of New Mexico, exclusive of wild Indians, was (in round numbers) sixty-one thousand souls, and its whole real estate was estimated at (in round numbers) $2,700,000.

"To protect this small population, we are compelled to maintain a large military force at an annual expense nearly equal to half the value of the whole real estate of the Territory. Would it not be better to induce the inhabitants to abandon a country which seems hardly fit for the habitation of civilized men, by remunerating them for their property in money, or in lands situated in more favored regions? Even if the Government paid for the property quintuple its value, it would still, merely on the score of economy, be largely the gainer by the transaction; and the troops now stationed in New Mexico would be available for the protection of other portions of our own and of the Mexican territory."

Mr. SANDIDGE. I withdraw the first branch of the amendment.

The second branch of the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OTERO. I should like to know whether I may reply to the report of the Secretary of War which has been referred to? He knows nothing of the condition of things in New Mexico, and does that people great injustice.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be in order now.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I move to amend by adding the following as an additional section:

SEC. —. That ten years' peaceable possession, with continuous residence prior to the acquisition of the Territory by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, shall entitle the settler to six hundred and forty acres of land, embracing the homestead.

I am entirely opposed to the substitute of the gentleman from Kentucky; but thinking the House may possibly adopt it, I have offered this amendment with a view of making it as perfect as I can.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Louisiana. The object of that amendment is to confer upon early settlers who have been upon a piece of land, whether with or without title, for a period of ten years, the means of obtaining six hundred and forty acres of land, whether it was included in any concession or not. I am opposed to that. I never was a homestead man. It amounts to nothing more nor less than giving to every man there six hundred and forty acres of land for nothing. Now, I am willing to give these people of New Mexico their titles to the land which they are entitled to; but I am not willing to give them six hundred and forty acres apiece by settling there for ten years.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I will just say that this provision is precisely such as was made in respect to Louisiana.

Mr. GREENWOOD. It seems that we are at a perfect stand still. This bill was discussed all day yesterday, and is likely to take up the remainder of the time set apart for territorial business. If it be in order, for the purpose of bringing this matter to a close, I will move to strike out the enacting clause. It may then go to the House, and if the House see fit to pass it, let them pass it.

Several MEMBERS. Do not make that motion.

Mr. GREENWOOD. Very well; I will not make the motion just now.

The amendment to the substitute was then agreed to; and the substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MILITARY ROAD IN OREGON. ✓

The bill (H. R. No. 56) making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory, was next taken up for consideration.

The bill provides that the sum of $30,000 be appropriated for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, to be completed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FAULKNER moved that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I must object to that bill being laid aside, unless it be with the recommendation that it do not pass; and I submit that motion. I have not heard one word why we should build these roads; not one.

Mr. QUITMAN. I understand this bill has passed through the Military Committee. The principle which I have laid down for myself, in regard to the construction of these military roads, has been never to lend my assistance to the construction of any of these roads unless they were military roads, and would subserve the military purposes of the Government; and I wish to ask the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] who has acted as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs during my absence, whether there is any report of the Quartermaster General showing the propriety or necessity of constructing these roads for military purposes, temporary or permanent?

Mr. FAULKNER. The Committee on Military Affairs have in no instance made a report to this House of an appropriation for any road, as an original appropriation. In not a single instance, where a proposition has been presented to the committee as an original appropriation to construct a military road, have they granted it. The only reports which have come from the Committee on Military Affairs for military roads have been for the completion of such roads as have been heretofore recognized by Congress, and for which small sums are now asked for their completion.

Mr. QUITMAN. The gentleman has not fully answered my question. I would like to know whether the War Department now regards a further addition in the way of appropriation as necessary for military purposes? It may be that this year a road may be indispensable for the transportation of troops and munitions of war, and the next year the necessity for it may have entirely ceased. Therefore, I have been in the habit of acting on these questions with reference to the continued necessity of the proposed roads for military purposes. I have propounded the interrogatory in good faith.

Mr. FAULKNER. I will remark to my friend from Mississippi that in no single case have the Committee on Military Affairs reported a bill for completion of any of these military roads except under recommendations from the War Department.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Does the War Department recommend this?

Mr. FAULKNER. It does. It will be seen that the report from the topographical bureau accompanying the report of the Secretary of War asks for $30,000 to complete this road from Astoria to Salem. No, sir, [in reply to some member,] we have not cut down this appropriation. In not a single instance has the Committee on Military Affairs sanctioned an original application. They are all cases heretofore recognized by Congress as military roads, and where money has been asked for their completion. The sums appropriated were in all instances asked for by the proper Department to complete these roads.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask my friend if the recommendation of which he speaks is to the point that this appropriation is now necessary, in order to the construction or completion of a road, which is required at this time in order to carry on the military operations of the Government? Or is it simply a declaration that some thirty thousand dollars will be necessary to complete that road, without reference to the fact whether the road be necessary or not?

Mr. FAULKNER. It is recognized as a military road in the law of Congress, which passed in 1855, when an appropriation was first made for it. It was again recognized as such at a subsequent period, by an additional appropriation. The communications from the War Department do not, in their last report, indicate any military advantages which may arise from them; but they recommend $30,000 to complete the road, according to the original design and intention of Congress.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, I will say that this road was recommended by the late Secretary of War as essential for military purposes, and absolutely important in a military point of view. This Government, I will remark, has not expended one dollar for the defense of the Oregon coast—not a dollar. Yet, sir, it is known that the mouth of the Columbia river was accessible to an enemy at any moment, while it was inaccessible from the settled portions of the Territory in the winter season, for the reason that the Columbia river is often frozen up for months. The Secretary of War ascertained that, for the protection and defense of Astoria, there should be some communication opened through the Willamette valley; and he recommended to Congress to make an appropriation for that purpose. An officer of the engineer department has been placed in charge of this work for which this appropriation is asked now. Some forty thousand dollars have been expended in it, and the report shows that it is opened so that it can be traveled by horses and pack mules. Thirty thousand dollars is necessary to complete it so that military trains can pass over it. It is for military purposes alone that the road is asked.

The question was taken on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass; and it was disagreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WAGON ROAD IN NEW MEXICO.

The next bill on the Calendar was taken up, being a bill (H. R. No. 479) making an appropriation for the construction of a wagon and emigrant road in the Territory of New Mexico.

The bill was reported back to the House with an amendment.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ROADS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next bill on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 58) for the completion of military roads in the Territory of Washington, reported back with an amendment.

The first section of the bill appropriates $10,000 for the purpose of completing the military road from Fort Steilacoom across the Cascade mountains to Fort Walla-Walla, in the Territory of Washington; the road to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War; and the pending amendment was as follows:

Strike out the following:

"Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the Secretary of War ascertain and pay the amount actually expended by the citizens of the Territory of Washington, in 1853, on so much of the said road from Fort Steilacoom to the mountain as was cut by them, and adopted as a part of the road provided for in this bill by the United States officer in charge of the same; and that such amount is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

"Sec. 3. And be it further enacted, That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of military roads in the Territory of Washington; for the completion of the military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Steilacoom, including bridges over the rivers and streams on the worked portion of the road, $20,000. For the completion of the military road from Fort Vancouver to the Dalles, $50,000; the said sums to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War."

And in lieu thereof insert:

"And be it further enacted, That the sum of $15,000 is appropriated for the completion of the military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Steilacoom, in the Territory of Washington."

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. Can there be a division on striking out those sections?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I have a single word to say. The second section proposes to reimburse to the people of Washington for work done in 1853. The appropriation for the road was made in 1852, with the provision that the work should be done by contract, to be approved by the Secretary of War. The citizens of the Territory, learning that the appropriation had been made, went to work and cut a portion of the road, and when the officer having charge of the road arrived there, he continued the same force, making a contract with them. Had it not been for the provision of law making a contract imperative, he would have approved of the work done, and paid for it. The road was essential to the coming in of emigrants during that season. It has been essential since to the military defense. There were no settlers at all on that road, and the work was done by subscription, a few dollars being raised from each man in all sections of the Sound counties. It inured to the benefit of no single man, but to the benefit of all. It inured to the benefit of the military defenses of the country, and the benefit of the emigrants coming that season. And for these reasons, sir, I trust the section will not be stricken out.

I will furthermore say that this reimbursement has been recommended by the officer in charge. It has been recommended by Captain McClelland and Lieutenant Arnold, and by the Secretary of War. It has also been recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs of the House at the last session.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope that the amendment will not pass. It seems to me that the condition of the settlers there is similar to what it is in every other new Territory; and it may be that in retaining that section we may establish a dangerous precedent.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I propose to offer an amendment to the amendment, so as to limit the expenditure of the $15,000 between the Cowlitz plains and Monticello, on the road from Fort Vancouver to Steilacoom. The object of my amendment is this: they have a road which has partially progressed from Fort Steilacoom to the Columbia river, but not in the direction exactly of Fort Vancouver. As I understand it, when you reach the head of the Cowlitz river, the proposed road follows down that river to Monticello, on the Columbia river. Then you will have to go thirty or forty miles up the river to reach Fort Vancouver.

The idea I have in offering this amendment is to open a military road from Fort Steilacoom across to the Columbia river. It is not proposed—at least I have not heard it proposed—that we shall build the road up the Columbia river to Fort Vancouver. I want to connect the Columbia river by a good military road with the waters of Puget sound. By stopping at Monticello you put yourself in the condition of having a road connection with Salem. I want to confine the appropriation between Monticello and Cowlitz plains.

Mr. FAULKNER. I do not think the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky altogether judicious, although I do not attach much importance to it. This road, which is now the subject of an appropriation, is a road that has always been characterized, in all previous appropriations, as a road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Vancouver. It has been completed from Fort Steilacoom to the Cowlitz plains, and it is estimated by the engineer in charge that it will take $15,000 to complete it to Monticello, and $25,000 to complete it to Fort Vancouver. We have thought proper, however, only to make the appropriation recommended by the engineer ($15,000) between the Cowlitz plains and Monticello.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. That is what I want to confine it to.

Mr. FAULKNER. I see no necessity to confining it to that point, if the $15,000 will extend the road beyond Monticello, in the direction originally designed. If the road can be extended to Fort Vancouver, why not let it be extended?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The committee, as the gentleman states, design to give the appropriation of $15,000, that the officer in charge may complete the road to Monticello. There it is the intention of the committee that he stop. Whether he shall go on with the $25,000 is another thing. My own judgment is that he should not. But it is plain, as the amendment of the committee stands without limitation, the money may be spent, and not a dollar of it spent between the Cowlitz plains and Monticello. You may commence at Fort Vancouver and make a road down the river. You may spend twenty-five or fifteen thousand dollars, and leave us with a road partially made from Fort Steilacoom to the Columbia river, and partially from Fort Vancouver down the river.

Mr. FAULKNER. I did not know that it was the idea of the committee that this road should terminate at Monticello, or that it was the purpose of the committee, in any degree, to depart from the original design to make that road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Vancouver. The appropriation of $15,000 recommended by the engineer, it is true, is, as the gentleman from Kentucky states, designed to be used for the completion of the road between the Cowlitz plains and Monticello; but I see no particular reason for confining it to those two points. If, by the appropriation, it can be extended further, I was not aware that it was the purpose of the committee to depart from the original design of Congress to complete the road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Vancouver. However, I see no great objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. There is peace in Washington Territory; and, while peace exists, it is wise and proper in the time of peace to make these expenditures for military purposes?

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman from Virginia must recollect that the condition of affairs in Washington Territory is still unsettled and very precarious. There is no moment of time when there may not be a condition of war between that people and the Indians. But that is hardly a proper inquiry now. The policy of this road between these two points has, upon full investigation, been recognized by Congress. So far as the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky is concerned, I feel no particular objection to it. In preparing the bill, I did not suppose that it was the intention of the committee to terminate the road at Monticello.

Mr. MARSHALL's amendment was adopted.

The amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was also adopted.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

WAGON ROAD TO THE SOUTH PASS.

A bill (H. R. No. 369) making an appropriation for the completion of the Fort Ridgeley and South Pass wagon road was next taken up.

It appropriates $50,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary, for the completion of the wagon road already authorized from Fort Ridgeley, in the State of Minnesota, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains, in the Territory of Nebraska; to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, pursuant to contracts to be made by him.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported an amendment to the bill to reduce the amount of the appropriation to $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to; and the bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass.

ROADS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 178) for the construction of military roads in the Territory of Washington, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill proposes to appropriate the following sums of money for the construction of military roads in the Territory of Washington:

From some eligible point at or near the mouth of Columbia river, via Shoalwater bay and Gregg's harbor, to Olympia, $60,000. From Seattle, on the eastern shore of Puget sound, to Fort Colville, $50,000. From Olympia to the military post near Port Townsend, $50,000; the said sums to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FAULKNER. The Committee on Military Affairs reported against the expediency of constructing those roads.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. I move to amend the bill by increasing the appropriations one dollar. I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the construction of these roads has been very strongly urged by the War Department. The following is the report of the officers of the bureau of topographical engineers in reference to them:

BUREAU OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS,
WASHINGTON, May 4, 1858.

SIR: In addition to the information furnished by this bureau on the 13th of February last, in answer to a letter from the Hon. Mr. FAULKNER, of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, in relation to the construction of certain military roads in Oregon and Washington Territories, I have the honor of transmitting herewith a copy of a report from Lieutenant G. H. Mendell, corps topographical engineers, the officer in the immediate charge of the construction of roads in these Territories, giving his views in regard to those referred to in the letter of Mr. FAULKNER. Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant,

J. C. WOODRUFF,
Captain Topographical Engineers, Assistant in Charge.
Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA, April 2, 1858.

MAJOR: In accordance with your instructions, I submit the following report on bills Nos. 56, 58, and 178:

1. Bill No. 56, in relation to the Astoria and Salem military road.

In reference to this subject, I have nothing to add to my recommendation in my last annual report, which, on account of the unevenness of the country, as also of the dense timber with which it is covered, recommends an additional appropriation of $30,000.

2. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Walla-Walla, Washington Territory.

From what I have been able to learn by inquiry from the most reliable sources within my reach, I am quite of the opinion that the sum contemplated would not be sufficient at the present time to give the road that permanence which is desirable. It is my belief that no wagon has ever passed over this route from the west; and that fifty miles of the road east of Porter's prairie (which is at the lower crossing of White river) will require a large expenditure in grading, cutting, and bridging, to make it practicable. Five hundred dollars per mile I should regard as a low estimate—in all, $25,000.

In a military point of view, all roads crossing the Cascade mountains are of paramount importance. The largest and most formidable tribes of Indians on our borders, yet unsubdued, occupy the valleys of the Yakima and other adjacent streams. The ties connecting these Indians with those on the Sound are of a close nature, owing to marriages and other causes, and the feeling of the tribes on the Sound may be generally inferred from the attitude of those living east of the mountains. The time will soon come when the subjection of the tribes living on the waters of the Columbia will be essentially necessary, and it is probable that this will be attended by an Indian war on the Sound. In this contingency, it will readily appear that the means of communication by way of the mountains cannot be too good.

3. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Steilacoom, Washington Territory.

In my last annual report an estimate of $15,000 was submitted to continue the road from the Cowlitz plains to Monticello, near the mouth of the Cowlitz river. To continue the road up the Columbia from the Cowlitz to Vancouver, a distance of fifty miles, the minimum estimate submitted is $500 per mile—in all, $25,000.

4. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Dalles, Oregon Territory.

The amount estimated for by my predecessor for the improvement of the trail between the points named, would doubtless be sufficient for the purpose; and as the quartermaster's department annually sends many animals from one post to the other, generally by steamboats, at the rate of eight or ten dollars per head, a large expense might be saved by this improvement, as then they could be sent by the trail.

5. Bill No. 178, road from the mouth of the Columbia river, by Shoalwater bay and Gray's harbor, to Olympia.

I have no reliable information of sufficient extent to enable me to speak with entire confidence on this road. The condition of the road touching Gray's harbor will much increase its length or necessitate its location through a section of country quite unknown, namely: between Gray's harbor and Olympia. A road from the mouth of the Columbia river, by way of Shoalwater bay, would be about seventy miles in length, intersecting the Vancouver and Steilacoom military road at Davis's, six miles south of Skookum Chuck. To take in Gray's harbor, the road would be from one hundred and twenty to one hundred and forty miles in length. The routes are approximately located on the accompanying map. A minimum estimate of the cost of construction would be $500 per mile. The country is heavily timbered, and is also quite mountainous.

I quite concur in the views of the bureau, as expressed in the report of February 13, 1858, as to the importance of these roads.

6. Bill No. 178, military road from Olympia to Port Townsend.

Little is known of the country to be traversed by this route. It is mountainous, and doubtless, like most other sections of the Territory, is heavily timbered. The distance is from one hundred to one hundred and twenty miles; $500 per mile will be necessary for its construction.

7. Bill No. 178, military road from Seattle to Fort Colville, $50,000.

The route to be followed by this road would doubtless be by the Snoqualmie Pass, which has been proved to be the best through the Cascade mountains, being practicable when none others are.

The country, for perhaps one hundred miles east of Seattle, is heavily timbered and mountainous. The amount proposed would doubtless be sufficient to make a passable wagon road over the line.

This route I would suggest as one of the most important of those proposed. It is certain that very considerable settlements will be made at and near Fort Colville, and, as is observed by the bureau, Seattle is a natural outlet of the country. A better road, at a less expense, could be made on this route than on any other over the Cascade mountains, and would be, in my opinion, most essential in case of Indian hostilities, which hostilities may always be expected. A map, sufficiently accurate to show the position of some of the proposed routes, is transmitted.

With more time and opportunity to collect facts, much more could be said in favor of these roads, and it is to be regretted that it is impossible now to do justice to the subjects.

One can scarcely be wide of the mark in building roads in Washington Territory, where the surface of the country presents so many difficulties, and where the population is too sparse to overcome them; and it may be said that expensive wars may be anticipated with the Indian tribes there for many years to come.

During the last war upon the Sound, much difficulty was experienced, owing to the ignorance of all as to the topography of the country, and to the want of communication. Much delay and expense were entailed upon the Government from these causes, and I would regard the construction of these roads as measures of economy, in view of an almost certain recurrence of this state of affairs.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant.

G. H. MENDELL,

First Lieutenant Topographical Engineers.

Major HARTMAN BACHE, Topographical Engineers, Superintendent of Military Roads, San Francisco, California.

BUREAU OF TOPOGRAPHICAL ENGINEERS.

WASHINGTON, February 13, 1858.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your direction to report upon the bills Nos. 56, 58, and 178, referred to in the letter of the Hon. Mr. FAULKNER, of the Military Committee of the House of Representatives, of the 2d instant.

1. Bill No. 56, in relation to the military road from Astoria to Salem, Oregon Territory.

I beg leave to refer to the annual report of this bureau, and the report of the engineer officer in charge, appended thereto, in which will be found the estimate for an additional appropriation of $39,000 for the purpose of rendering the road practicable for wagons.

2. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Steilacoom to Fort Walla Walla, Washington Territory.

This road was opened under the direction of the War Department. The officer in charge recommended an additional appropriation of $10,000, which, "in connexion with what has already been expended, will give to the work a permanence and stability that it justly demands, even at the present time, as the only military and commercial thoroughfare into this portion of the Territory." He also recommends that the amount expended by the citizens of the Territory in opening the road from Steilacoom to the mountains, the greater part of which was adopted as the military road, be refunded. It is believed that this amount will not exceed $10,000. It is therefore recommended that this amount, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be appropriated for this purpose.

The amount, therefore, required for the Fort Steilacoom and Fort Walla Walla military road is $20,000.

3. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Steilacoom.

In the annual report of this bureau will be found the estimate of the engineer officer in charge, amounting to $15,000.

The engineer reports that a good ordinary wagon road from the Cowlitz plains to Fort Steilacoom will be completed by the 1st of November, 1857.

"The next step to be taken on this route is to continue the road to the Columbia river."

"In a military point of view, it is of great importance that there should be a good road over this route."

"It is respectfully recommended that an additional appropriation be asked for, which, in addition to the balance on hand, will be sufficient to construct a good road from the Cowlitz plains to Monticello, a distance of thirty miles. The estimate is $15,000."

No bridges appear to be included in this estimate.

4. Bill No. 58, military road from Fort Vancouver to the Dalles.

The construction of the road, as shown by the survey and reports, can only be effected at an enormous cost, say $1,000 per mile. The engineer officer in charge reports, "a good steamboat navigation from Vancouver to the Cascades, a good road across the Portage," and a continuation of steamboat navigation thence to the Dalles, certainly fulfill all the conditions of a military road from the Dalles to Columbia barracks, and is the only practicable route."

He recommends a plank road across the Portage, and estimates the cost thereof at..... $13,799

He also estimates for "improving the trail from Columbia barracks to the Dalles of the Columbia, for a dragoon road and for pack animals"..... 8,000

Total..... 21,799

The engineer officer now in charge reports, (see annual report of this year,) "there is an excellent summer road."

"The quartermaster's department have made use of the road ever since its construction."

The estimates should doubtless be increased to $17,000, in order to cover all expenses of repairs of the road to prepare it for planking. In a military point of view, the dragoon trail is of great importance. The total amount of the estimate will then be $25,000.

5. Bill No. 178, military road from some eligible point at or near the mouth of the Columbia river, via Shoalwater bay and Gregg's harbor, to Olympia, $60,000.

There is no information in the bureau in reference to the cost of this road.

In a military point of view, the road is essential; the troops at the forts, either Steilacoom or Vancouver, could thus be readily thrown upon the coast to control the Indian bands in that quarter.

6. Bill No. 178, military road from Olympia to the military post near Fort Townsend, $50,000.

There is no information in the bureau in reference to the cost of this road. In a military point of view, its importance cannot be questioned.

The construction of this, and the roads above referred to, would tend to facilitate settlement, the result of which would be such a force of settlers along the roads as would render military protection unnecessary.

7. Bill No. 178, military road from Seattle to Fort Colville, $50,000.

There is no information in this bureau that will enable the estimate of cost of construction to be arrived at. As a portion of the defense of the Territory, the construction of this road is deemed very essential.

Seattle is the natural port and outlet of the Yakima country, east of the Cascades, and the mining region about Fort Colville. The Indian tribes are reputed to be numerous and warlike.

It cannot be questioned that all the roads are needed for the movement of troops, and are recommended for favorable consideration.

Accompanying the bills above referred to, is a petition from citizens of Nebraska Territory, asking an appropriation for the construction of a road from Nebraska City to Fort Kearny, in said Territory.

Nothing is known in this office in regard to the route contemplated by the petitioners for a road between the points named; but if, as represented by them, a saving of forty miles in the transportation of military stores to Utah would be effected by the construction of such a road, it would seem to be a matter deserving consideration.

Respectfully, sir, your obedient servant.

J. J. ABERT,

Colonel Corps Engineers.

Hon. JOHN B. FLOYD, Secretary of War.

I introduced this bill, and urge the construction of these roads upon military grounds alone. They are required for the defense of the Territory. We have, west of the Cascade mountains, twelve thousand Indians, who, within the last two or three years, have been all disaffected, and in regard to whom disaffection may be their normal condition for years to come. It is a difficult country to communicate in. In the military services in 1855-56, the gist of the defenses consisted in cutting out trails and building roads. I therefore urge this measure as a measure of defense and a measure of economy. I now withdraw my amendment.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do not pass.

WAGON ROAD IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next bill in order upon the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 415) for the construction of a wagon road to connect the navigable waters of the Missouri and Columbia rivers, reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill proposes to appropriate $200,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of a wagon road from the navigable waters of the Missouri river, at or near Fort Benton, via the Northern Little Blackfoot or Mullan's, and the Cœur d'Alene trails, via the Cœur d'Alene mission, to the navigable waters of the Columbia river, at or near old Fort Walla Walla, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

INDIAN HOSTILITIES IN NEBRASKA.

A bill (H. R. No. 425) to authorize the Secretary of War to settle and adjust the expenses incurred in defending the frontier settlements of Nebraska against Indians in the year 1855, was then taken up.

The bill authorizes and directs the Secretary of War to adjust and settle all claims and expenses growing out of the employment of volunteers or other militia, called into service by the Governor of Nebraska in 1855 for the suppression of Indian hostilities, in such cases only where, in his opinion, it was proper and necessary to call them into the service, the whole amount allowed for expenses of every kind not to exceed the sum of $10,000.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

SURVEY OF THE COLUMBIA RIVER.

The next bill that came up for consideration was a bill (H. R. No. 554) for the survey of the Columbia river.

The bill appropriates $10,000 for the survey of the Columbia river from the Cascades to Kettle Falls, near Fort Colville, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. That appears to be a river and harbor bill. I should like to know how it got in here. It did not come from the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. No, sir; it came from the Committee on Military Affairs. It is essentially a military bill. It is a bill to make a reconnaissance of the Columbia river. I would make the suggestion to the gentleman from Illinois that this bill first went to his committee, and that his committee asked to be discharged from the consideration of it, and to have it referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. QUITMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky whether this bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. FAULKNER. It was authorized by the Committee on Military Affairs when that gentleman was himself acting as chairman of that committee, and before, in his absence, I assumed the duties of that position. I have no responsibilities of any kind connected with that bill.

Mr. QUITMAN. I know that I was opposed to the bill.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that it be laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I trust that direction will not be given to it. The Committee on Commerce, as I said, have once had it before them, and on their own motion it was referred to our committee. This appropriation is essential to the protection of the northwest coast. How can you ascertain where to place your works of defense, unless you know the capacity of the streams which you are to guard?

Mr. BRANCH. I believe it is customary to place forts at the mouths of rivers. But I believe this bill provides for surveying this river very high up, and I cannot conceive that it is necessary for military purpose. I am not going into the discussion of the general question of the propriety of this description of appropriations, but I insist on my motion.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE IN THE TERRITORIES.

The House bill (No. 119) to regulate and make uniform the right of suffrage in the Territories of the United States, was next taken up for consideration.

The bill provides that the rights of suffrage and of holding office in the Territories of the United States shall hereafter be exercised only by citizens of the United States, native and naturalized, and that so much of any existing law or laws as come in conflict with this provision be repealed.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MILITARY ROADS IN NEW MEXICO.

House bill (No. 549) to provide for the completion of the military road from Fort Union to Santa Fé, New Mexico, was next taken up for consideration.

The bill appropriates $35,000 for the completion of the military road from Fort Union to Santa Fé, New Mexico.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

MILITARY ROADS IN KANSAS.

House bill (No. 422) making appropriations for the repair of certain military roads in Kansas Territory was taken up for consideration.

The bill provides that the following sums of money be appropriated for the construction or repair of roads in Kansas Territory:

For the construction of a bridge over the Big Stranger creek, on the great military road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley, $5,000; for the construction of a bridge over the Grasshopper river, on the same road, the like sum of $5,000; for the construction of a bridge over the Big Blue river, on the same road, at the mouth of said river, $10,000; the said work to be done under the direction of the Secretary of War, pursuant to contracts made by him.

The Committee on Military Affairs reported back the bill with the recommendation to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That a sum not exceeding $15,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated to the construction of such bridges as may, upon a careful examination, be deemed necessary, upon the military road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley, in the Territory of Kansas; the said work to be done under the direction and control of the Secretary of War.

And to amend the title so as to make it read as follows:

A bill to complete the road from Fort Leavenworth to Fort Riley, in the Territory of Kansas.

Mr. BRANCH. What committee does that bill come from?

THE SPEAKER. The Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. BRANCH. The Committee on Territories have reported against some propositions of a similar character for Nebraska. It seems to me that, if we are to make such a provision for one of the Territories, we should apply the same rule to all. And we should certainly apply as stringent a rule to Kansas as we have applied to other Territories, now that Kansas is a State. And, in addition to that, I understand this proposes to open a new source of expenditure. We are not only to incur expense for building military roads, but for purposes military, commercial, or otherwise, we are to keep in repair the bridges in Kansas.

Mr. GILMAN. I desire to know of the gentleman from North Carolina when Kansas became a State?

Mr. BRANCH. We have passed an act looking to her admission, and I have no doubt she will soon become a State?

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to say that the appropriations contained in this bill are of more importance than any we have considered upon the subject of military roads. These bridges are directly on the road to Utah. These three bridges are necessary for the use of the Government. We are now paying more for ferriage than it would cost to build the bridges.

A MEMBER. What streams do they cross?

Mr. CURTIS. The tributaries of the Kaw river. Our troops have to cross them; and, unless you build the bridges, you will have to pay a good deal more money for crossing by means of ferries.

Mr. BRANCH. Is there not an appropriation in the regular appropriation bill for the necessary construction and repairs of such military roads as are actually required for the use of the troops of the Government?

Mr. CURTIS. Nothing which will be applicable to this sort of work.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that the bill as amended be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was accordingly laid aside.

MILITARY ROAD IN NEBRASKA.

House bill (No. 562) for the completion of the road from Council Bluffs to New Fort Kearny, in the Territory of Nebraska, was next taken up for consideration.

The bill provides that the further sum of $25,000 be appropriated to the completion of the road from a point of the Missouri river opposite Council Bluffs, Iowa, to New Fort Kearny, in Nebraska; also, the further sum of $10,000 is appropriated to improve the ferry across the Loup fork of the Platte, if, upon examination, it is found that such improvement is practicable for the sum appropriated for that purpose—the road to continue, as heretofore, under the direction and control of the Secretary of War.

Mr. BRANCH. I make the same motion in reference to this bill—that it be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I understood the gentleman to oppose the last bill on the ground that his committee had had the matter in charge, and reported against it. Is this bill in the same way?

Mr. BRANCH. Not that I know of; but I think this is a bad bill, and ought not to pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

CLERKS TO TERRITORIAL ASSEMBLIES.

The bill next taken up was a bill (H. R. No. 414) to extend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend 'An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon,' and 'An act to establish the territorial government of Minnesota,'" to the Territory of Washington.

The bill extends to the Territory of Washington the provisions of an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to establish the territorial government of Oregon,' and 'An act to establish the territorial government of Minnesota,'" approved February 19, 1851, in reference to the employment of an additional clerk for each branch of the Legislative Assembly thereof.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

GOVERNOR DOUGLASS.

The bill next taken up was a bill (H. R. No. 566) to refund to James Douglass, Governor of Vancouver's Island, the sum of $7,000 advanced by him to supply the volunteers of Washington Territory with clothing and blankets during the late Indian war in that Territory.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay to James Douglass, Governor of Vancouver's Island, $7,000, it being so much money advanced by him to the Hudson's Bay Company in payment of clothing and blankets furnished by the company to the volunteers of Washington Territory in 1855, upon the order of Isaac I. Stevens, Governor of the Territory of Washington, and upon a guarantee for the payment of the same by Douglass, and for which sum Isaac I. Stevens, as Governor, has executed his certificate of debt, payable when an appropriation should be made by Congress.

Mr. LANE. I move to amend the bill by adding the following as additional sections of the bill:

And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, whatever amount may be necessary to enable the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the expenses necessarily incurred by the territorial governments of Oregon and Washington in the suppression of Indian hostilities therein in the years 1855 and 1856, so far as the claims growing out of said war have been adjudicated by the commissioners appointed for that purpose, agreeably to the provisions of the eleventh section of the act of the 16th August, 1853, entitled "An act making appropriations for certain civil expenses of the Government, for the year ending 30th June, 1857," and have been reported to the War Department, by said commissioners, for payment.

And be it further enacted, That the amounts severally found due to the parties contained in the report of the said commissioners shall be paid to the said parties respectively, or their legal representatives, or to the assignees or attorneys, duly constituted and appointed, of said parties, anything in the act approved July 29, 1846, or in the act of February, 1853, to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. The amendment is a general bill, and is not in order to a private bill. There is a rule of the House which expressly provides that no bill shall be amended by a rider in this way.

Mr. LANE. If the gentleman will hear me he will not contend that this amendment is not strictly in order. The object of this bill is to provide for paying Governor Douglass for certain expenses incurred in the Indian war in Washington Territory. I am speaking to the question of order. The claim which Mr. Douglass has is for supplies furnished the troops who were acting against the Indians in the years 1855 and 1856. The expenses growing out of that war have been properly and legally adjudicated. This claim of Governor Douglass has been passed upon with all the other claims growing out of the war; but this is the only item for which provision is made. The amendment which I offer is for the same purpose precisely.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to hear my friend on the point of order; not on the merits of the case.

Mr. LANE. I am showing that this is one item of a series of claims growing out of this war, and that these claims have been adjudicated by a board of commissioners. The amendment is in relation to the same subject-matter as the original bill.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. I would like to suggest to the gentleman from Oregon and to the Chair that the explanation of the gentleman does not bring the amendment within the rule. The one is a private bill, and the other is a general bill; and although both may relate to the same subject-matter, the amendment nevertheless is out of order.

Mr. LANE. This bill is one item of the expenses of that war. There are probably five or six thousand claims growing out of the same war; and I want to call the attention of the committee to the law of Congress under which these claims have been recognized:

"That the Secretary of War be directed to examine into the amount of expenses necessarily incurred in the suppression of Indian hostilities in the late Indian war in Oregon and Washington, by the territorial governments of said Territories, for the maintenance of the volunteer forces engaged in said war, including pay of volunteers; and that he may, in his judgment it be necessary, direct a commission of three to proceed to ascertain and report to him all expenses incurred for purposes above specified."

Now, Mr. Chairman, under the provision of that law, the Secretary of War appointed a commission of three persons to assemble in the Territories of Oregon and Washington, and ascertain the expenses necessarily incurred. Congress made an appropriation of $12,000 to defray the expenses of that commission. It was constituted of two Army officers and one citizen. It assembled at Fort Vancouver, and was in session twelve months.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. There is a question of order pending. I ask that it be decided.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oregon has a right to appeal, and to debate the appeal.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. Is he debating the appeal?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not able to tell what application the gentleman from Oregon proposes to make of his remarks.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. There was no appeal taken; it is simply a question of order.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman from Oregon has a right to discuss the question of order, debate not being closed on the bill.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not without doubt as to whether this amendment is in order, but he is under the impression that it is not in order. The bill itself is a private bill, for the relief of James Douglass. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oregon seems to be a general bill, applicable to a whole class of cases. The impression of the Chair is, that the amendment is not in order, and the Chair so rules.

Mr. LETCHER. Has not the gentleman from Oregon a right to speak on the original bill?

The CHAIRMAN. He has.

Mr. LANE. I want to show how this bill for the relief of Mr. Douglass comes up here, and I desire to call the attention of the committee now to the report of the Secretary of War on this subject. The Secretary of War examined the report of this commission, and says as follows:

"By a law passed the 18th day of August, 1855, a commission was directed to be appointed for the purpose of ascertaining the sum of money fairly due to the volunteers of Oregon and Washington Territories for their services in the Indian wars which threatened to lay waste those Territories. In compliance with this law, Captain Smith, of the first dragoons, Captain Rufus Ingalls, of the quartermaster's department, and La Fayette Grover, Esq., of Salem, Oregon, were appointed to examine the accounts and claims, and to make a report in conformity with the law, and upon the facts as they existed, so far, at least, as it was possible to ascertain them.

"These officers entered upon their duties on the 10th day of October, 1856, and seem to have labored with great assiduity and patience in discharge of them, until the 20th of October last, when they were brought to a close. I have examined this report very carefully, and conclude that, from the data they have adopted for their guide, as to the prices for stores and subsistence, and time of service rendered by the men, it is not probable a more just or accurate result could be attained than these gentlemen have arrived at. The amount ascertained to be due is a very large one, and Congress will have to make provision for its payment, if it is intended they shall be liquidated, of which I presume there can be no doubt."

Now, out of these claims adjudicated by this commission, we find due to Governor Douglass $7,000, and various other sums to various other individuals, who had rendered services and furnished supplies and transportation for the subsistence of the troops in the field—the whole amount reaching to between five and six million dollars. These expenses were all necessarily incurred, and the bill to pay Governor Douglass is right and just. But it is not more right and not more just than every other portion of these claims allowed by this commission. And why Governor Douglass should be singled out from the lot who have incurred expenses in defending the country against Indian hostilities, and the balance not mentioned, is a matter which I do not understand. But, be that as it may, I will let that matter rest with the committee who has charge of it. I have great confidence in that committee. I believe it will ultimately report in favor of paying all the expenses. But now is the proper time to do it—now is the time when this committee and this Congress should pass such a law as will provide for the payment of all the claims found due by that commission.

Now, sir, I think every gentleman here knows, (and I believe no gentleman will undertake to gainsay the fact,) that when the people of Oregon and Washington Territories were plunged into an Indian war, it was not by their own act, but by a combination of Indians, made so completely that they were able to commence hostilities at the extremes of each of those Territories on the same day. The progress of that war was so rapid, and the scenes so bloody and terrible, that for a short time it was a matter of uncertainty in the minds of the people of these Territories whether the Indians would not be able to destroy the entire settlements of the two Territories.

In order that the committee may understand more fully the facts of the case, I call attention to the report of the special agent sent out there by the Government to inquire into the circumstances of the war, and into the action of that commission while it was in session.

Mr. J. Ross Browne, the special agent, spent months in the country, visited many of the Indian tribes, talked with them, saw the farmers on their plantations and at their homes, without letting the people there know the purpose for which he was among them. He dropped in, at Vancouver, on the commissioners, while they were adjusting this very claim of Mr. Douglass, and he saw the manner in which they discharged their duty.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I beg to remind the gentleman that this is the last day for territorial business.

Mr. LANE. I am aware of that.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. This bill is cutting out other territorial business.

Mr. LANE. No, sir; I am the last man in the world to cut off any of the territorial business. This is the last bill but one or two upon the Calendar.

I will now read a portion of Mr. J. Ross Browne's report. He says:

"I will not undertake to follow up the history of the war to a later period. Its peculiar features have been represented officially on both sides, and its progress and termination are matters of public record.

"Upon a careful perusal of all the dispatches, I find nothing to sustain the charge of speculation. No person can visit the Territories of Oregon and Washington, converse with the people, see them on their farms and at their daily labors, and consider their true interests, without coming to the conclusion that such a charge is absurd and monstrous. What could they hope to gain? Few of them had anything to spare upon which to base a speculation. A farmer is well off who has his fields fenced in, a few head of oxen, and three or four cows. If he got treble price for his stock, the sale, upon an unlimited credit, would have been a sacrifice to him. His farm must go to ruin. The interests of the settlers of nearly every pursuit are nearly identical.

"Their future prospects depend chiefly upon the prosperity of the country, the increase of emigration, enhancement in the value of property, security of life, opening of new facilities for the transportation of their products. All this was diametrically opposed to a war. No compensation that Government could make would atone for the murder of families, the stoppage of labor everywhere, the loss of time, the suspension of emigration, and the numerous evils resulting from this disastrous conflict.

"The commissioners at Vancouver have faithfully and impartially performed their duty. Whatever sum they may have decided upon in estimating this war debt, I hold that amount to be justly due, and trust that Congress will at once provide for its extinguishment."

That is signed by J. Ross Browne, special agent of the Government, sent out there by the order of the President, at the instance of the Secretary of the Interior, to examine into the facts connected with the war; to ascertain the causes of the war; the manner of the conduct of the war; and the extent of the expenses incurred in it. And, after a careful and impartial examination of the whole matter, he came to the conclusion which I have just read. His whole report shows that the people of Oregon and Washington were driven into a bloody war, unavoidably on their part, that threatened to lay waste the whole country, and wipe out all the settlements. And I hazard nothing in saying that no portion of the American people has suffered so much in any Indian wars since our fathers landed on the American shores as did the people of those Territories in that war. Gentlemen will remember that, during the progress of the war, I was here attending to my duties; but during the last summer I had an opportunity of traveling over the whole southern portion of Oregon, and of examining in person the extent of the Indian depredations. I found that every house for fifty miles on a road through a well-settled country had been laid in ashes. The houses and barns had been burned, and every man, woman, and child, killed in the most cruel and barbarous manner, with the exception of one man, one woman, and one child.

At the time these depredations were committed by the Indians there were large numbers of wagons, loaded with the produce of Oregon and Washington, traveling over that road to seek a market in California. They were met by the Indians, and every man and every animal was killed and the wagons were burned. The mangled and mutilated remains of the men were taken up and buried, but the way side was strewn for fifty miles with the bones of the animals. In a conversation I had with the Indians, in the presence of their agent, in relation to it, their great war chief, John, told me that he had labored for months to bring about a combination of all the tribes, so that they might commence the war at the same time, and destroy the entire settlements in both Territories; and so complete was their plan of organization, so complete was the combination, that, as I said in the opening of my remarks, they commenced the war at Puget sound on the same day of the month that they commenced it in the southern portion of Oregon Territory, six hundred miles distant; and the chief told me that he had labored hard to bring about the combination, and had sent his sons and his son-in-law to the Indians, in different portions of the country, for the purpose of making the combination and securing that concert of action which would enable him to carry out his purpose. He commenced his depredations in Oregon and Washington, as you will find by these reports, a month before the general hostilities broke out. Finally, he became uneasy himself, after killing a great many of our people, about his capacity to bring about a general war. He began to think that the whites would not resent the outrages and murders which he had committed, and that he could not bring about a general war. He went to the agent, after killing eighteen of our people at one time, and two men and a little boy shortly afterwards, and said to him: "What kind of warriors have you? They have no hearts; they are like squaws; we have killed your people (mentioning the places where they had been murdered) and yet no notice is taken of it; there is no war."

Well, on the 9th of October the Indians passed along the road to which I have referred, and destroyed every particle of property for fifty miles. They then rushed into the settlements and burned hundreds of houses and barns, and killed hundreds of our cattle and many of our people. We are not here asking pay for these depredations. We have not asked a dollar of the Government for these spoliation. We only ask the Government to pay the troops who were forced into the service to defend the settlements against those outrages, and who, I may well say, suffered more in the field than any troops who have ever been engaged in any war in this country. My friend who represents the Territory of Washington will tell you that he fell in with a body of our troops in the mountains, east of the Columbia river, where they had been for weeks without tents, although the thermometer stood at twenty-five degrees below zero the greater part of the time. They had thrown themselves between the settlements and the hostile Indians, and had subsisted upon horse-flesh, without bread, coffee, or salt, for weeks.

Mr. MAYNARD. I would inquire of the gentleman what amount of money will probably be necessary to supply the demands under his amendment?

Mr. LANE. I want to say to my friend that the whole of the claim rendered, including compensation for service and expenses incurred, as settled by the commissioners under this law, amounts to between five and six million dollars. It is just; and I have no doubt Congress will pay it.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to inquire of the gentleman what amount per day was allowed for the volunteers who served in that war?

Mr. LANE. I will answer the gentleman with a great deal of pleasure, though I am not going on to discuss this matter in detail. The price allowed by these commissioners was two dollars for each day's service for each man, and two dollars in addition if he rode his own horse, making four dollars per day for a man and horse. I will say, further, that if the gentleman will look over the letter of Colonel McMullin, now Governor of the Territory of Washington, a gentleman who stood in this House and watched the Treasury as carefully as any man did—I say, if the gentleman will read that letter, he will find that Governor McMullin states that you cannot obtain the labor of a man short of $2 50 per day, and that even women get thirty dollars per month. And I will say that no man can obtain labor for any such price as these commissioners allowed to these volunteers.

I will say further, that no man can tell the sufferings which these volunteers underwent. Take, for instance, the conduct of the Polk county volunteers, who, in response to a requisition of the Governor of the Territory, marched to relieve Major Haller, who was surrounded by hostile Indians. The requisition reached them on Monday evening; and, on the next morning, one hundred and two men were in the saddle, and on the march to relieve this gallant officer and his little band of brave soldiers, who had been for some time surrounded by vastly superior numbers of blood-thirsty savages. Out of the one hundred and two Polk county men whom Major Armstrong marched to the relief of Major Haller, many never returned home, and many came back with fingers and toes frozen, maimed and crippled for life. Such was the conduct and suffering of other volunteer companies who responded to the call of our Governor. Thus did the people of Oregon rush to the rescue, not only of the settlements, but of the United States troops, surrounded by overwhelming numbers of hostile Indians. Not a dollar have they asked for spoliation; and the amount which the commissioners have allowed for the services of the volunteers, and the expenses incurred by them, will you refuse to pay? Major Armstrong has frequently informed me that his company was composed of farmers, most of whom had families, and were not only comfortable, but were worth, on an average, five thousand dollars. The gallant Captains Hembree and Bennett, and other officers, were among the number that never returned. Their families and friends were left to mourn their loss.

But, Mr. Chairman, to proceed with the horrors of this war. While in Oregon last summer, I took occasion to inquire of the chief, who was mainly instrumental in getting up this war, to learn the particulars of the fate of some of our people who disappeared in that war of 1855, and of whom we had been able to learn nothing. When I suggested to the agent in the council that I proposed to inquire the fate of Mrs. Wagner, Mrs. Haynes, and others, he was inclined to think that it would raise the bitter feelings of the Indians, but said that we could make the inquiry. I told him that I had passed through the country where these people had lived, and that their friends were very anxious to learn their fate. I inquired in relation to Mrs. Wagner, who was a well-educated and handsome woman from New York, who had lived long in the country, and spoke the Indian tongue fluently. She kept a public house by the roadside, and the good cheer which she always furnished made it a place where travelers delighted to stop. The Indians told me, that on the morning of the 9th of October they came in sight of the house, where they met some teamsters and packers, a portion of whom they murdered, destroying the wagons and cargoes, as well as the animals, while she was standing in the door. As soon as they had murdered the people outside, they came towards the house, which was strongly built of hewn logs, and had a heavy door, which fastened with cross bars. When she saw them running towards the house, she shut the door and dropped the bars, to prevent their breaking in. They came to the door, and ordered her to come out, and bring out her little girl. She said "no." Her husband was absent—and, by the way, he was the only man on that road who escaped. They said that if she did not come out they would shoot her. She declined; and, after some deliberation, they determined to set the house on fire. The house was directly enveloped in flames; and the chief, who watched her through a little window, told me that he saw her go to the glass and arrange her hair, then take a seat in the middle of the room, fold her little girl in her arms, and wait calmly until the roof fell in, and they perished in the flames together. And the statement was confirmed by the people who found their remains lying together in the middle of the house.

The account of the atrocities perpetrated upon Mrs. Haynes are so horrible that I will not relate them.

These volunteers, sir, are the men who defended us against the Indians, who had declared their intention of murdering every white man, woman, and child, in the Territory.

Mr. Chairman, the settlers of Oregon were encouraged to go there by the Government of the United States. Congress passed an act donating land to all who would go and settle in Oregon. Many responded to those inducements held out to go and settle there. They went at great sacrifice of comfort and at great hazard. Many of them fell by the hand of the savage before they reached that far-off country. But while the Government thus held out inducements to the people to go there and settle, they neglected to take the precaution to extinguish the Indian title to the lands. That, however, was not the fault of the settlers; it was the fault of the Government. The people continued to be harassed by the Indians from the very commencement of the settlement up to that great war.

These expenses, Mr. Chairman, were incurred in good faith, and were necessary expenses in the prosecution of that war. And I leave it to this committee to say whether they shall be paid at the same time this good man, Governor Douglass—the wealthiest man in that section of country—is being paid. I have said that Mr. Douglass is the wealthiest man in that section of the country; he is, and has been for years, connected with the Hudson's Bay Company, and was largely interested in having the property of that company lying in Washington Territory protected. In that Territory the company have stores, trading posts, herds, and flocks, that were protected by our troops as effectually as were those of any of the settlers of Washington or Oregon. He is to be paid, while the citizens are left unprotected for. Their claims stand upon the same footing, and ought to be cared for alike. I say, while you provide for paying him, will you neglect the people who so nobly turned out to save the settlements of Oregon and Washington from the tomahawk and scalping-knife of these savages?

If I had known that I would have had an opportunity to make a speech here to-day, I would have brought with me, to read to the House, the memorial of Mr. Besson. He happened to be in our Territory at the time the war broke out, and in the book which he published on his return to New York, he said many hard things of the people of Washington and Oregon. Since then, he has exercised his better judgment, and over his own signature he has memorialized Congress to pay the volunteers for service rendered and expense incurred in prosecuting the war against the Indians. None save General Wool, (and to him I do not care now to refer,) who at first were opposed to the war, but have recanted that opinion. They have changed front on the matter, and all of them would now be glad to see the people of Washington and Oregon reimbursed. It is just that they should be paid; and in their name, and in their behalf, I beg that while you are providing for the claim of Governor Douglass, you will also provide for paying the people of Oregon and Washington for services rendered and expenses incurred. They are as worthy as he, and their claims as just and meritorious as his. His is a good claim, but equally so is theirs.

There are many things to which I could refer, if I had time, to show why it was that the people were compelled to take up arms against their savage foe, to endure hardships, to incur expense, and to peril their lives. The southern portion of Oregon is rich in gold; and millions of gold that comes to the Atlantic States as the product of California, is the yield of our Oregon mines. Our people are law-abiding, industrious, generous, and brave, and ought not to be neglected. The settlements are sparse, consequently helpless, and to a great extent dependent upon the good will of Congress for many things which they cannot afford themselves. Millions and millions of dollars which comes here as California gold, is, in reality, gold from Oregon, for the benefit of our friends in this portion of our country. It is not, therefore, an unimportant or valueless Territory. It is also rich in soil, and the climate is as salubrious and as healthful as any in the world.

Now, sir, from the time the settlements were commenced in the Rogue River valley, the Indians began their depredations upon the settlers; and from that time to the end of the late war they did not cease their course of rapine and murder. I have a statement, compiled under direction of the Legislative Assembly of Oregon, which shows that, during the peace and before the breaking out of open war, the Indians had killed two hundred and forty-four whites. The people made no war, although there are some who will deny that it was full cause for war. Could more be borne by a Christian people?

I have noticed the action of Congress generally, and especially on appropriation bills, for many years, and find that whenever an appropriation bill is up, based upon estimates of the Departments, it is sure to pass. Congressional legislation is generally for the few. Nine tenths of the legislation here is not for the many; the great mass of our citizens are not cared for; but whenever there is a bill for the regular Army, Navy, water-works, or for a wealthy man, there is very little difficulty in getting it through; but when the mass of the people have a just claim upon the Government they are held back, and justice is long delayed from them. Let an appropriation bill come here with the sanction of the Committee of Ways and Means, and members unite and pass it at once. The favorite argument is, "do not stop the wheels of Government." "Put it through." Not so with the bills for paying claims of the people against the Government. Their claims, if unpaid, will not stop the wheels of Government, and they remain neglected. This character of legislation seems not for the benefit of those who need it, and to whom justice would seem to demand that it should be given; but is extended to the wealthy man. We here have for years turned our faces against legislating upon just claims, which ought to be considered and acted on. We have allowed them to go over year after year; and in this case, if the same course be pursued, when these claimants shall get their four dollars a day, it will not be worth, to them, as much as one dollar would have been at the time the service was rendered. Delay is to enable the speculator to reap his harvest—to prey upon the vitals of our suffering people.

These claims ought to be paid, and paid now. They have been allowed by a board of sworn commissioners. Many of these people who were comfortable and well to do before the war, have now, having lost their all, been compelled to go out to work by the day, while their wives and children have had to endure much hardship. It is for this House to say whether justice shall be meted out to them or be withheld; whether they shall or shall not be paid for services rendered and expenses incurred. Shall we provide for Governor Douglass, and leave the people of Oregon and Washington unprotected? Shall we send away the needy and provide for the wealthy? I do not object to Governor Douglass; I object to the principle. His claim ought to be paid. I want now, and for all time, to enter my protest against this sort of legislation. I want one provided for as well as the other. I will not make any rash promises; but if I had it in my power, there should be no action upon any appropriation bill until this matter was considered and allowed. If Congress think the amount too small, let them increase it; but I do not ask them to increase, and I trust that they will not reduce the claims, but take them as allowed by the commissioners, two of whom were Army officers, who are not more indulgent to the citizens than Army officers ought to be. They were just, and are honorable, high-toned men, and what ought to be paid they have allowed, and nothing more.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to say to my friend from Oregon that I did not vote to adjourn this House on the 7th of June next. Now, if members expect to get away on that day, they must set apart some time for the consideration and passage of the appropriation bills. If these bills are not passed, I will stand by my friend from Oregon to July or August next to transact the public business if the resolution for the adjournment be rescinded.

Mr. COBB. I wish just here to give notice that I intend, on Monday next, to move to rescind that resolution.

Mr. LANE. I only want to say to the committee that Congress ought not to adjourn until they have transacted the business for which they have been sent here. I will not lecture the committee on that; it is not my duty to do so; but it strikes me that Congress ought, before its adjournment, to transact the necessary business of the country. How is it any more necessary to pass appropriation bills than it is to do justice to that portion of your defenseless fellow-citizens, away out west of the Rocky Mountains, who are scattered over a distance of country so large, and so defenseless, that the savages can, at their pleasure, run in and tomahawk them? Ought their claim to be disregarded? Ought Congress to give them the cold shoulder? Ought gentlemen to say that the people of Oregon should not be paid for their services and expenditure in the defense of their settlements? If you continue to do so for a series of years, can you expect that the people of Oregon will always maintain their devotion to this Union? I know that the people of Oregon place themselves upon the Constitution, and are true to the interests of every portion of the Union. I have never seen the day—I shall never see it so long as I am an active man—when, if the northern portion of this country were invaded, I would not rush quickly to the rescue, and help to expel the enemy, although that enemy might be composed of the combined forces of the world. And so I would act if the southern portion of my country were invaded. My affections, as also the affections of the people of Oregon, rest upon the whole country, and will rest upon it for all time to come. And I ask you, ought you not, in your justice and wisdom, to take care of them as your people? Among the entire population of that Territory, we have none, save a very few, who are not American-born citizens—blood of your blood; and that few, Mr. Chairman, have already become American citizens. The country is settled up with citizens from every State in the Union—from Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, Georgia, and every other portion. The citizens of Oregon are emphatically your people, and entitled to your protection. Will not this committee take care of them, as this bill proposes to take care of my worthy friend Mr. Douglass? Will the committee say we will pay the claim of this rich man, the property of whose subjects was defended by our troops, whose cattle and herds were defended, whose stores were protected, and not pay the citizens of the Territory, who hazarded everything for the public defense?

I will now yield the remainder of my time to my friend from Washington Territory, to give a history of that portion of the war that passed under his immediate observation.

Mr. STEVENS, of Washington. It is not my intention, Mr. Chairman, at this time, to occupy more than ten minutes in discussing this bill. I will state first, in regard to it, that it proposes to reimburse Governor Douglass, of Vancouver Island, for supplies furnished by the Hudson's Bay Company, at Victoria, their post on that island. I am glad that such a bill has been brought before this committee to pay for supplies furnished by the people of a foreign jurisdiction to the suffering inhabitants of Oregon and Washington Territories, because I can, and every gentleman here can, refer to them as witnesses of the condition of our country at that time. I am glad to refer to the fact that Governor Douglass and myself are personal friends. We have often conferred in personal interviews and by letter, in relation to the measures requisite to defend the sparse population of that coast. And it is to me a heartfelt pleasure, on this floor, that I, as the Executive of one of those Territories, have his emphatic testimony that the course taken in that Territory was the only course which could have protected those settlements, or which could have prevented their depopulation. And I thank God that this bill now before the committee gives me the opportunity to refer to this judgment, coming, as it does, from an entirely disinterested source.

Mr. Chairman, I will not trouble the committee by going back to the old troubles, and trials, and conflicts of judgment that have taken place in regard to this war. It is sufficient for me that I stand here on the rock of truth, and I defy any man to gainsay my statements. I go not now to the reports which speak of outrages of whites upon the Indians, which speak of that war having been forced upon us by the bad conduct of our people, and which accuse us of getting up that war for the purpose of speculation. When I went to that country in 1853, Mr. Chairman, and traveled across the plains, I visited, on my way to Puget sound, nearly every Indian tribe, from the mouth of the Yellow Stone to the Pacific ocean. When I saw the relations existing between the white man and the Indians I was astonished.

I was astonished, for I was not a frontiersman. I had, up to that time, seen nothing of Indians, and but little of our frontier population. Still I had a prejudice that there was much of wrong in the relations between the two people; but I found that their relations were those of kindness and of good offices. And here, in proof of that, I will mention one fact. It is known to gentlemen that I was the Indian superintendent, as well as the Executive of Washington Territory. I had frequent complaints made by Indians that white men would not pay their debts; and the invariable course I pursued was simply to address a note to the settler, requesting him to settle the account, and it was done in every case brought to my notice, except in the case of a single person, who went off between two days, and who is not now in our Territory. We have got rid of him; and his acts, therefore, should not inure to the ill of the Territories of Washington or Oregon.

Mr. Chairman, the honorable gentleman from Oregon, whom I am proud to refer to here as my friend, has told you the simple facts in regard to the origin of that war. I was not in the settlements at the time, but was upon the head waters of the Missouri. The war came upon the people of the Territories like a thunderbolt. In our Territory, there were not at that time two hundred private arms; and we were only able to obtain arms for three or four hundred men by borrowing them from the Decatur, and from the arsenal at Vancouver. I refer to this fact as conclusive proof, showing how utterly unprepared the people were for these Indian outbreaks.

I do not intend, sir, to go into any detailed account of this Indian war; but I propose to mention one or two striking and significant facts. The honorable gentleman from Oregon has referred to me as a witness in relation to the arduous services of the volunteers of Oregon in the interior. When I heard of the breaking out of the war, I went over to the settlements from the head waters of the Missouri as fast as broken down animals, and the difficulties of the road, would enable me to make my way. Coming through, it became my duty, in regard to the Indian tribes that had not broken into war, to meet them, and as their father, being superintendent of Indian affairs, to endeavor to persuade them to continue peaceful. I met tribes numbering some seven thousand souls, and having nearly two thousand warriors, and those tribes maintained their fidelity throughout the war. From them I learned many of the causes of hostility, and of the unmitigated hostility of many of the Indian chiefs. When I met the Oregon volunteers on the field of the Walla-Walla, you may be sure that there was a most cordial and hearty welcome between us. Sir, to those volunteers, under Heaven, I probably owe my life; for I had but a party of twenty-five men with me, and I had made up my mind to attempt to make my way to the settlements. It was the action of these Oregon volunteers in protecting the settlements that opened the way for me.

What might have been my fate in fighting seven hundred Indians with a band of twenty-five men, increased to fifty as I got near where the hostile Indians were, I do not know. But I conceived that it was my duty to get to my post and do my best for the suffering people of whom I was the Executive. Sir, I learned nothing of these volunteers till I was making arrangements to fight the hostile Indians. The volunteers met the Indians, defeated them in a signal battle that lasted four days, and drove them across the Snake river, thus opening the way for my party. I was with them for ten days. They consisted of the very flower of the population of Oregon, men of family, men of substance, who had taken arms in their hands in order to protect the people of the two Territories; and there they were on the cold ground, without tents, living on horse-flesh, and without proper clothing, the thermometer ranging as low as 27° below zero, and never, for five days, getting above zero. That is what the volunteers of Oregon did, and I am thankful that I can say this for them as a witness in this high presence.

There are one or two other points to which I wish to allude briefly. During the whole of that war in the Territory of Washington not a friendly Indian, or an Indian prisoner, was ever maltreated in the camp of the volunteers of Washington. I say this in the presence of all men; and if any one will rise and gainsay it, I shall ask for the proof. For six months the people of Washington had to live in block-houses; and yet, so obedient were the people to law, so proud of their country, doing such high homage to its spirit of humanity and justice, that during all that time the life of the Indian was sacred in the camp of the volunteers. Why, sir, there were nearly five thousand disaffected Indians, during all this time, on the reservation lying along the waters of the sound, and not a man ever went there to do them harm. I rejoice in being able to give this testimony here in the presence of my countrymen, in regard to the conduct of the people of Washington. Do you wonder, sir, that it has caused to grow up in my heart the deepest and most devoted attachment to that people who have held me up in their sustaining arms in my efforts to advance the public service, and who have, by their conduct, illustrated its dignity and humanity, and thus given a lesson to the country and to the world?

Mr. Chairman, I have said all that I desire to say at this time. I trust that the same measure of justice which the committee propose to deal out to Governor Douglass will be dealt out to the people of the Territories of Washington and Oregon. The debt in all the cases rests upon the same foundation. Our people furnished supplies and animals and shipping, and rendered their own services on the faith of the Government. Every obligation is made payable when an appropriation is made by Congress.

It is germane to my purpose to give one or two facts in reply to the grave charges which have been made against our people of furnishing supplies at exorbitant prices. Now, sir, I have a friend living near Olympia who sold a horse, to be used for the volunteer service. When asked the price of his horse, he replied, that his horse was worth sixty dollars cash; "but," said he, "to be used for the defense of our people, you shall have the horse for forty-five dollars scrip." And the horse was purchased for forty-five dollars. And generally, for a considerable period on the sound, horses were furnished the territorial authorities, for scrip, twenty-five dollars cheaper than they were sold to the garrison at Fort Steilacoom for cash. At the close of this service these animals were sold at public sale, and brought from ten to fifty per cent. above the original cost. I recollect an instance of a mule captured, and which was rode by Captain Henniss at the battle of Grand Ronde. Captain Henniss rode the mule home to Olympia, a distance of nearly five hundred miles. He was desirous of owning the mule, and so he bid for it when it was put up at auction. But the animal was struck off at four hundred and seventy-five dollars to another man, and placed to the credit of the Government. Captain Henniss had been a captain of a company of volunteers for the whole war, a period of some ten months, and was not able to bid in his own riding mule.

And now, sir, in reference to property captured from the Indians; it was never taken and kept by private individuals. Stringent orders were given that all property taken from the Indians should be accounted for as public property, and the orders were strictly carried out; certainly in the Territory of Washington, and, I believe, in Oregon.

Mr. Chairman, you can, from facts of this kind, learn something of the character of the transactions of our people in this war. It was, most emphatically, a war for our protection, and for the existence of our settlements. And I am thankful that it is a war which has left so little sting behind between the Indians and the white settlers of the country. They have nearly assumed their old relations. It was not a work of supererogation. It was a work of toil and watchfulness, and of constant exertion to bring about the old relations between the whites and Indians, so that all animosity might die out, and a spirit of kindness and confidence prevail.

Mr. BRANCH. The committee have passed now some fifteen bills, and while I am willing that the remaining bills may be disposed of, if it can be done without debate, unless the question can be taken without further remark, I shall submit the motion that the committee rise.

Mr. FAULKNER. I desire to make one or two remarks before this bill is disposed of. The justice of this claim has not been controverted, nor has the propriety of its prompt payment been questioned by any gentleman who has so far addressed the committee. But the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LANE] threw out a remark which certainly ought to be noticed by some member of the Committee on Military Affairs. He would seem to place us in the position of having singled out a claim due to a British subject and to a man of wealth, while we are represented as forgetful of the demands of the humble volunteers of Oregon and Washington. This remark does great injustice to the committee.

Now, sir, in reference to the claims of the volunteers of Oregon and Washington: they are, it is true, at this time before the Committee on Military Affairs, and no report has yet been made on the subject. They involve a very large amount (in the aggregate some six million dollars,) for a service in which it appears that of something upwards of six thousand on the rolls, not more than three thousand five hundred were ever at any period in actual service—none of them in service a year, and many of them not more than a few months.

While we have had every disposition to do the fullest justice to these claimants, it was deemed proper by the Committee on Military Affairs that there should be a proper investigation into all the principles upon which the accounts were allowed by the board; and we have taken the necessary steps for securing to the subject that examination which its importance demands. That investigation has not yet been completed; and even if it had been finished, we might not have deemed it proper to press it upon the attention of the House in the two days which have been specially set apart for the transaction of mere territorial business.

Whether James Douglass, to whom this claim is due, is a man of wealth or not, was wholly unknown to the committee; nor should we have spent a thought upon it if we had known it. This claim was brought to the special attention of the committee, not by Mr. Douglass—with whom we are wholly unacquainted, and of whom the most of us never heard until the last few days—nor by the British Minister, but by the Delegate from the Territory of Washington himself. I inquired of him, when he first called my attention to it, and before I had looked into its merits, whether it was a claim which should be separated from the residue of the claims reported by the board?

I particularly interrogated him whether we should make it the subject of a special report, or postpone it until we reported upon the entire award. His reply was that this debt rested upon merits of a peculiar character; that it deserved the immediate attention of the committee. He then represented to me the character and history of the claim, the destitution of the people of that Territory, and the necessity of obtaining clothing and blankets at that inclement season, which he has described with such graphic force and eloquence; he stated that he, as Governor of Washington Territory, applied to the Hudson's Bay Company for clothing and blankets for the volunteers, to the amount of $7,000; but that they would not consent to furnish him with the supply needed until this man, James Douglass, Governor of that island, and a stranger to us, stepped in and guaranteed the payment of the debt, which, it seems, he has since been compelled to pay to the Hudson's Bay Company. We thus had the undisputed fact before us, that a stranger, and a British subject, at an opportune moment, stepped in for the relief of our destitute volunteers, and furnished them the means, at a most inclement season of the year, of clothing, which they could not otherwise procure. Could we hesitate, upon such a representation of the facts, and upon the subject being brought to our attention by the Delegate of that Territory, to report the bill, although we were not yet prepared to act upon the numerous and somewhat complicated questions that arise in the claim of the volunteers for relief? I think not, sir.

Upon this state of facts, then made out clearly to our satisfaction, we did not hesitate to report the bill for his relief. It was a claim about which there could be no controversy. Its justice was universally conceded. We have not as yet had time to examine into the great mass of these claims which have been referred to us, and to which the Delegates from Oregon and Washington have alluded, but design to give them a fair and impartial investigation at the earliest moment. I have not, so far, expressed any opinion myself in regard to the validity of these claims against the Government, except that which incidentally fell from me in the discussion on the Army bill, in which I expressed the opinion that the report of the board might be regarded as an award made under the authority and with the full sanction of the Government, and binding upon it. I incline to that opinion still; yet this is a point which I shall reserve for a more full examination of the cases, when taken up in the committee.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

LAND DISTRICTS FOR WASHINGTON.

The next bill on the Calendar was a bill (H. R. No. 177) to divide the Territory of Washington into four land districts.

The bill was read through.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Public Lands have reported an amendment to that bill, which is in the usual terms of such bills, and cuts down the number of additional land districts from four to two.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to add the following proviso:

Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the appointment of any such register or receiver until the lands have been surveyed, and are ready for sale.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and then the amendment, as amended, was adopted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do not pass.

The question was taken on Mr. WASHBURN'S motion, and it was agreed to; and the bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do not pass.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. There is one thing I would like to know, and that is how this committee can report to the House to disagree to a bill with an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair obeys the orders of the committee; and if they are not consistent, the fault is with them, and not with him.

TERRITORY OF NEVADA.

The Clerk next read the title of a bill (H. R. No. 567) to organize the Territory of Nevada.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is time now that we should rise. We certainly do not want any more Territories at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. There is one bill before that which the Clerk has omitted by mistake—a bill (H. R. No. 417) for the relief of Charles H. Mason.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I insist on my motion.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

The bill was read. It proposes to pay the claimant the difference between his salary as Secretary of the Territory and that of Governor, during the time he acted in the latter capacity.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. ENGLISH reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had, according to order, had the Union-generally under consideration, and particularly business appertaining to the Territories, and had directed him to report back several House bills, with specific recommendations as to each.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that the bills, in mass, be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. FAULKNER. I demand the previous question on them.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. As a large portion of the time of the House this morning was taken up on business not pertaining to the Territories, I propose that another day be set apart for territorial business.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Well, say two hours to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to any time at all.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. The proposition being to recommit, will not that bring up this business to-morrow morning?

The SPEAKER. It will.

Mr. BRANCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at five o'clock, p. m.) the House adjourned

IN SENATE.

Friday, May 14, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. LITTLETON F. MORGAN.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of War, communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the reports of the officers sent to Europe in 1855, to collect information in relation to military affairs, so far as they have not been communicated to the Senate; which, on motion of Mr. DAVIS, was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

He also laid before the Senate a report of the Secretary of the Navy, in answer to a resolution of the Senate, calling for information as to the establishment of a naval depot at Blythe Island, Georgia; which, on motion of Mr. IVERSON, was ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a letter of the Commissioner of Patents, communicating, agreeably to law, that portion of his annual report which relates to agriculture; which, on motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, was ordered to lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has received a communication from the President of the United States, in answer to a resolution adopted a few days ago. It is marked upon the envelope "Executive," but it is in answer to a legislative resolution, and it does not appear to be of an executive character. The Chair will lay it before the Senate.

The communication was read, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I transmit to the Senate a report dated 13th instant, with the accompanying papers, received from the Secretary of State, in answer to a resolution of the Senate of the 5th instant, requesting information in regard to measures which may have been adopted for the protection of American commerce in the ports of Mexico.

JAMES BUCHANAN.

WASHINGTON, May 13, 1858.

Mr. BENJAMIN. That report is made in answer to a resolution which I offered the other day. I have looked over it. I move that it lie on the table, and be printed. I think it will hardly be necessary to refer it to the Committee on Printing. It is but a very few pages, and I do not suppose there will be more than fifteen or twenty pages in print of the report. I ask, by unanimous consent, that it be ordered to be printed without reference.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That order may be made by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection. The communication will lie on the table, and be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. PEARCE presented a petition of Virginia Waldron, widow of the late Captain and Brevet Major Nathaniel S. Waldron, of the United States marine corps, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of John A. Smith, clerk of the circuit court of the District of Columbia, and clerk of the criminal court for the county of Washington, praying for the passage of an act for settling his accounts so that he may be charged only with the fees which he has received, or might, by due diligence, have received; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BRIGHT presented a petition of Charles Wilkes, praying for compensation for damages to his property on North Capitol street, in the city of Washington, by the alteration of the grade of that street; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BIGLER presented a petition of B. F. Ritzenhouse, a clerk in the office of the Register of the Treasury, praying for compensation for extra services; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KING presented a petition of Peter Cooper and other citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be laid out in farms or lots of limited size, for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BENJAMIN presented a petition of Mrs. Afia M. Roblas y Robaldo, widow of F. Robaldo, asking to be paid for certain property destroyed by American troops in Mexico, by order of their commanding officer, in the late war with Mexico; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That J. Rutherford Worster have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

SEARCHING AMERICAN VESSELS.

Mr. BRIGHT submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Resolved, That the President of the United States be requested, as far as is compatible with the public interest, to communicate to the Senate any information which may have been received concerning the recent search or seizure of American vessels by foreign armed cruisers in the Gulf of Mexico, or the adjacent seas; and also what measures, if any, have been taken in relation thereto.

POST OFFICE AGENT.

Mr. FOSTER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be instructed to inquire into the propriety and justice of an increase of the compensation of the special agent of the Post Office Department at large for the district of New York and the New England States.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill in relation to courts, and the holding of the terms thereof, in the several Territories of the United States, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KING, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a petition of Rachel Posey, widow of Micajah Posey, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred documents in support of the claim of Francis Hutinack to a pension, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BENJAMIN, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 258) concerning seamen, reported it with amendments.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Ann L. Rogers, wife and assignee of John A. Rogers, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 340) for the relief of Ann L. Rogers. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. FESSENDEN, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 106) for the relief of Elijah F. Smith, Gilman A. Perkins, and Charles F. Smith, reported it with an amendment. He also submitted a report on the subject, which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. SEWARD. With the leave of the Senator who reports it, I ask for the present consideration of that bill.

Mr. IVERSON. I object to that.

Mr. SEWARD. It will take no time.

Mr. IVERSON. I know that it is the universal promise that a bill will take no time, and therefore the Senate has waived the special order. I hope that no bill will be taken up out of order to-day, but that we shall go on with the Private Calendar regularly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the bill cannot be considered to-day.

COMMITTEE VACANCIES:

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office; Mr. FITZPATRICK to fill the vacancy in the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate; Mr. CLINGMAN to fill the vacancy in the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, occasioned by the decease of Hon. Josiah J. Evans; and Mr. SHIELDS, as a member of the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, during the absence of Hon. M. W. BATES.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, their Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution of the Senate:

A bill (No. 245) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Luther Jewett, late collector of the district of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine.

A resolution (No. 2) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California.

Also, that the House of Representatives had passed a bill (No. 426) for the relief of Monroe D. Downes; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

TERMS OF MINNESOTA SENATORS.

Mr. BAYARD. The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Minnesota in joint convention in favor of HENRY M. RICE representing that State in the Senate of the United States for the long term, have instructed me to report a resolution as to the mode of proceeding in this case, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Senate proceed to ascertain the classes in which the Senators from the State of Minnesota shall be inserted, in conformity with the resolution of the 14th of May, 1789, and as the Constitution requires.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

Mr. BAYARD. Now I ask that the order accompanying the resolution from the committee be read and considered.

The Secretary read it, as follows:

Ordered, That the Secretary put into the ballot-box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered 1, and the other shall be a blank. Each of the Senators of the State of Minnesota shall draw out one paper, and the Senator who shall draw the paper numbered 1, shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose term of service will expire on the 3d of March, 1859; that the Secretary shall then put into the ballot box two papers of equal size, one of which shall be numbered 2, and the other shall be numbered 3. The other Senator shall draw out one paper. If the paper drawn be numbered 2, the Senator shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1861; and if the paper drawn be numbered 3, the Senator shall be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire the 3d day of March, 1863.

Mr. BAYARD. I will merely state, on behalf of the committee, that the request made by the Legislature of Minnesota—it is but a request—is entirely inconsistent with the settled practice of the Government under the resolution of the Senate in 1789, when the Senate was first organized. The committee have seen no reason for changing that practice. The Senate had then to determine how they would classify Senators, and they have always adhered to the practice then adopted. The Constitution of the United States authorizes the election of Senators for six years, and provides for their classification. In the first instance, in organizing the Senate, they might do it in one of two modes—either by lot or by arbitrary determination. They decided that lot was the best mode to do it; and thus the term is determined on the first coming in of a Senator; and that has been the mode of proceeding since the first origin of the Government.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Does this resolution come from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to.

The drawing having taken place, in conformity with the order of the Senate, the result was thus announced:

The VICE PRESIDENT. Mr. SHIELDS, upon the first drawing, drew the paper No. 1. Consequently, by the terms of the resolution, his name will be inserted in the class of Senators whose term of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1859. Two other papers were then put in the box, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate, and Mr. RICE drew No. 3. His name will therefore be inserted in the class of Senators whose terms of service will expire on the 3d day of March, 1863.

HON. HENRY M. RICE.

Mr. RICE. I ask the consent of the Senate to permit me to introduce a resolution, notice of which I gave on the day before yesterday. It is calling for a committee to investigate certain charges urged by citizens of Iowa through one of the Senators from that State. I have left a blank for the committee, and I would esteem it as a favor if the honorable Senator from Iowa would fill that blank, in order that his constituents may have the entire benefit to be derived from the investigation.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That — be a committee to investigate the charges preferred by certain citizens of Iowa, settlers upon the Fort Crawford reserve, as to the conduct of HENRY M. RICE, special agent appointed by the Secretary of War to superintend the sale of that reserve. That said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GWIN. I move that the Chair fill the blank with five Senators.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move to amend the resolution so as to refer the matter to the Committee on Military Affairs, with all the power given in the resolution. I do not think it is necessary to appoint any special committee upon this subject. So far as the facts are concerned, the official papers are on the records of the Senate, disproving, by official evidence, the specific charge made against the Senator. I do not think it is a matter of sufficient consequence to give it the importance of a special committee. The members of the Military Committee, I believe, can examine the question if it be referred to them; and let them investigate it.

Mr. IVERSON. Mr. President—

Mr. TRUMBULL. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. IVERSON. I merely wish to make a suggestion myself, and then you can make yours. I desire that the amendment of my colleague shall not prevail, referring this question to the Military Committee. I have the concurrence of the chairman in the objection I make; and I state to the Senate that it is utterly impossible that the Committee on Military Affairs could give any attention to it. They have now a pile of papers on their table which have accumulated—

Mr. TOOMBS. That is a sufficient reason; I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I do not desire to interfere with the resolution, one way or another; but the suggestion I wished to make was that the Senator from Iowa is not present, and perhaps it had better lie over until he comes in, as he presented the papers. I will make no motion in regard to it; but it struck me, perhaps, that it would be better to have him here.

Mr. RICE. I was not aware that the Senator from Iowa was not in his seat, and I therefore ask that the resolution may lie over until he shall be present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the resolution will lie over informally, until the Senator from Iowa is in his seat.

ORDER OF BUSINESS—PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the special order, the Private Calendar.

Mr. YULEE. Will the Senator suspend that until twelve o'clock, and allow me to take up—

Mr. IVERSON. The special order is, I think, that the very moment the morning business is through, the Private Calendar comes up.

Mr. YULEE. Is that so understood?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Twelve o'clock is the hour for calling up the special order. On this occasion, the first special order will be the unfinished business of yesterday. It is at the head of the special orders.

Mr. YULEE. I will state why I interrupt the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is in order for the Senator from Georgia to move to take up the Private Calendar at this time.

Mr. IVERSON. I make that motion—to take up the Private Calendar. I think the Chair is in error about the special order being the unfinished business of yesterday. The special order is fixed by a resolution of the Senate, which declares that this day shall be devoted to the Private Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Was a resolution of that sort passed the other day in the absence of the Chair?

Mr. STUART. It passed early in the session, setting apart every Friday for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would suppose that such an order would be considered by the Senate as obligatory.

Mr. YULEE. If the Chair decides that, under the order of the Senate, the private bills are entitled now to be taken up, I shall not make the motion I was about to do; otherwise, I shall ask the Senate to occupy the half hour intervening between this and twelve o'clock by considering the bill amendatory of the laws regulating the Patent Office, which the Committee on Patents have instructed me to move for the early action of the Senate, and which the Commissioner of Patents informs me it is exceedingly important should receive the early action of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator pardon the Chair for a moment? The Chair understands the Senator from Georgia to move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the Private Calendar. If he insists on that motion, that is the question before the Senate.

Mr. IVERSON. I insist on that motion.

Mr. DOUGLAS. There was a bill to run the boundary line of Texas reported, with a verbal amendment, a few days ago, which I should like to have considered. The Senators from that State are very anxious to have it acted upon; and if it takes five minutes, I will abandon it, if the Senator will allow it to be taken up. It is a House bill.

Mr. IVERSON. I have already objected to the consideration of a bill proposed by my friend from Florida, and I cannot consent to yield to any one else. If I yield in one case, I must yield in another; and thus the whole day will be frittered away.

Mr. YULEE. I ask the Senator to allow me at least to say this: that I shall to-morrow morning ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 180) to amend the several acts now in force in relation to the Patent Office; and I invite the attention of Senators to the bill in advance.

Mr. BROWN. I want to give notice, too, that to-morrow, by a resolution of the Senate, has been given to the District of Columbia business, and if any portion of the day is to go to anything else, it must be done by positive order of the Senate, for I shall certainly insist on that resolution being carried out.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish to give notice to the Senator from Mississippi that a bill that I have reported, which I think is quite as important to the District of Columbia, is a special order on the Calendar and one of the earliest special orders, and if an opportunity is afforded, after the chairman shall have got through with his business, I shall move to take up that bill. It is a bill to regulate the issue of bank notes in the District.

Mr. STUART. As the attention of the Senate seems to be attracted to these subjects, at this time, I deem it a very propitious moment to say that I shall ask the Senate, on Tuesday next, to take up the bill making grants of land to the several States, for the purpose of aiding agricultural colleges.

Mr. HUNTER. To-morrow I shall press the appropriation bill. I give way for private bills to-day.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I desire to inquire whether the unfinished business is before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. At the hour of twelve o'clock the unfinished business of yesterday will be the general appropriation bill. That is in accordance with the general rule of the Senate. There has been a special order, though, passed by the Senate, making Friday, of every week, the day to take up the Private Calendar. As the Chair considers it, he would feel obliged to call up the Private Calendar after the morning business was through with on Friday.

Mr. HUNTER. If the Chair decides that the Private Calendar is in order, I shall not interfere; but if the appropriation bill is in order, I shall insist on it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time has not yet arrived for the other special order, even if it is proper.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to suggest that heretofore, when we have had Friday assigned for the taking up of the Private Calendar, the rule was always executed in this way; that the Private Calendar was taken up immediately after the reading of the Journal, and excluded all other business. I think we may as well decide whether we are going to take up the Private Calendar for the day; and we may as well decide it now, rather than delay it for other things.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It would not be in order, under the rules, to take up the Private Calendar until the petitions and reports of standing committees were called for.

Mr. SEWARD. The practice heretofore has always been to exclude all the morning business, and begin with the Private Calendar immediately after the reading of the Journal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that could not be done without a change of the rules, which are very explicit; but, if the Senate now take up the Private Calendar, the Chair will, at the hour of twelve o'clock, not call up any other business, unless a motion be made to postpone this.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I merely wish to express my gratification on finding out that there is something before the Senate of sufficient importance to induce the Senator from Virginia not to press an appropriation bill providing appropriations of the people's money for botanic gardens and green-houses. I am really gratified to find that there is something of importance enough to make one of those bills give way.

The motion of Mr. IVERSON was agreed to.

INDIANA MEETING OF FRIENDS.

The first private bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 46) to grant the right of preemption in certain lands to the Indiana Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends, the consideration of which was resumed by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. AILSON. I examined this bill, not very carefully, when it was before the Senate on a former occasion, and the construction I gave to it was that it sought to give to this society the privileges of locating three hundred and twenty acres of land, in addition to three hundred and twenty acres which had been provided for them in the Indian treaty. If I am right in that construction, it is a donation to be made by Congress apart from and independent of any treaty stipulation we may have had with those Indians at a former time. So far as there is any treaty stipulation by which the United States are bound to set apart any part of the public lands for such a society, however much I might regret that such a provision existed, I should nevertheless feel constrained to accede to it by my vote; but so far as it is proposed to give any additional donation to a religious society, I should be entirely against it. The public lands, in my judgment, are not intended in any way to further any religious or philanthropic or moral ends; they are intended for settlement and for population. For this reason, with a number of other objections that might be adduced, I should be utterly opposed to making any religious society land owners to any greater extent than might be necessary for a house of worship and a yard around it for the purpose of interment and other matters strictly pertinent to it; but I should be utterly opposed to making any religious society, Friends or otherwise, land owners generally in the country to an unlimited extent.

Mr. STUART. This bill has been before the Senate on several occasions, and I am very sorry that the Senator from Virginia has not understood its purport. It is not a proposition to give any land at all; it is simply a proposition to allow those who have the charge of this Indian school to enter, for the benefit of that school, at $1 25 an acre, this land—to pay $1 25 for it, which is the minimum price of the public lands.

I said, on a former occasion, that I was surprised at the opposition to this bill, and I say it again, with all respect to gentlemen. The treaty that was made with these Indians secured to this school, for their benefit, not for the benefit of this Society of Friends at all, but for the benefit of the Indians who wanted to educate their children at the school, a given number of acres of land. That they have got under the treaty, but they have no timber land. The land that they desire to select now is three hundred and twenty acres of timber land, so that fuel can be furnished to sustain their school. They propose to give $1 25 an acre for it. The bill prohibits them from alienating it; they cannot sell it for any purpose; and the bill is necessary, because these persons cannot get this land by preemption under the existing laws.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator at this point. He says the object is to get wood land. Of course it is for the use of this school, that is upon the original reservation. Well, sir, so far as I can see, they are authorized to enter land anywhere within very extensive boundaries. The language of the bill is, "in Kansas Territory, between the Missouri State line and a line west thereof, thirty miles distant and parallel thereto, as described in the treaty with the Shawnee Indians, dated the 10th day of May, in the year 1854."

Mr. STUART. I understand that; but I state what the object is, what the papers show, what the Indian bureau recommends, and what is wanted. I presume, that since the application was originally made, though I do not know the fact, the land may have been surveyed. But I state the facts, shown by the papers, that they desire to enter three hundred and twenty acres for the purpose of obtaining woodland to maintain their school, and that is all.

Now, sir, I have no objection, if any gentleman desires it, to amend the bill so that it shall describe three hundred and twenty acres of timber land most convenient to that school, for there is no other object in it in the world; but what I wish to impress on the Senate is, that this is no donation of land to begin with—that it is no donation of land to a religious society; in the next place, no grant of land, no right to purchase by a religious society. The Shawnee school was organized in the State of Ohio before these Indians were removed, and the teachers went with them from Ohio to Kansas. It is conceded by the Indian bureau, which has charge of this subject, that there is no other school among the Indians which has been of such signal benefit, and this will be seen from the very nature of the organization of this society. The Quakers, from the very characteristics of their mode of worship, are most likely to carry out legitimately the purpose of education and religion among the Indians. They do not interfere with politics in any form; They are a highly moral people; they do not drink themselves, and therefore do not set any bad examples to the Indians. Morality is an essential element among them. Their example is good; their persuasions are good; their teachings are good. The sum and substance of the matter is, that they have got a good prairie country for purposes of cultivation around their school, but they have not wood to build fires with, and they want it; that is all there is of it.

It cannot be necessary for me to say that I feel no personal interest in this question. Every one of the parties is an utter stranger to me; but the subject, in its morality, in its religious tendencies and benefits, does address itself to me in the most impressive form; and for these reasons I have a deep solicitude that this bill shall pass. As I said to the honorable Senator from Arkansas, if he desires to limit it in its application, if he supposes there is any speculation in it, I have not the slightest objection to an amendment which shall effect his entire wishes on that point.

Mr. POLK. I wish to ask the Senator from Michigan whether this school is in actual operation?

Mr. STUART. Certainly it is; and I can assure the honorable Senator, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs assured me, that it is one of the best schools that has ever been among the Indians.

Mr. POLK. I asked the question, because in 1853 I was at that place, and it was not in operation then.

Mr. STUART. I have not been there. I know only what the Indian bureau tells me.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I submit the motion that this bill and report be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, that they may investigate the matter, and report the facts to the Senate. The proposition is to grant three hundred and twenty acres in aid of a reservation made in an Indian treaty. A suggestion is now made that, as late as 1853, no such school was in operation in that country. If I recollect aright—I will not be positive—the report in this case speaks of this society, and its operations in teaching these Indians, as having been in existence for a number of years. I move to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs, so that they may inquire and ascertain as to where the three hundred and twenty acres of reservation already made by the Indian treaty are to be found. If I am not mistaken, I judge from the characteristics and the terms of this bill that that reservation has never been located at all. If that be so, and in fact I shall assert it unless contradicted—

Mr. STUART. What reservation?

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The original reservation, in aid of which the present grant is to be made, has never yet been marked out.

Mr. STUART. The Senator is mistaken. The reservation made by the treaty has been marked out. This is a different thing from that. They have got the reservation which was made by the treaty, and are occupying it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I will read the second section of the Senator's own bill. It is:

"That the said Yearly Meeting, by such committee or agent as it may appoint, is hereby authorized to designate to the proper land officer in Kansas Territory, or to the Commissioner of the General Land Office at Washington, the tract of three hundred and twenty acres set apart by the treaty aforesaid, for the Friends' Shawnee Labor School or Mission, and thereupon the same shall not be offered to sale."

From that language it would seem that the three hundred and twenty acres reserved by the treaty are yet to be designated. The bill does not require that the grant we are now to make shall be located contiguous to the original reservation. Although the plea is that the object is to get wood to support the school establishment this society have put or are to put up, as the case may be, they are not even compelled to have it where the wood can be made serviceable or useful. That, I submit to the Senate, would show at least that the bill is very loose in regard to the selection of the land. It goes on:

"But, upon payment to the United States of $1 25 per acre, a patent shall issue to such trustee or trustees as the said Yearly Meeting may nominate."

There is a patent to be issued, and when it shall have issued, I imagine we are done with it. Although another provision here says that the land shall never be alienated except by the consent of Congress, they will never come before Congress afterwards to obtain any such consent, but the patent having been issued to the trustee or trustees of this society, it will be conclusive; and any purchaser afterwards purchasing that patent, in the language of all other patents, would be considered as having an indisputable title. There would be nothing requiring him to come back to show the manner in which the entry was made, or the special authority of law by which that entry was obtained, or whether the Yearly Meeting had complied with all the terms of this bill. The patent, I take it, carries the title with it.

To say nothing of the general impolicy of setting apart lands for particular religious societies, I suggest to the Senate that as far as I can see from the report and bill, this yearly society is merely a body of men casually collected together, whose association may be dissolved at any moment; they are not an incorporated company, and we are not granting land to any incorporated persons. We are to make this grant to the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends, and with the same propriety we might make a grant to any other fixed church in the United States that is not incorporated. Feuds may arise within the church; it may break up; and in the end this appropriation—and we do not know how soon it may take place—may fall altogether into the hands of the trustees themselves, and may be disposed of for their benefit, notwithstanding the provisions of this bill. The third section provides:

“That the lands granted by this act, as well in the first as the second section thereof, shall not be sold or otherwise alienated by the said Yearly Meeting or its trustee or trustees, without the previous consent of Congress thereto.”

The “previous consent of Congress” can always be had upon the very slightest showing. Let them come forward and say they have found it necessary, having exhausted the wood upon the land for the purposes for which the appropriation of this land was originally made, to ask Congress to permit them to sell it, so that they may locate other lands, it will be permitted at once; and thus you give away the land as well as the wood, and the object will be disregarded.

I do not think it is necessary to make any remarks to show the impolicy of such grants to religious societies; for they are without number throughout the United States, and there is also a serious objection to granting to a body of men who are not even incorporated. If six or seven of us were to go out here, and ask you to make a grant to us in trust for a specific object, we should present ourselves upon just as good ground, and with just as much merit, in point of fact, as these parties; for you have no more reason to believe them than any other six or seven honorable men. You grant to no particular person; you grant nowhere where any guard will exist over it. You reserve no right, by the terms of the bill, to rescind the grants if the objects are not carried out. In the beginning, in making a reservation of three hundred and twenty acres for this object, in their treaty with the United States, the Indians admitted that they had reserved enough for the purpose. I suggest that the terms of the treaty alone should govern us. But if the Committee on Indian Affairs, on examination, shall find that the original grant was insufficient, and that an additional grant can be properly guarded, that committee can report it here, provided they concur in the policy. At any rate they will report adversely, if not favorably. I know nothing of their ideas in regard to the particular matter; but when they report, the subject can come up for our consideration after the Indian Committee consider the treaty that affects it, as well as the report of the Committee on Public Lands. I shall say no more myself in reference to this subject.

Mr. GREEN. I think it would be well to refer this bill back for a little further scrutiny, for in its present shape I consider it very objectionable. In the first place it makes a grant to a religious society, and it seems that it is not incorporated, a society which is foreign to the new State of Kansas—the Indiana Yearly Meeting of the Society of Friends. I think it would be a very bad precedent to grant land to a society in one State to be held in another; but independent of that it is very bad policy to invade State rights. Many of the States have stringent laws.

Mr. HARLAN. I wish to ask the Senator if he does not know that the Yearly Meeting of Friends of the State of Indiana exists throughout all the northwestern States, not only Indiana, but the States of Missouri, Iowa, and also Kansas? Indiana happens to be the seat of their Assembly; the representatives of their society come in from all those States, so that this territory is embraced really within the limits of their organization.

Mr. GREEN. Its general ramification throughout the whole northwestern territory makes it the more objectionable. Many of the States have a settled doctrine by law, and some by constitutional provision, prohibiting religious societies from holding real estate, except for certain specified purposes. Now, if Congress undertakes to make grants before the sovereignty of Kansas attaches, it will be setting up an action on the part of the Federal Government that will invade the doctrine of State rights when that State shall have been completely organized.

But there is still a more objectionable feature than that in it. It is a system of grants. We all know the topography of that country and the general appearance of the face of the country; and we know that timber there is exceedingly scarce compared to the broad extensive prairies, and that the settlements will require forty acres of timber land to four hundred acres of prairie land, in order to settle the country up, and that that is enough. The settlers who go on the land thus apportion it out; they divide it up, and stake out their claims. This, however, is to give three hundred and twenty acres of timber land for three hundred and twenty acres of other land, which is an unjust and an unfair provision, and which will retard the settlement of the rest of the Territory.

But, more than that, when these Indian reservations were marked off, the unsettled territory remaining was immediately dotted all over, and is at this time staked all over with claims. It has been the common practice of this Government to grant retrospective preemption right; and while we have now a prospective preemption law, the common custom and practice of the neighborhood has been that the honest location of squatters is equal to the formal right of preemptions. This overrides all that class of persons, and will take away claims of at least half a dozen, giving an option to this society to take the land when and where they please within the limit prescribed.

Mr. COLLAMER. I ask whether in Minnesota they had not a preemption right before the lands were surveyed?

Mr. GREEN. I believe they have, in some cases. I know that in many cases where settlers have gone on public lands before the lands were surveyed, a retrospective preemption law has been passed for their relief. In other cases under my eye, before the public land was surveyed and brought into market, it has been settled all over it, and by common consent and general understanding, without the coercive power of law, they staked off their claims harmoniously, peaceably, and quietly; and when the land was surveyed, it was satisfactorily arranged, if one lost a little land here, it was made up there, by general understanding. That system prevails in the Shawnee reservation in Kansas. This bill proposes to oust these settlers, and destroy squatter sovereignty. I do not think that is right. It takes away their property. It violates a principle this Government has sanctioned, and I think it would be unjust. Besides, if these parties need a little timber land, forty acres is plenty. The Senator from Michigan says we do not give it to them; we only give them a preemption. He knows that every acre of that timber land, this day, will sell for ten dollars. Perhaps he will reply, “why, those who are upon it will only enter it at $1 25.” Certainly that is so; but by dividing it up into small parcels, and putting a large quantity of prairie with it, for a small quantity of timber will feed a large proportion of prairie, and sustain it and keep it up, you sell the prairie land, which, if you exhaust the timber, you never can sell. It is, therefore, equivalent to giving them ten dollars an acre. Much of it, in this case, would sell for twenty-five dollars an acre.

I am not disposed to see any harsh treatment instituted toward this society of Friends; but I am not willing to set an example which will destroy the rights of individuals. The common custom and practice of the Government, sanctioned by law in many cases, has given individuals a right to settle on this land; I believe it is now being surveyed; and, in the absence of this bill, their titles will be completed in a very short space of time; but by the passage of this bill you override all these squatters; you drive them from three hundred and twenty acres of timber land, and in the act of driving them from three hundred and twenty acres of timber land you may drive them from three thousand acres of prairie land, leaving it a barren waste forever. I hope it will be restricted to forty acres, if the bill is to pass at all; but I think the three hundred and twenty acres they already have is enough for the purpose for which this institution was gotten up.

Mr. IVERSON. It must be evident to the Senate that if so much time is lost on little bills like this, it is utterly useless to take up the Private Calendar, because it is an absolute denial of the consideration of every other case. This case has already occupied some three or four days of the consideration of the Senate; I do not mean whole days, but it has been up three or four times, and occupied one or two hours on each occasion. Now, I suppose it is to occupy two or three hours. More time has been occupied in debating this bill than every other bill which has been considered on the Private Calendar at this session; and yet the parties interested are not willing to take a vote. It has cost the Government already, in debating this bill, ten times the value of the land involved.

Several Senators. Let us have a vote.

Mr. IVERSON. I am willing to vote. Otherwise I shall move to lay the bill on the table. I think it is unfair to the rest of the private claimants now before the Senate, that so much time should be occupied in debating a subject which really is not worth anything at all. If the friends of the measure will give way and let the vote be taken, I have no objection. Otherwise I shall move to lay the bill on the table to test the sense of the Senate whether we shall go on with it or not.

Mr. CLAY. I hope the Senator will not make that motion until I make a remark or two. I wish to recall to the attention of the Senate some facts which have not been presented.

Mr. IVERSON. Then I shall have to yield to other gentlemen.

Mr. MASON. The discussion is not to be stopped.

Mr. IVERSON. I move to lay the bill on the table.

Mr. STUART. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion. This discussion has not been by the friends of this bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clay, Cleggman, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Henderson, Houston, Iverson, Kennedy, Mason, Polk, Sebastian, Silldell, and Yulee—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, King, Mallory, Pugh, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Sumner, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—27.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. STUART. I suppose the motion made by the Senator from Arkansas is in order; and therefore I only wish to suggest that this bill may be made definite under the report by stating the position of the land desired to be entered. The report states it in these words:

“One hundred and twenty acres west of the farm, and two hundred acres on the south side of the Kansas river.”

That is all the land mentioned in the report. I suppose, however, the question will be first on the motion to refer to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. POLK. I ask the Senator if there is any limit in the southern extremity within which the lands may be located, short of the southernmost limit of the Shawnee land?

Mr. STUART. I will state that I am willing this matter should be limited. I take it, human language can limit it; and I am willing to say the land shall be located within a given distance. I am willing to say it shall be within half a mile of the river—any language that is necessary. I believe the language here will answer.

Mr. PUGH. At the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi, the other day, I wrote an amendment which I intended to offer. It is, in the fourteenth line of the first section, to strike out all after the word "upon" to the end of the sentence, and insert:

Such of the lands covered by timber as are most contiguous to the present mission tract, and shall remain after the Indians shall have made their selections, as provided by the treaty aforesaid.

I presume this will cover the point: I move this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) The first question is on referring this subject to the Committee on Indian Affairs. The amendment will be in order after that is disposed of.

Mr. CLAY. I simply rise to call the attention of the Senate to some facts which have not been presented. Besides the grant of lands hitherto made to this religious association, I understand that other grants within this reservation, some of larger and some of lesser quantities, have been made to other religious denominations. I want to show the Senate how much has already been granted within the Territory of Kansas for the purpose of Indian schools, ostensibly, under the treaty. In the second article of the treaty of the 10th of May, 1854, with the Shawnees, I find these words:

"Of the lands lying east of the parallel line aforesaid, there shall first be set apart to the missionary society of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, to include the improvements of the Indian Manual Labor School, three sections of land; to the Friends' Shawnee Labor School, including the improvements there, three hundred and twenty acres of land; and to the American Baptist Missionary Union, to include the improvements where the superintendent of their school now resides, one hundred and sixty acres of land; also five acres of land to the Shawnee Methodist Church, including the meeting-house and grave-yard; and two acres of land to the Shawnee Baptist Church, including the meeting-house and grave-yard. All the land selected, as herein provided, west of said parallel line, and that set apart to the respective societies for schools, and to the churches before named, shall be considered as part of the two hundred thousand acres reserved by the Shawnees."

Now, it appears that within the lands reserved for this tribe of Indians alone in the Territory of Kansas, we have already granted to different religious denominations upwards of twenty-four thousand acres; and it is proposed now to give, in addition, three hundred and twenty acres. As objected by the Senator from Arkansas, I regard this as nothing more than a grant to these individuals. It does not appear that they are a corporation. There is no guarantee that it will be retained in perpetuity for the benefit of these Indians. There is no security to the Government that if they fail to apply these lands for the purpose ostensibly in view—the education of the Indians—they will revert to the Government. There is no Senator, I think, who can seriously maintain, or who can believe, that the Government ever will recover these lands. We give them upon mere trust that they will be exerted for the improvement of the Indians, and with a certainty that, in the course of time, they may be sold, and inure to the benefit of individuals.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I should like to ask the Senator a question: I have understood from the debate that there was nothing given, but that the bill simply allowed certain individuals to enter a tract of land and pay for it.

Mr. CLAY. That is true; and I suppose the Senator would say it was no gift if they were allowed to enter it at a cent an acre.

Mr. FESSENDEN. They are to enter at the proper price—$1 25.

Mr. CLAY. It is $1 25; and yet I am assured that these lands will command from twenty to thirty dollars an acre. The Senators from Missouri, who are acquainted with the value of the lands, and especially the Senator on my right, [Mr. GREEN,] who lives near the Territory of Kansas, will substantiate the assertion that it does never happen—

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the honorable Senator a question, based on the remark of the honorable Senator from Missouri. I see no objection to this bill except the one raised by the honorable Senator from Missouri, that it may disturb the rights of settlers; and although they may have no legal rights, properly speaking, their rights are as much respected in these matters as if they were legal. If they are settlers, as he states, or what are called squatters, and you give this society the right to locate lands over them, you would do them an injustice.

Mr. STUART. The Senator will allow me a moment. I have no objection to a restriction being put in the bill to guard against that. The fact is that this bill covers land that this school had inclosed and occupied before the treaty was made. It was so described in the report; but there is no objection to its being limited so as to preserve the rights of any adverse occupants.

Mr. SHIELDS. I would like to see such a provision inserted, and then I think there can be no reasonable objection to the bill.

Mr. CLAY. I have little else to say. I do not suppose any one expects the Indians to remain permanently on this reservation, or within the limits of the State of Kansas, if it should ever become a State. We all know that this people do not live in the midst of civilization. We all know that they recede before the approach of the white man as does the horizon. We all know that their destiny, according to our experience, is ultimate and speedy destruction. In the course of a very few years this people will all disappear from the limits of the United States.

What, then, is to be done with these lands? They belong to a corporation, if you choose; but to a mere association of individuals, as I say. Who is to enjoy the benefit? It will ultimately redound entirely to the individual interest of the society or the persons who are associated in this enterprise.

As to its achieving any great amount of good to the Indians, I know from observation—I know from the experience among the Cherokees in my own State, that it is all an idle illusion; it amounts to nothing whatever. Within forty miles of the town where I have been raised and reside, such an establishment had a school among the Cherokees; it continued there from my earliest recollection until within the last fifteen or twenty years. During all this period of time a good many Indians were assembled about the mission; but they were occupied mainly in laboring for the association; they were occupied in the early cultivation of the fields and in waiting upon the families assembled at this mission. They would remain there a few years, go off, and resume their wild uncivilized habits; and I do not know a dozen of them who have ever retained the habits of civilization, and who pursue agriculture or any of the mechanic arts for a living at this time. The society ultimately broke up; the Indians were all removed west; and I do not know what became of the mission, but the land, I know, has passed into the hands of other individuals or private persons, who are now on it, and hold it by some kind of title. To whom the benefit of the moneys derived from the sale of the lands went I cannot say, but I believe it went to the persons who formed the association. I have no faith in any of these enterprises. They have been tried time and again, among the Cherokees and Choctaws within the limits of my own State; and I do not think they have achieved any good results whatever. They have generally been schemes of private pecuniary speculation rather than of religious and benevolent purposes. Inasmuch as this bill proposes to give them now three hundred and twenty acres of woodland, worth at the lowest, I suppose, ten dollars an acre, and perhaps thirty dollars, I am unwilling to vote for it.

Mr. SIMMONS. I did not understand the Senator exactly as to how many acres there were in the first grant he read.

Mr. CLAY. I stated that the aggregate of the whole grant was upwards of two thousand four hundred acres.

Mr. SIMMONS. How much was there in the first grant to the Methodist Episcopal Church South?

Mr. CLAY. The first grant was three sections of land.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is one thousand nine hundred and twenty acres?

Mr. CLAY. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That went South; and I think this might go to these Quakers.

Mr. CLAY. The Senator calls attention to the fact that one thousand nine hundred and twenty acres have been granted to the Methodist Episcopal Church South by the treaty with the Indians, and the inference is, that this northern association ought to have an equivalent; and thus it is supposed that, in order to equalize these several religious associations, we ought to give that quantity to each.

Mr. SIMMONS. I had no such purpose at all. I thought there was a mistake in the quantity; I thought it was quarter sections when he read the treaty; but it happened to be sections.

Mr. HARLAN. I think the Senator from Alabama is in error on one point. I understood him to suggest, that in all probability, this land would ultimately revert to private individuals. This question came up in committee; and, in order to guard against that contingency, a third section was added to the bill, in these words:

"That the lands granted by this act, as well in the first as the second section thereof, shall not be sold or otherwise alienated by the said Yearly Meeting, or its trustee or trustees, without the previous consent of Congress thereto."

So that there is an impossibility, it seems to me, of a reversion of this land to private individuals, unless Congress shall hereafter pass a law conferring that privilege on individuals. While up, I will remark that has been the policy of the General Government to encourage the labors of religious societies among the Indians in all the Territories. It has been so in my State. There are very valuable lands now held by the Roman Catholic Church near Council Bluffs, and some of them are embraced at present within the corporate limits of the city, that were acquired by previous occupancy on their part as missionaries among the Indians. They hold lands all over the western States by virtue of this prior occupancy. The same is true, too, I think, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, as well as the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and of the Baptist Church, and the Presbyterian Church. Whatever the Senator from Alabama may suppose in relation to the ultimate destiny of the Indians, these religious people believe that they may be reclaimed from their savage habits and may be converted to Christianity; and in doing this they doubtless teach them the arts of civilization. I have no doubt that if the Senator was as familiar with the results of the labors of these organizations as he is with many subjects of State and national policy, he would have a different opinion from that which he has expressed. There are many thousands of Indians who have been converted to habits of civilization, and who are embraced within the pale, so to speak, of the different churches. They are church members, communicants in all the religious churches, I believe, that are organized in this country; at least they are members of all the leading societies, embracing the Catholics, the Presbyterians, the Baptists, the different orders of Methodists, and the Friends. In permitting this society of Friends to enter this land to be held for the use of the Indians, and not to be perverted to any other use without the consent of Congress, I think we wrong nobody; and as Congress appropriates money year after year, to aid these missionaries, directly from the Treasury, it seems to me there can be no well-grounded objection to giving them a right to enter the land, at least until this policy of the General Government is changed.

The motion to refer the bill to the Committee on Indian Affairs was not agreed to.

Mr. GREEN. I propose an amendment to strike out three hundred and twenty acres in the first section, and insert eighty acres. I think that is ample, according to the statement they themselves make; and then I shall move another amendment afterwards.

Mr. PUGH. I offered an amendment before that, but I understood it was ruled out of order, because there was a motion pending to refer the bill. I hope we shall have a vote. I think the Senate understand the bill without further debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FITZPATRICK.) The Chair will remark to the Senator from Ohio that, at the time he offered his amendment, it was not in order. Before he attempted to renew it, the amendment of the Senator from Missouri was offered.

Mr. GREEN. Mine is prior to his in the regular order of the bill, anyhow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Missouri to strike out "three hundred and twenty," and insert "eighty."

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 19, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Brown, Clay, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Henderson, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Sebastian, Sliedell, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—19.

 NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Benjamin, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Jones, King, Pugh, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, and Wade—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. PUGH. Now I offer my amendment, which I before sent to the Secretary's desk; with an addition, suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

The Secretary read the amendment; which is in section one, lines fourteen to sixteen inclusive, to strike out the words "any of the said lands which will belong to the United States after the Indians shall have made their selections, as provided by the said treaty," and insert:

Such of the said lands covered by timber as are most contiguous to the present mission tract, and which shall remain after the Indians shall have made their selections, as provided by said treaty aforesaid, and not upon any lands in the actual occupation of bona fide settlers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. MASON. The effect of this bill, whatever its object may be, certainly will be to place a religious society, whether incorporated or not I do not know, in the place of citizens of the country, in reference to the public lands, to allow them to be held in mortmain for some religious or eleemosynary purpose. I cannot conceive a more unfortunate policy to be adopted in any country, and one that I should be reluctant if it could ever be supposed my humble name was connected with on the records of legislation. I ask, therefore, that the vote be taken on the passage of the bill by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 29, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Jones, King, Pearce, Pugh, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Brown, Clay, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Henderson, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Mallory, Mason, Polk, Sebastian, Sliedell, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—17.

So the bill was passed.

JANE SMITH.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 87) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Jane Smith, of the county of Clermont, State of Ohio.

Mr. POLK. I will state to the Senate that the bill No. 87, and the next bill, No. 88, for the relief of Lucinda Robinson, were reported by me from the Committee on Claims; but I have learned this morning that it is the desire of the parties that those bills should be passed over. I therefore move to postpone this bill until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LUCINDA ROBINSON.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 88) for the relief of Lucinda Robinson, of the county of Orleans, State of Vermont.

Mr. POLK. I make the same motion in regard to that bill.

The bill was passed over.

GEORGE ASHLEY.

The bill (S. No. 89) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of George Ashley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Holgate, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for the payment to George Ashley, administrator de bonis non of Samuel Holgate, deceased, of $996 01, being in full for certain planks and boards and other property of Samuel Holgate, seized by Commodore McDonough, on Lake Champlain, in the year 1814.

Mr. PUGH. I understand that that gentleman's claim appears to be this: He was detected in the act of supplying the enemy, and his property was seized and taken into a district of the United States, libeled in admiralty, and condemned; but the point he makes is, that it was condemned in the wrong district. That is the whole of it. It is admitted that if it had been taken into the district of Vermont, instead of the district of New York—

Mr. COLLAMER. He does not admit that it has been condemned.

Mr. PUGH. It is admitted by the court that if it had been taken into the district on the other side of the lake, it would have been rightly condemned, and he would have had no claim; but, inasmuch as it was taken into the wrong district, he has a claim against us. I do not think it is a claim which appeals to the favorable consideration of Congress, and I think we had better defeat the bill.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Ohio is somewhat mistaken when he asserts in regard to this party, that he admits if the case had been decided in the proper court, it would have been properly decided. The petitioner admits no such thing; nor is there any evidence whatever as reported in the decision of the Court of Claims that this man was detected in trading with the enemy. His vessel, loaded with timber, was seized upon the lake passing from one port of the United States to another, under a contract for the delivery of timber in the United States. It was seized while passing from Milton, in Vermont, to Chazy, in New York.

Mr. COLLAMER. It was a raft of timber that was seized.

Mr. IVERSON. Somebody had entered into an engagement or a contract with him to supply timber in particular places in the United States. He was in the discharge of that contract, going from one port of the United States to another, when his raft was seized upon the lake. He was not trading with the enemy, nor was he within twelve or fifteen miles, as I understand, of any port in Canada belonging to the jurisdiction of Great Britain. The property was seized and carried into New York, and there it was libeled and finally condemned as proper prize, upon the allegation that it was engaged in an illicit intercourse and trade with the enemy, but that court had no jurisdiction. If the Senator from Ohio will look to the statute on the subject, he will be satisfied that the court in New York had no jurisdiction, because the jurisdiction is conferred only on the court in the district where the crime is perpetrated. The proper court was the one in Vermont, not in New York. The court in New York, however, assumed jurisdiction without having any conferred upon it by the law, and the party was not there to defend his case. The property was brought up and libeled in a court that had no jurisdiction, and of course the whole proceedings were null and void, and did not bind this party or affect the question at all. That is the case, as stated in the report.

The court had no jurisdiction, and having no jurisdiction, of course the property was illegally and improperly condemned. It was, however, sold, and purchased by an agent of the Government, and went into Government use. The Government used the timber to make fortifications at Plattsburg. The commanding officer of the American forces desired it to be used, and did use it for the benefit of the United States; and now the question is, whether this party suffered damage to the amount of the value of that timber. So far as the evidence is disclosed on the face of these proceedings, there was no testimony whatever that he was engaged in an illicit trade, but it was carried into a court having no jurisdiction of the case, there an ex parte proceeding was carried on, and the property was condemned and sold. All he asks is, that the amount of money for which the property sold shall be refunded to him. The Court of Claims have decided in his favor on an impartial hearing of the case, and the Committee on Claims, after a careful examination, concur that the money ought to be refunded. They report no interest, but the simple payment of the value of the property taken by the United States, and used by the Government in its operations at Plattsburg; and in the opinion of the Committee on Claims, and the Court of Claims, illegally and improperly condemned. Under these circumstances, it seems to be a fair claim. I feel no personal interest in any of these matters; but this is one of those cases that have undergone the investigation of the Court of Claims; and I wish to make one statement to the Senate in relation to the cases which have been brought before that court. What credit is to be given, what weight is to be given to the decision of that court? Here is a case that has been sent to the Court of Claims under the law which establishes that tribunal. They have gone into an examination of the facts and the law of the case, and they have come to the conclusion that this party is entitled to relief, and have reported a bill in his favor. Is no credit, no faith, no weight, to be given to their report? Is every case they decide to be taken up and reversed? It is a question the Senate must decide, as to how far the decisions of the Court of Claims are to be authority to guide and control their action.

I have considered the subject to some extent; and the rule I have laid down for myself is, that whenever the Court of Claims have decided a case favorably to the claimant, and reported a bill for his relief, I will give to that petitioner the benefit of all doubts I may have; and I will not in any case oppose the decision of the court, unless I am clearly satisfied, beyond reasonable dispute, that the decision was wrong. I will not be controlled conclusively in every case by the decision; because that court may err as well as other courts, and I must exercise my judgment in ascertaining whether the court have decided right or wrong; but unless it is a very clear case against the decision of the court, I feel it my duty to conform to their decision; or else why establish the court at all? If the decisions of the court are to pass for nothing, then it is unnecessary to incur the expense which the court involves every year, and we had better do away with it. On the other hand, when the court have decided adversely to a claim which the party has had every opportunity to have investigated and decided on fair, legal, and equitable principles before that court, for one, I am not disposed to reverse the decision. I think the proper rule for Congress to establish in such cases is that where there is an adverse report from the Court of Claims, that ought to be conclusive against the claimant. If he has had his day in court, if he has had a fair opportunity of being heard, and has had his case decided by an eminent, faithful, and able judicial tribunal, upon the testimony collated on both sides, I think he ought to be satisfied with that decision, and not be permitted to open the case again in Congress. Therefore, unless it is a very strong case, one which involves corruption, or one which arises upon other evidence that has been discovered subsequent to the decision of the Court of Claims, I would not be disposed to reverse or reopen any decision of that court adverse to a claimant. So on the other hand, although I admit that Congress is not bound by the decisions of the Court of Claims where they are favorable to claimants, because in appropriating money we must assume the jurisdiction of reviewing the decision to some extent, still I think we ought to give credence and credit to the decision of the court, and accord to the party the benefits of that decision, unless a clear, unequivocal case is made out that the court have decided wrong. This is a case where the court, after patient investigation, have decided in favor of the claimant; and I confess I have seen nothing which shakes my confidence in the propriety of the decision, and therefore I go for the claim. I feel no personal interest in the matter.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have looked over this report; I am in the habit, as these private claims come up, of looking at the reports; and I must say that there is a very loose practice now in the Senate by which the reports from our Committee on Claims, based on the decisions of the Court of Claims, are brought before us without the decision of the court accompanying the bill, so as to render it exceedingly inconvenient to get at the facts. I have looked at this case; I think it is entirely wrong; and I will state in a few words why.

A claim is here made for the value of certain lumber, taken during the last war by Commodore McDonough, and used for fortifying purposes upon Lake Champlain. It appears that for a series of years this claim was presented to Congress, and uniformly rejected. The schooner which conveyed this timber, with some other naval stores, was libeled in the district court of New York, and condemned upon the ground that it was engaged in commerce with the enemy. The Court of Claims sets aside any effect that the decree might be supposed to have, upon the ground that the New York court had no jurisdiction of the claim, inasmuch as the seizure was made within those waters which were peculiarly appropriate to the jurisdiction of the district court of Vermont. They say, therefore, that the case was coram non judge.

But, sir, the owner of this property went further, and instituted a suit in Vermont against Commodore McDonough for trespass, in taking possession of his property; in that suit the commodore pleaded "not guilty," and there was a verdict in his favor. The Court of Claims set aside the effect of that verdict, by saying that although the verdict is conclusive as regards him, yet, as a principle of law, it is not binding, as regards the claim of this claimant against the United States, upon the technical rule of law that a verdict in favor of one cotrespasser is not pleadable in bar to a suit against another cotrespasser. That may be a very correct technical rule of law, but it is obvious to us all that if Commodore McDonough seized this timber and used it for Government purposes, he seized it on the ground that it was being used by this citizen of the United States for the use and service of the enemy in time of war; and if, in an issue joined with him, there has been a verdict of the jury that he was not guilty, that verdict could only have been rendered on proof that he was justifiable in making the seizure. He could on no other ground be justifiable in taking this citizen's property; and although the technical rule of law might not enable the United States to set up this verdict in bar of an action against itself, it has none the less its moral force when a claim is made upon the equity of the Government that we should make an appropriation for the payment of this lumber.

There was other property on board not used for the purposes of the Government. There were tar, hawsers, and anchors. The court say the Government is not responsible for this. Why? Because they were not used for Government purposes; and they say, therefore, that Commodore McDonough alone is responsible for them, if any one; but Commodore McDonough has already been adjudged not to be responsible, not to have committed a trespass in the seizure of this property, and this property was seized at the same time as the lumber; and if the lumber was properly seized, as well as these other stores, on the ground that it was on its way for the service of the enemy, I think a fair conclusion, from all the circumstances of the case, is that Commodore McDonough made a justifiable seizure of this vessel, and that the Government of the United States ought not to pay for the lumber which it deemed proper to use for its own fortifications. I do not consider this as a case of taking private property for public use. I consider it a case of a Government officer acting in the exercise of his discretion with which he was invested by virtue of the command intrusted to him, seizing the property of a citizen on its way to the aid and comfort of the enemy. It was charged against him by the owner, that the owner was not on his way to the aid and comfort of the enemy, and that Commodore McDonough's seizure was a trespass; and that issue being tried, there has been a verdict of the jury in favor of Commodore McDonough, and I cannot vote for the Government paying.

Mr. COLLAMER. Does that appear by the decision?

Mr. BENJAMIN. That appears by the decision of the Court of Claims. Here is what the Court of Claims say upon the subject. After speaking of the condemnation of this property by the district court in New York—

Mr. COLLAMER. But what do they say about the case against Commodore McDonough?

Mr. BENJAMIN. Here it is:

"Another objection made in this case is, that a verdict and judgment had been previously rendered in favor of Commodore McDonough, in a suit against him by said Samuel Holgate, for the afore-said seizure of the goods in question. But that objection is not tenable. It is a sufficient answer to this objection to say, that, in this case, the Government of the United States, and not Commodore McDonough, is the defendant. It is decided, even in the case of joint trespassers, that a judgment in favor of one of the trespassers, in a suit against him alone, is no bar to a suit against the other trespasser."

On the face, therefore, of this decision of the Court of Claims, I can see no just ground for making this appropriation by the Government.

Mr. COLLAMER. I will say to the gentleman that, in point of fact, I know that this question was not in issue in the suit against Commodore McDonough. The people of Vermont were very deeply moved on that subject; for the action was brought against him when he was invited over to a celebration of the battle of Plattsburg, and he was seized in the procession. In the suit against Commodore McDonough, there was no issue made as to whether, in point of fact, the property was being taken to the enemy; his ground of defense before the circuit court of the United States was, that he was a public officer, and that he had reason to suppose the property was going to the enemy, and therefore seized it and delivered it over to the civil authorities; and that, for so doing, he was not personally responsible, even although the property was not going to the enemy. The case was tried on that ground, not on the merits of the seizure.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I further observe, by the decision of the Court of Claims, that they do not appear to have had any evidence before them that this suspicion was unfounded. No evidence was taken before the Court of Claims, and none is reported, about the merits of the case; but, although there was a judgment against it on the merits in the district court of New York, they say that is null and void because that was not the proper jurisdiction.

Mr. COLLAMER. The party never appeared there.

Mr. BENJAMIN. But no evidence was taken before the Court of Claims on that.

Mr. SIMMONS. I suppose the Senator from Louisiana is now satisfied that the question was not put in issue and not tried at all, whether the lumber was going to the enemy.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Vermont so states, and of course I take his statement.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, the reasoning is gone.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The reasoning is gone on that point; but there is no evidence on the main question whether such was the fact or not.

Mr. IVERSON. I know the Senator from Louisiana is too good a lawyer to assert or to argue that the decision made by a court having no jurisdiction of the case has any weight whatever. It is certainly a nullity.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I do not pretend that the decision in the New York court is conclusive or binding on this claimant; but I say that the circumstance affecting the propriety of the seizure has never yet been decided anywhere. The Court of Claims seems to have taken no evidence on that question at all; but, simply because the district court in New York rendered a void judgment, they give this man his claim without inquiring into the merits at all.

Mr. IVERSON. No evidence was brought by the Government on that point. All that the claimant is bound to do, in a case of this sort, is to prove the trespass, to prove that the defendant has seized his property. He must prove, first, that it was his property; and next, that the defendant seized that property and appropriated it to his own use. When the plaintiff proves that, he is entitled to damages, unless the defendant shows that the property was properly seized. Now, the decision of the Court of Claims discloses the fact that this property belonged to the claimant, and that it was seized and condemned and used by the Government of the United States. The presumption of law is, until the contrary appears, that it was illegally seized. There is no evidence in this case, which it was the duty of the Government to bring forward if it wanted to sustain the decision of the court in New York, to show that this property was legally seized. It was the duty of the Government to show before the Court of Claims that it was properly seized and condemned. In the failure of such evidence, as the gentleman knows, the presumption is that it does not exist.

Then, on the other point in relation to the fact that the matter was decided in the circuit court of Vermont as against Commodore McDonough when he was sued for trespass and pleaded not guilty, the verdict of the jury was in his favor. The Senator from Louisiana knows, as well as I or any other sensible lawyer who has ever practiced in any court, how much credit the verdict of the jury, like that which probably tried this case in Vermont, is entitled to. Here was Commodore McDonough, a patriotic and distinguished man, who doubtless seized this property in good faith, believing that it ought to have been seized. He was mistaken about it. When he was sued he pleaded not guilty, and he could have used the argument, as doubtless his counsel did, that he was not to blame if the property was illegally seized, that he was merely discharging his duty as a public officer; and if wrong had been done, the Government of the United States ought to be responsible, and not the commodore. That doubtless was the argument put in the heads of the jury, and they no doubt properly, as they do very frequently, found in favor of the defendant against the strict technicalities of law, when the equity of the case was with him. This was probably a case of that kind. Commodore McDonough was sued as a private individual; and it was urged to the jury that he was acting as a public officer in good faith, and that, although he might have been mistaken and committed an illegal act, a trespass, technically speaking, against the property of the plaintiff, he ought not to be held individually responsible for what he was doing in behalf of the Government, and therefore they very properly acquitted him. I do not attach much weight to the verdict of acquittal in that case. It is no evidence whatever that this property was legally seized and condemned. The equity of this case, apart from all considerations of law, is that the Government seized this property, and had the use of it. Although it was not in the ordinary manner taken for public use, it was used by the Government, applied to its own purposes, and therefore it seems to me the Government ought to be responsible for it.

Mr. PUGH. I think this case may become a precedent that will give us a great deal of trouble if we recognize the principles of law asserted by the Court of Claims. I attach no conclusive force to the opinion of that court upon a question of law; the statute does not. I give it the same force that I would give the opinion of a master in chancery—no more. That was the intention of the law creating the court. It was not called a court until the last minute; it was called a board of claims. They are nothing but three commissioners appointed by act of Congress to hear certain claims, to give us their opinions upon the facts and upon the law; and I take their finding upon a question of fact as I take the finding of a jury or of a court upon submission. As to their view of a question of law, I acknowledge it to be nothing but the opinion of three learned gentlemen, and if it is correct, pass it; and in doubtful cases I generally let it go; but where I think it is a serious error, which will lead to the introduction of a vast number of improper claims against the Government, I deem it my duty to interpose.

Did the Government of the United States take the property of this individual? The mere fact that it was used afterwards for fortifications does not render the Government liable, unless the alleged seizure by Commodore McDonough was illegal. If that was a legal seizure of property, which the party was then carrying to the enemy, the seizure divested his title, vested the title in the Government, and therefore it was no longer his property.

We come back then to the seizure by Commodore McDonough. That is the turning point of the whole case. Was it legal or illegal? He has two decisions in his favor; first, the decision of the district court in admiralty. That is said to be void, because the court had no jurisdiction, and I dismiss that; it may be so or not. Now we come to the civil process, to the action of trespass brought against Commodore McDonough himself in a court of law, and tried by a jury. The Senator from Georgia says we know how the verdicts of juries are obtained. Well, sir, if the verdict of the jury was wrong in point of law, or if in point of fact it was carried upon any alleged appeal as to the personal character of the defendant, it was the duty of the court to set aside the verdict, and I take it for granted that the court did its duty. What is the legal effect of the verdict? What is the meaning of the verdict? What did the plaintiff claim? The plaintiff said this defendant, by his agent, has taken my property contrary to law. The mere fact that he was Commodore McDonough would not relieve him from the law. What did the court and jury say? Upon that issue tried at the time, with the witnesses all before them, they said he was not guilty; they said he did not take the plaintiff's property; the plaintiff had lost title to his property by contravening the laws of the country and engaging in trade with the public enemy. They said it was not the property—

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 134.

Mr. SIMMONS. I think the gentleman did not hear the Senator from Vermont, who stated that that question was not put in issue.

Mr. PUGH. I know what I presume the Senator from Vermont means to say: that because the plea was, "not guilty," therefore there was not a formal issue made up, as in special pleading.

Mr. SIMMONS. He said there was no issue about the rightfulness of the seizure; but that the decision was on the ground that the commodore was doing his duty, and should not be held personally responsible.

Mr. PUGH. That could not be.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what the Senator from Vermont said. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. PUGH. It could not be, for this obvious reason: the Government of the United States has never authorized any of its agents to do an illegal act. The act was either legal or illegal. If it was legal, it was the act of the principal through the agent, and then the plaintiff has no claim. If it was illegal, the proper remedy was against the Commodore. Now, we often pass laws—in a case which happened in New Mexico we passed one—to indemnify a public officer for an illegal seizure already made. It was thought, in consideration of the circumstances, that we ought to assume it; but that is a question of discretion for the Government, in every instance. We could not have been bound to do it. I think it was done for Colonel Mitchell, in the case of Mitchell vs. Harmony. We could or could not have done it. We did it in that instance. In this case, if the seizure was legal, it was the act of the United States; if it was illegal, it was the act of the officer, and nobody else. The officer was prosecuted for doing an illegal act, and that question was tried by the jury and by the court; and I do not care what the form of the pleading was, the point which was decided—the legal effect and consequence of the verdict, and of the judgment upon the verdict—was, that the seizure was legal; that it divested the title of the plaintiff; that he had lost his title by violating the laws of the United States.

This being the case, by what authority does the Court of Claims reverse the judgment of another court—of a court which had jurisdiction, which had the parties before it, which had the witnesses before it, and which had a jury impaneled to try the issue of fact? It is an assumption of power which the Court of Claims has not. And when gentlemen complain that we reverse the Court of Claims, I say that the Court of Claims has reversed another court, which had more thorough jurisdiction; and I say that the verdict itself was evidence of the fact—not only evidence in favor of Commodore McDonough in any subsequent prosecution, but was evidence in favor of the United States; for a verdict not only binds the parties, but it binds the privies, as they are called in law; and inasmuch as the United States could only act through him, and not through any other instrument, the moment the court decided that he was not guilty, they decided that the United States were not guilty.

Therefore, I think this man has no claim. I do not know what the amount is; I do not care; but I know that there are no less than twenty or thirty decisions of the Court of Claims, which I have observed before the Senate and before the House of Representatives during this Congress, which involve the same incorrect proposition of law, to wit: that where the United States act by an agent, and can act in no other manner, although the agent has been acquitted, or although the agent is protected by law, it amounts to nothing; they can still come at the United States through the Court of Claims. I say that is not the law, in my judgment. If other gentlemen of the legal profession think differently, and can convince me of it, I shall be happy to change my opinion; but that is not my present impression. I believe the United States are not liable, and therefore, for one, I shall vote against the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and, on the question, "shall the bill pass?"

Mr. PUGH called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and, being taken, resulted—yeas 17, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Crittenden, Dixon, Foot, Foster, Harlan, Iverson, Polk, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, and Wade—17.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Brown, Clay, Fossenden, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Henderson, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, King, Pugh, Slidell, Toombs, Wilson, and Wright—20.

So the bill was rejected.

JOHN ERICSSON.

The Senate, in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. C. C. No. 90) for the relief of John Ericsson.

It provides for the payment to John Ericsson of the sum of $13,930, in full for the balance due him for services in planning the United States war steamer Princeton, and planning and superintending the construction of her machinery.

Mr. STUART. When this bill was up before I called for the reading of the report in the case, and if I remember aright, it covered the opinion of the Court of Claims. The claim struck me as being wrong, and I objected to it. I should like to hear the report read again, as being perhaps the best presentation of the case.

The Secretary read the opinion of the Court of Claims as delivered by Judge Scarburgh, as follows:

"By an act of Congress approved March 3, 1839, it was made 'the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, under the direction of the President, to make preparations for, and to commence, the construction of three steam vessels of war, on such models as shall be most approved, according to the best advices they can obtain, or to complete the construction of one such vessel of war, upon a model so approved as, in the opinion of the President, shall be best for the public interest, and most conformable to the demands of the public service'; and to enable the Department to carry into effect this requirement, an appropriation of $300,000, subject to certain restrictions, was made.—5 Stat. at Large, ch. 95, § 2, p. 364.

"By an act of Congress, approved July 20, A. D. 1840, a similar appropriation of the further sum of $340,000 was made, for the purpose of completing the two steam vessels which had been commenced.

"By an act of Congress approved March 3, A. D. 1841, an appropriation of the further sum of $400,000 was made, to be expended in building and equipping war steamers of medium size.

"On the 11th day of September, A. D. 1841, the Secretary of the Navy, by a letter of that date, addressed to the president of the Navy board, directed the board of Navy commissioners to cause to be built two steam vessels of war—one on Captain Stockton's plan, not exceeding six hundred tons; and one on that of Lieutenant Hunter, not to exceed three hundred tons. Afterwards the acting Secretary of the Navy, by a letter dated the 22d day of September, A. D. 1841, addressed to Captain R. F. Stockton, United States Navy, informed him of the directions which had been given to the board of Navy commissioners, and ordered him to superintend the building of the steamer of six hundred tons, under the direction of the commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia, making to him, from time to time, during the progress of the work, such suggestions as he (Captain Stockton) might think proper.

"Captain Stockton, in a letter addressed by him to the petitioner, dated October 2, A. D. 1841, expressed a wish to see and converse with him on the subject of the construction of the steamship, the building of which he had received orders to superintend. An interview took place between them, and Captain Stockton, in a letter to the petitioner, dated the 8th day of October, A. D. 1841, requested the petitioner to make the drawings of a ship with the dimensions they had previously spoken of. In subsequent letters, marked in the printed document ('Exhibit A') on file in this case, 'No. 16,' 'No. 17,' 'No. 18,' and 'No. 19,' Captain Stockton gave the petitioner further and more particular instructions in regard to the drawings which he desired him to make. The petitioner complied with the request of Captain Stockton in all respects, and, in conformity thereto, made the drawings and performed the services specified in 'Schedule A,' to be found in the printed document above mentioned.

"The ship Princeton was constructed according to these drawings, and the result was entirely satisfactory to Captain Stockton, and highly advantageous to the United States. Captain Stockton reported her to the Secretary of the Navy as 'a full rigged ship of great speed and power, able to perform any service that can be expected from a ship of war.'—See 'Schedule M' of 'Exhibit A.'

"On the 14th day of March, A. D. 1844, the petitioner presented his claim ('Schedule A' of 'Exhibit A') for compensation for his services to the Secretary of the Navy; and on the 11th day of May, A. D., 1844, it was rejected, on the ground that Captain Stockton, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, had stated as follows: 'In regard to Captain Ericsson's bill, which was sent to me at the same time, I must say that, with all my desire to serve him, I cannot approve his bill; it is in direct violation of our agreement, as far as it is to be considered a legal claim upon the Department.'—See 'Schedule F' of 'Exhibit A.'

"In a subsequent letter from Captain Stockton to the Secretary of the Navy, he further stated: 'That it has given me great pleasure to acknowledge, upon all proper occasions, the services of Captain Ericsson's mechanical skill in carrying out my well-intended efforts for the benefit of the country.' * * * * * 'I have invariably given him to understand, in the most distinct manner, whenever the subject was alluded to, that I had no authority from the Government to employ him; and that if he received anything, that it must be altogether gratuitous on the part of the Government; that, considering the great opportunity that he, as an inventor, would have to introduce his patents to the world by the aid of the funds of the Government, I did not think it proper for him to make a charge for their application to the Princeton; in all of which he has concurred, as far as I know, up to the time of the presentation of this extraordinary bill.'—See 'BB' of 'Exhibit A.'

"In a letter from Captain Stockton to the petitioner, written in July, A. D. 1841, he says: 'In making up the estimate for the cost of the ship, it will be necessary to consider what must be put down for the use of your patent right. It will be necessary, therefore, for you to write me a letter stating your views on that subject. As a great effort has been made to get a ship built for the experiment, I think you had better say to me in your letter that your charge will hereafter be (if the experiment should prove successful) —; but, as this is the first trial on so large a scale, I am at liberty to use the patents, and after the ship is tried, Government may pay for their use in that ship whatever sum they may deem proper.' In reply to this letter, the petitioner, in a letter to Captain Stockton, dated the 28th day of July, A. D. 1841, said: 'I have duly received your communication on the subject of my patent right for the ship propeller and semi-cylindrical steam-engine; in reply to which I beg to propose that, in case these inventions should be applied to your intended steam frigate, all considerations relating to my charge for patent right be deferred until after the completion and trial of the said patent propeller and steam machinery. Should their success be such as to induce Government to continue the use of the patents for the Navy, I submit that I am entitled to some remuneration; but, considering the liberality that thus enables me to have the utility of the patents tested on a very large scale, and the advantages which cannot fail to be derived in consequence, I beg to state that whenever the efficiency of the intended machinery of your steam frigate shall have been duly tested, I shall be satisfied with whatever sum you may please to recommend, or the Government sees fit to pay for the patent right.'—See 'No. 12' and 'No. 13' of 'Exhibit A.'

"In a letter from Captain Stockton to the Secretary of the Navy, dated February 7, A. D. 1853, he refers to this letter of May 20, A. D. 1844, and, amongst other things, says: 'In that letter I stated the nature of Captain Ericsson's services and the extent of the Department's obligation to him, and admitted his claim to such compensation from the Government as, under the circumstances, he may be entitled to.'

"Time and reflection have not diminished, but rather increased, my estimate of the nature of Captain Ericsson's services, and I have now the honor to reiterate my former opinion, and further to say, that the Government should make him a fair and reasonable compensation for his time and expenses while engaged in superintending the construction of the Princeton's machinery, &c.

"The services rendered by the petitioner were reasonably worth the amount charged by him, to wit: the sum of $15,000.—See the deposition of Charles W. Copeland.

"The question now presented for our consideration is, whether, under these circumstances, the petitioner is entitled to relief. He has shown that it had been determined by the proper authority, in pursuance of law, to build the steamer Princeton, and that, to effect that object on the plan proposed, and on which she was in fact constructed, the very services rendered by the petitioner, to be performed either by him or some other person, were indispensable. It is insisted, however, that the services of the petitioner were rendered gratuitously. If this be true, then the petitioner's claim cannot be sustained.

"In support of the proposition that the petitioner's services were rendered gratuitously, it is urged, first, that he was not employed by any person duly authorized to employ him; and, second, that the testimony of Captain Stockton is direct and positive that they were thus rendered. Nemo praesumitur donare; and this maxim applies with great force to a case like the present, where the object on which the bounty to be bestowed is a great and powerful Government, in possession of abundant means for all its legitimate purposes.

"That the determination to build the steamer Princeton, precisely on the plan on which she was built, was made by the proper authority, under an adequate appropriation, is not disputed, and is, in fact, indisputable. It is equally clear that it was not expected that her construction could be effected without an outlay of money. In order to carry out the object contemplated, it was necessary to employ proper agents, and to invest them with the authority requisite for the purpose. Accordingly we find the Secretary of the Navy giving orders to Captain Stockton to superintend the building of the steamer under the direction of the commandant of the navy yard at Philadelphia, and to make to him, from time to time, during the progress of the work, such suggestions as he might think proper. If, then, this order was obeyed, she was lawfully built, and everything done in connection with her construction was lawfully done.

"That the petitioner rendered the services for which he claims compensation is undisputed; but it is insisted that Captain Stockton had no authority to make such a request so as to entitle the petitioner to compensation, except under the direction of the commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia. If this be true, and Captain Stockton made the request without the direction of the commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia, he was guilty of a violation of duty. And, moreover, if this direction was essential to the validity of such a request, then it was also essential to authorize Captain Stockton to accept the services of the petitioner, though tendered to him gratuitously. But it is to be presumed that Captain Stockton, in all that he did, acted in the line of his duty, and not in violation of it. No complaint has ever been made against him by the Government, whose agent he was; but, on the contrary, the payment of the petitioner's claim was made by the very authority under which Captain Stockton acted to depend upon his report. It must be intended, therefore, that, in making the request on which the petitioner's services were rendered, he acted by proper authority. If the direction of the commandant of the navy-yard at Philadelphia was necessary, it will be presumed. The Secretary of the Navy himself, in rejecting the petitioner's claim, recognized Captain Stockton as the trusted and duly authorized agent of the Government in the premises. There is, then, no room for question that what the petitioner did was lawfully done, and that his services were rendered at the request of an officer duly authorized to make it. He did not officiously intermeddle with the great public work which was going on. It would, indeed, be a most offensive imputation upon the characters of the honorable men under whose superintendence and direction it was carried on and completed, even to suppose that he could have done so if he had desired. The only point of inquiry, therefore, is, did the petitioner render his services gratuitously?"

"The letter from Captain Stockton to the Secretary of the Navy, of the 20th May, A. D. 1844, is explained by his letter to the same officer, of the 7th February, A. D. 1853. If we take the former according to its strict literal interpretation, Captain Stockton may be understood not only as having denied that he had any authority to employ the petitioner, but also as having asserted that the petitioner volunteered his services, and rendered them gratuitously. But he did not mean either the one or the other, as is apparent from the consideration that if he did, the two letters would be in conflict with each other. In his letter of the 7th February, A. D. 1853, he expressly says, that in his letter of the 20th May, A. D. 1844, he stated 'the nature of Captain Ericsson's services, and the extent of the Department's obligation to him, and admitted his claim to such compensation from the Government as, under the circumstances, he may be entitled to.' He meant, therefore, in his letter of the 20th May, A. D. 1844, not only to state an obligation of some kind on the part of the Navy Department to the petitioner, but also to state the extent of that obligation, by admitting that he is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services. But this is wholly inconsistent with the idea that those services were rendered gratuitously. The first letter, therefore, is not to be literally interpreted. It may not be improper here to add, that the letter of the 7th February, A. D. 1853, was obviously designed to be explanatory of the former letter; and to remove all doubts as to his meaning, he, in conclusion, says: 'Time and reflection have not diminished, but rather increased, my estimate of Captain Ericsson's services; and I have now the honor to reiterate my former opinion, and further to say, that the Government should make him a fair and reasonable compensation for his time and expenses, while engaged in superintending the construction of the Princeton's machinery.' &c., &c."

"With the first letter thus explained, the whole case is relieved from difficulty. If the Secretary of the Navy, when he received that letter, had understood it according to this explanation, he would not have rejected the petitioner's claim. When Captain Stockton wrote the letter of the 20th of May, A. D. 1844, he was manifestly under an impression that the plaintiff was asserting a special contract for specified services at fixed prices; and he meant to state not only that no such contract had been made, but that he had no authority to make it. It is to such a contract that the whole of the first letter refers. We can very well understand that the petitioner would gladly have availed himself of such an opportunity 'to exhibit to the world the importance of his various patents,' and that to secure it, he would have permitted his compensation to depend on the contingency of their success; but we do not suppose that Captain Stockton, or any one else, desired that, if the result should be entirely successful, the United States should receive the benefit of the petitioner's services without compensation. Taking the two letters of Captain Stockton together, we have no difficulty in coming to the conclusion that the understanding between the petitioner and Captain Stockton was, that the petitioner should be permitted 'to exhibit to the world the importance of his various patents' in his own way, and according to his own plans, and that he should receive just such compensation for his services as should be justified by the result. The petitioner agreed to accept a quantum meruit, dependent on the success of his labors."

"The petitioner admits the receipt of $1,150. He claims $15,000. We shall report to Congress a bill in his favor for the sum of $13,930."

Mr. POLK. I think it would add to the better understanding of this case if the dissentient opinion of Judge Blackford were also read.

Mr. STUART. I do not know where that opinion may be. It is not here in this report.

Mr. MALLORY. The report expressly says that the opinion of the court was unanimous in favor of the claim.

Mr. POLK. My recollection is, that Judge Blackford delivered a dissenting opinion; but I may be in error.

Mr. MALLORY. The Senator from Missouri is in error. The report, read at the desk, is the opinion of the Court of Claims, and it sets out with the announcement that the court was unanimous in the opinion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. Foot in the chair.) There is no dissenting opinion accompanying the decision of the court.

Mr. SLIDELL. I wish, at this stage of the business, to make a suggestion to the Senate in connection with these cases. I have found it impossible to understand the cases from the Court of Claims. One's attention is not called to them until they are brought up in the Senate; and then there is but one copy of the opinion of the court here, and it is utterly out of the question that any Senator can act understandingly upon simply hearing that opinion read at the desk. Properly to understand the merits of the case, and the principles of law upon which it is founded, requires an examination of the opinion, and the papers which should accompany it. I was drawing up a resolution requiring that, in all future reports of committees on bills emanating from the Court of Claims, a sufficient number of copies of the opinion of the court, with the brief of the solicitor and the claimant, should be printed for the information of the Senate; but I now find that a provision of law to that effect has been overlooked. I call the attention of the Secretary to it, that in future we may have the documents to which we are entitled under the law. It requires the court to report, at the commencement of the session, the various cases upon which they have acted, "stating in each the material facts upon which such opinion is founded. Any judge who may dissent from the opinion of the majority, shall append his reasons for such dissent to the report; and such report, together with briefs of the solicitor and the claimant, which shall accompany the report, upon being made to either House of Congress, shall be printed in the same manner as other public documents." If I had been aware that there was such a provision of law, I should have objected to the consideration of any of these cases until I had had the opportunity to examine them; and I hope, in future, we shall be furnished at least with copies of the opinions.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Louisiana is mistaken. The reports of the Court of Claims are all brought here and printed. I have in my hand the printed report in this case, containing the opinion of the court. I was consulted, as chairman of the Committee on Claims in the early part of the session, as to how much of those reports should be printed, and I instructed the Secretary not to have the testimony printed, because that is unnecessary and involves a large expense; and, besides, the Court of Claims always, in their opinion, give a brief abstract of the testimony. So far, however, as regards the decision of the court and the briefs of counsel on both sides, they have all been printed in every case, as I understand, just as the law requires. I followed the law, and instructed the Secretary not to have the testimony printed, that being unnecessary.

Mr. SLIDELL. I hope the Senator from Georgia does not suppose that I mean to find fault with him.

Mr. IVERSON. Not at all.

Mr. SLIDELL. I take it for granted that it is an omission. I have applied to the Clerk this morning in each of the cases from the Court of Claims which have come up, for a copy of the opinion of the court, and I have not succeeded in obtaining one; and therefore I am not able to understand the merits of the cases on which I am called upon to pass judgment.

Mr. IVERSON. I know the Printer has been instructed to print them, and I suppose they have been printed in every case.

Mr. STUART. I presume the importance of this case has attracted the attention of the Senate; and if so, the point I suggest will readily strike their consideration. The court has proceeded upon the ground that Captain Stockton had the lawful authority to employ this man, and that he did employ him; and having done so, that the United States is bound to pay so much as his services were reasonably worth. That is the ground on which the court bases its decision; and in order to get at that decision it gives a construction of Captain Stockton's letters, and says that he must have done so and so. Now, I think the Senate will see, by referring to the letters as they are embraced in this opinion, that Captain Stockton expressly and unqualifiedly, and in as pointed terms as human language would enable him to do, rejected any such construction. The court states that these vessels were directed to be built on two models, one of which was Captain Stockton's model, and then says:

"On the 14th day of March, A. D. 1844, the petitioner presented his claim ('Schedule A' of 'Exhibit A') for compensation for his services to the Secretary of the Navy; and on the 11th day of May, A. D. 1844, it was rejected, on the ground that Captain Stockton, in a letter to the Secretary of the Navy, had stated as follows: 'In regard to Captain Ericsson's bill, which was sent to me at the same time, I must say that, with all my desire to serve him, I cannot approve his bill; it is in direct violation of our agreement as far as it is to be considered a legal claim upon the Department.' (See 'Schedule F' of 'Exhibit A'.)"

Captain Stockton said it was in direct violation of the agreement he made with this claimant:

"In a subsequent letter from Captain Stockton to the Secretary of the Navy, he further stated: 'That it has given me great pleasure to acknowledge, upon all proper occasions, the services of Captain Ericsson's mechanical skill in carrying out my well intended efforts for the benefit of the country.' * * * I have invariably given him to understand, in the most distinct manner, whenever the subject was alluded to, that I had no authority from the Government to employ him."

And yet, sir, this court determines the case on the ground that he had authority; and in order to come to that conclusion, it presumes that if Captain Stockton acted without authority, he would have been arraigned on charges and tried for it; and inasmuch as there is no pretense that anything of that sort has ever been done, the court presumes that he acted upon authority, and yet he says here, as I have just read, that upon all occasions he invariably told this claimant that he had no such authority—

"And that if he received anything, it must be altogether gratuitous on the part of the Government: that, considering the great opportunity that he, as an inventor, would have to introduce his patent to the world by the aid of the funds of the Government, I did not think it proper for him to make a charge for their application to the Princeton; in all of which he has concurred, as far as I know, up to the time of the presentation of his extraordinary bill."

These are Captain Stockton's letters.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Read the letter of 1853.

Mr. STUART. The Senator from Kentucky desires me to read his letter of 1853. I will do so; I did not read it before, because I was simply meeting the point on which the court placed the case. In Captain Stockton's letter to the Navy Department, dated February 7, 1853, he says that he had stated, in his letter of May 20, 1844, "the nature of Captain Ericsson's services, and the extent of the Department's obligation to him, and admitted his claim to such compensation from the Government as, under the circumstances, he may be entitled to." That is giving a construction to a former letter in which he had said that whatever the Government should do for Ericsson must be entirely gratuitous. Now he says:

"Time and reflection have not diminished, but rather increased, my estimate of Captain Ericsson's services; and I have now the honor to reiterate my former opinion, and further to say, that the Government should make him a fair and reasonable compensation for his time and expenses, while engaged in superintending the construction of the Princeton's machinery," &c., &c."

That is Captain Stockton's opinion as to what the Government ought to do as a matter of gratuity. I suppose that is a point to be determined by Congress. Captain Stockton's opinion may be very good as evidence; but we all of us know that when an officer like Captain Stockton is called upon by a personal friend in regard to whom he says that he has an earnest desire to aid him all he can, he would write in fully as liberal terms as that. But I was stating that the only ground on which the court have placed the decision, and the only ground on which they could put it, is, that there is a large claim against the United States; and in order to show this they state, in the first place, that there was an appropriation of money to build the ship; in the next place, that there was the appointment of Captain Stockton to superintend the building; next, that Captain Stockton had the services of this individual; and then they say that these proceedings having taken place, and Captain Stockton not having been cashiered or tried for exceeding his authority in employing Ericsson, they therefore conclude that it was legally done; and being legally done, the United States is bound to pay him. I say this is a construction contended for in the face of the strongest assertions of Captain Stockton himself that he had no authority; that he so told the claimant: so that there can be no pretense that the claimant supposed he had authority. He told him that he had not, and also told him expressly that whatever sum he should receive from the Government if any, would be a mere gratuity.

It was for that purpose that I was about to remark the pertinency of another portion of that letter. It was the good fortune, the singular good fortune, of this inventor to be able to use the funds of the United States to place his invention in a Government ship, which should publish it to the world, which should be a full and thorough test of it, without costing him a dollar, except his own time; and Captain Stockton was wise and judicious when, in that letter, he presented to the Government the benefits he thought the claimant would derive from such an experiment of his invention at the expense of the Government.

That there is any legal claim, such as this court were authorized to give an opinion in favor of, I think cannot be contended for. If there is any claim at all upon the justice of the Government, as compensation, every Senator here is as well advised of that as I am; but I submit that the case shows that he, having been paid $1,150 in money, and having had this exhibition and test of his invention at the expense of the Government, is in no wise a loser. That part of the case I do not propose to argue, because, as I said, every Senator is as competent to decide on that as I am. I can only decide for myself on that question, that, with the evidence shown, there is no such claim upon the bounty, or upon the justice, or upon the generosity of the Government, as would induce me to vote for paying this $14,000. Upon legal grounds, I am certainly very confident there is no claim at all.

Mr. MALLORY. Mr. President, the Senator from Michigan is usually exceedingly fair and just in his estimate of the services of others; and I think if he reviews this case, which he seems to have taken up now for the first time, he will come to the conclusion that he is in error as to the value of this claimant's services. I took the view that he did when I first looked at this case, and a majority of the Committee on Claims were opposed to it; but on reexamination we came to a different opinion. I will state the facts. In 1839, Congress authorized the construction of three war ships. In 1840, the Secretary of the Navy, in obedience to that law, ordered two to be constructed. There were two plans at that time. The question of whether steam could or could not be successfully applied to war vessels had not then been solved; the fear of danger from ignition by fire prevailed in the minds of all naval men, and the problem was to be solved. Its solution was demanded by every naval Power on earth. One of the officers of our Navy, Captain William Hunter, submitted a plan by which wheels were to be inserted in the bilge of the vessel on each side—submerged wheels. Ericsson had demonstrated his plan to be feasible, practicable, and just, already. This was no experiment in the Princeton. The experiment had been made at great cost by Captain Ericsson. He had exhausted every dollar he had on earth in making that experiment. He was here at the door of the Capitol, besieging the Congress of the United States to avail themselves of what his genius had brought about and what his means had been expended in demonstrating, and they refused to do it.

The Secretary of the Navy, in authorizing the construction of these two vessels, directed one to be constructed on Hunter's plan—not model, as the Senator from Michigan says; the model was not in question at all; our models were as good then as they are now; but the point was the application of steam to naval purposes. One was to be built on Ericsson's plan, and one on Hunter's plan. Hunter's plan proved a total failure. Ericsson's plan laid the foundation of the present steam marine. She was the first war propeller ever built on the face of the earth. In the Princeton he brought forward not only his propeller invented by himself, but a great many appliances appurtenant to steam navigation which have since been used in our service.

Now, to show the estimate in which this ship was held, I will mention that the American Institute, hearing of it, sent a committee to investigate the condition and success of what they deemed an experiment. I will not read the whole report of the committee of the American Institute. My purpose here is to show the value of Captain Ericsson's services to our country. The committee conclude by saying, after summing up the speed of thirteen knots:

"Among the generals and tacticians of Europe, the belief prevails that our superior discipline has been, heretofore, the cause of our successes; and the unflinching conduct, unbroken discipline, and calm contempt of danger, which distinguished the crew and officers of the Missouri, burnt recently at Gibraltar, have done more to elevate our national character in this respect than can be possibly computed by any reckoning of cost of property destroyed."

"In conclusion, your committee beg leave to present the Princeton as every way worthy of the highest honors of this institute. She is a sublime conception, most successfully realized, an effort of genius skillfully executed, a grand unique combination, honorable to the country as creditable to all engaged upon her. Nothing, in the shape of mechanics, surpasses the inventive genius of Captain Ericsson, unless it be the moral daring of Captain Stockton, in the adaptation of so many novelties at one time."

This is signed by ten members of the Institute. Further to illustrate: Captain Stockton, in 1844, after describing the ship, her guns and her armament, says everything human language can do to extol her in the eyes of the American people. As I said, the Princeton is the foundation of our present steam marine. It is the foundation of the steam marine of the whole world. She created universal surprise wherever she was seen. She revolutionized naval vessels; and hereafter in maritime war, those who send sailing vessels to sea, send them but to be captured.

In doing this, it is said Mr. Ericsson undertook to give his service for nothing. The presumption is against a private individual giving his services to the Government; but it is presented by the Senator from Michigan that he received an equivalent by the opportunity of thus testing his experiment. Why, sir, his experiment had already been fully tested, fully admitted; but our Government was slow, and it is always justly slow in availing itself of every invention in its national vessels. The Government had refused to avail itself of it, and Ericsson had not the means of introducing it into foreign navies. It is pretended now that we have availed ourselves of his brains and of his genius and have actually conferred a benefit on Ericsson instead of Ericsson conferring benefit on the country. That is the ground taken.

When Captain Stockton laid the plans before the Secretary of the Navy for building this vessel, they were not his plans; they were the plans of Ericsson and Stockton combined. The plans submitted were submitted with reference to Ericsson's engine, and Ericsson's peculiar machinery and the adaptation of it to the size of the vessel and his peculiar propeller, the shifting smoke-stack, and all those appliances that distinguished the Princeton. Why, sir, a single man on the deck of the Princeton navigated her. Her crew were out of reach of the guns of an enemy entirely, and a single man could not only run the steamer, but absolutely fire one of Stockton's big guns at the same time. She was a vessel which realized what naval men had years before conceived. The perfection of a vessel of war, as a matter of course, must be the combination of the greatest speed with the greatest power; and the nearer you approximate to that perfection, the better vessel you have. It has never yet been reached. The speed of the Persia with the battery of the Agamemnon of course would be the perfection of a war ship, and the Princeton realized it more nearly than ever had been seen before. She acquired a speed on the ocean which had never been attained, and had a size of gun that had never before been heard of. She had, if I remember rightly, eight forty-twos carriage guns, and two of Stockton's large guns. We have gone on step by step since that, but we have never excelled the Princeton, except in size. The qualities which the Princeton had we have translated into other vessels, but in superiority we have never excelled her.

How long was Mr. Ericsson engaged in this? You will find; by the papers on your table, that in September, 1841, the order was issued for the construction of the ship, and he was consulted at once; and he left the service in September, 1843. Two years of the life of such a man as Ericsson were devoted to this service, and he produced the finest ship on the face of the earth; he produced a marvel in the eyes of the world, and now we are told, in the American Senate, that we have absolutely conferred a benefit on that man, and gen-dlemen seem unwilling to compensate him. I know my friend from Michigan entertains no such ideas abstractedly. If Commodore Stockton had never employed him, if he had absolutely gone forward and volunteered his services, is it just, is it right, that we should accept them and deny him compensation when he asks it? Ericsson, like all men of genius, is poor; and he must, necessarily, be poor for the balance of his days. I never saw a genius that was not, for he is eternally trying experiments by which other men profit.

If he had volunteered his services, I ask, when the country has reaped these great advantages by them, is it just, is it generous, is it magnanimous, in the American people, to refuse him this paltry compensation of some fourteen thousand dollars? But, sir, the Senator from Michigan says expressly that Captain Stockton denies that Mr. Ericsson had any just grounds of complaint; in other words the Senator from Michigan gives a construction to Captain Stockton's letter which Captain Stockton himself repudiates. He undertakes now, in 1858, to construe Captain Stockton's letter differently from the construction given to it by Captain Stockton himself in 1853. The Court of Claims were unanimous in this case, and they state Captain Stockton's construction thus:

"The letter from Captain Stockton to the Secretary of the Navy, of the 23d May, A. D. 1844, is explained by his letter to the same officer, of the 7th February, A. D. 1853. If we take the former according to its strict literal interpretation, Captain Stockton may be understood not only as having denied that he had any authority to employ the petitioner, but also as having asserted that the petitioner volunteered his services, and rendered them gratuitously. But he did not mean either the one or the other, as is apparent from the consideration that if he did, the two letters would be in conflict with each other. In his letter of the 7th February, A. D. 1853, he expressly says, that in his letter of the 20th May, A. D. 1844, he stated 'the nature of Captain Ericsson's services, and the extent of the Department's obligation to him, and admitted his claim to such compensation from the Government as, under the circumstances, he may be entitled to.' He meant, therefore, in his letter of the 20th May, A. D. 1844, not only to state an obligation of some kind on the part of the Navy Department to the petitioner, but also to state the extent of that obligation, by admitting that he is entitled to a reasonable compensation for his services. But this is wholly inconsistent with the idea that those services were rendered gratuitously."

I say, therefore, that the Senator from Michigan undertakes to place upon Captain Stockton's words a construction which Stockton has directly repudiated. He comes forward and says, that what he meant to say, originally, was, that no legal contract had been entered into, and I concede that fact; but that he should accept such compensation as the Government would be willing to give him. That admits that he should have some compensation; but now we are told he is not entitled to any. If he had been entirely unsuccessful, two years of labor for the benefit of the Government would have entitled him to something, because it is worth something to this Government to prove a prevalent idea to be a humbug, and get rid of it. If we, ten years ago, had by an appropriation of $50,000 proved that the idea of defending the harbor of New York by a steam battery, was impracticable, we should have made money by the operation. Take any other popular idea of the day upon which the Government experiments, and if you can prove that it is impracticable and desist from making appropriations, you make money by it. But when he has successfully achieved the result in view, as is acknowledged by all nations and by ourselves, with what grace can we withhold compensation from him? No, sir, the case is perfectly patent.

Mr. BENJAMIN. Will my friend from Florida permit me to make a suggestion to him?

Mr. MALLORY. Certainly.

Mr. BENJAMIN. It is that he allow an amendment striking out from the bill the words, "for the balance due him." I cannot vote for this bill, and I think a great many cannot vote for it as a debt; but I can very well vote for it as a gratuity. I cannot approve of the decision of the Court of Claims. I presume the object of the Senator is not to indorse the Court of Claims so much as to get the money for Ericsson. Now, suppose we strike out the words "for the balance due him," and say, "in full for all his services."

Mr. MALLORY. I accept the amendment, but I do not consider it a gratuity. I do not vote for gratuities. I think we have received a very handsome equivalent indeed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I offer the amendment to strike out the words "for the balance due him."

Mr. MALLORY. I give way for that purpose. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY. I will not continue the debate further. I think I have fully shown that Captain Ericsson was employed by competent authority, and rendered valuable service for which he has not been paid.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GREEN afterwards moved to reconsider the vote passing the bill, and the motion was entered.

CREEK DEPREDACTIONS.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 26) to provide for the payment of certain claims of citizens of Georgia and Alabama, on account of losses sustained by depredations of the Creek Indians.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. That bill can lie over. The bill was passed over.

NAHUM WARD.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (S. No. 93) from the Court of Claims, for the relief of Nahum Ward.

Mr. PUGH. That bill is adversely reported upon by the committee. I do not wish it to be acted on at present, but I move that the decision of the Court of Claims be printed. The court decided in favor of it, and the committee against it, and I have not been able to get the decision of the court. I ask simply that it may be printed. The court have decided one way, and the committee the other. I think it is proper we should see both sides.

Mr. POLK. I think the Senate can dispose of the case without postponing it. I am pretty certain that there was a divided court on that case, two judges for the claim, and one against it. I believe that the dissenting opinion was a strong one, and a larger number of the members of the committee were against the court, than there were in the court for the claim. This case has been up before the Senate heretofore, and I think we had better dispose of it.

Mr. PUGH. This gentleman is a constituent of mine, and feels aggrieved at the action of the committee. I have formed no opinion on it, but I have read the opinion of the Committee on Claims, and I desire to read the decision of the court. As my friend from Louisiana said, we have fallen into the vicious practice of not printing the reports of the court, and we do not know what the case is.

Mr. IVERSON. The Senator from Ohio, like other gentlemen, has fallen into a mistake on this question of printing. These decisions have been printed in every case reported to the Senate by the Committee on Claims. In this very case of Ericsson, that has just been acted on, the opinion I have in my hand came from the box of a Senator. The Secretary consulted me, as chairman of the committee, at the very outset of the session, as to what should be printed; and I said that the decisions of the court, according to law, should be printed; and if the Senator has not got a printed report in this case, it is his own fault; he has not looked after one. If he will examine, he will find that there is a printed report.

Mr. PUGH. The Senator is mistaken. I have the printed report of the committee, but none of the court; and I have sent for it twice at this session.

Mr. IVERSON. Then it has been mislaid in some way. They have all been printed.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The Senator from Georgia does not understand our point. It is very possible these reports may have been printed. We called the attention of the Secretary to the fact that they are not put on our files. I cannot find any of them. I have sent a page two or three times, and I cannot get one. They are not put on our files; so that we are unable to see what they are.

Mr. IVERSON. They may not be on the files, but they are in the private boxes of gentlemen, in the room where these reports are kept, I presume.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I have sent two or three times, and I cannot find any.

Mr. PUGH. I move to postpone the further consideration of this bill; and I ask, by general consent, in this case, where the committee and court differ, that we may have the advantage of seeing in print what the law requires to be reported to Congress—the opinion of the court and the dissenting opinion, if there be one, with a brief of the solicitor and claimants. I am not able to form an opinion on the case.

The motion to postpone was agreed to.

ELIZABETH MONTGOMERY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 30) for the relief of Elizabeth Montgomery, heir of Hugh Montgomery, which provides for the payment of $5,000, as full compensation for the successful efforts of Captain Hugh Montgomery, in saving the powder and munitions of war belonging to the United States on board the ship Nancy, and for his interest in her value, which he blew up to prevent her and her cargo from falling into the hands of the enemy during the war of the Revolution.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims, with an amendment to add:

And that the said sum be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Is there any report in this case? If so, I should like to hear it.

The Secretary read the following report made by Mr. Evans, January 28, from the Committee on Revolutionary Claims:

The Committee on Revolutionary Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Elizabeth Montgomery, daughter of Captain Hugh Montgomery, praying relief, beg leave to adopt their former report, as heretofore made at the last session of Congress, which is as follows, to wit:

The memorial of the petitioner, which is very circumstantial in substance, presents these facts: She is the daughter of Captain Hugh Montgomery, formerly of Wilmington, in the State of Delaware, and employed as captain of the brig Nancy of that port, belonging to himself and others; that, in the latter part of the year 1775, the said brig, chartered by Robert Morris, then a member of Congress, was dispatched to the West Indies with a cargo of flour, to be sold and the proceeds to be returned to the United States in gunpowder and munitions of war. The cargo was sold at Porto Rico, and the Nancy then proceeded to St. Croix, where she was privately loaded with her return cargo, consisting of four hundred and sixty barrels of gunpowder, six long four-pounders, four chests of small arms, and other munitions of war, and with sundry articles of merchandise belonging to the said Montgomery. After the reception of his cargo, by means of the cannon and some swivels, and other arms, Captain Montgomery converted his ship into a vessel-of-war, and sailed for the Delaware in order that he might deliver his cargo at Philadelphia, according to his directions. When he approached the Delaware capes, he was intercepted by two British ships-of-war. He succeeded in beating off the boats sent to capture him, but, finding it impossible to escape capture, he ran his ship into shoal water and commenced removing the powder and munitions of war to the shore, and securing them from capture, leaving the private property to its fate. He kept off the enemy's boats whilst he landed two hundred and forty-four barrels of the powder, the cannon, small arms, and other munitions of war, with the aid of Captain Weeks, who commanded some American vessels-of-war within the capes.

When he had so far succeeded in saving the cargo, one of the enemy's vessels approached within three hundred yards, cast anchor, and opened a destructive fire, whilst several boats, filled with men, approached for the purpose of boarding the Nancy. Finding it impossible to save more of the powder and the private property, he left the vessel, having laid a train and march communicating with the powder, preferring to destroy both his vessel and the rest of her cargo, rather than it should fall into the hands of the enemy. The boats' crews had scarcely taken possession of the vessel, when she was blown up with all on board, and, with the remains of her cargo, was destroyed. That part of the cargo which had been saved was transported to Philadelphia, and safely delivered to the agents of the Government. Subsequently to this, Captain Montgomery went to sea in a private armed ship, was captured by a British cruiser, imprisoned for a long time, and treated with great harshness on account of the destruction of so many British sailors by blowing up his vessel, as before stated. During his long imprisonment his mind became disordered, and during his voyage homeward, after his release, he leaped overboard, in a fit of insanity, and was drowned, leaving a widow, who has been long dead, and the petitioner, his only child, then a small girl.

The petitioner prays that Congress should make her some compensation for the losses of her father, sustained in the destruction of his vessel, as before stated, and for his patriotic conduct in saving the public property, then so much needed, to the neglect of his own, which he might have saved, instead of that which belonged to the public.

A claim is set up for the value of this private property, shipped on board the Nancy on his own account. But of this no satisfactory evidence has been given, and the committee have been unable to form any estimate of its value. As to the other part of the claim, the main facts are fully proved by an affidavit of Captain Mendall, who was one of the crew of the Nancy, and cognizant of all the facts of the voyage, and the safe landing of the greater part of the munitions of war. The blowing up of the vessel, and the saving of the gunpowder, are stated in an original letter, filed with the evidence, from George Reed, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, to his wife, dated the 6th of July, 1776, a few days after the occurrence. And, on the whole, the committee are of opinion that the facts heretofore set forth are satisfactorily proved.

If, as is alleged, the vessel was chartered for the purpose set forth, it is presumed no doubt could exist that the Government ought to pay; the destruction being beneficial to it, and inevitable under the circumstances, to prevent the vessel and her cargo from falling into the hands of the enemy. Many claims of this kind have been paid.

The great difficulty in allowing this claim is its antiquity; but in this case the delay is satisfactorily accounted for.

On a review of the whole case, the committee have come to the conclusion that the petitioner ought to be liberally remunerated to the extent of any loss sustained in the destruction of the vessel by her father.

But after such a length of time no evidence could be furnished of the value of the vessel. Any estimate would be conjectural; but as the claim is a just one, they have come to the conclusion to give her $5,000, as a full and final satisfaction of her claim, and report a bill for that purpose.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DE VISSER AND VILLARUBIA.

The bill (S. No. 103) for the relief of Simon De Visser and José Villarubia, of New Orleans, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to release De Visser and Villarubia, merchants, of New Orleans, from the payment of all claims, penalties, and forfeitures which may legally exist against them, in favor of the United States arising out of frauds committed in the custom-house of New Orleans by one Charles Meteye, they having been judicially declared to be entirely innocent of those frauds, and especially to release them from the penalties and forfeitures claimed by reason of those frauds in two suits now pending in the district court of the United States for the eastern district of Louisiana, in which the United States are plaintiffs, and De Visser and Villarubia are defendants, with a proviso that the said defendants shall pay all costs incurred in the suits, and that the rights of the United States against Charles Meteye shall be reserved.

Mr. KING. Is there a report in that case?

Mr. TOOMBS. The petition of the party was adopted by the committee after full investigation.

Mr. KING. I ask that it be read if it be brief.

Mr. TOOMBS. It is long. The case has been tried in the district court, and the parties exonerated from all blame.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

O. H. BERRYMAN.

The Senate next proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 108) for the relief of O. H. Berryman and others, from the Court of Claims, which was reported adversely from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. IVERSON. I move that the adverse report of the committee be agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. PUGH. Postpone the bill indefinitely.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask for the reading of the report.

Mr. IVERSON. The report is a very lengthy one from the Court of Claims. I do not remember whether there is a report from the committee. I believe there is, however. The report of the committee can be read.

The Secretary read the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. PUGH. I suggest that that bill be postponed until to-morrow. It seems to be a fair case of doubt, and I move that it be postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DE VISSER AND VILLARUBIA.

Mr. SLIDELL. While I was absent, accidentally, a few moments ago, I find that a bill, reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, has been passed. My friend from Virginia has been kind enough to say that he would move a reconsideration. It is not with any view to delay the bill; but if he will make the motion, I will state my objections to it.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to reconsider the vote on the passage of the bill for the relief of Simon De Visser and José Villarubia, of New Orleans.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If my colleague desires to oppose that bill, and he was not in his seat, I have no objection to its being reopened.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; and the question recurring on the passage of the bill, a long debate ensued, which was participated in by Messrs. SLIDELL, TOOMBS, BENJAMIN, SIMMONS, COLLAMER, IVERSON, FESSENDEN, HOUSTON, CLAY, KING, and BAYARD. The bill was passed with an amendment. [This debate will be published in the Appendix.]

Mr. STUART. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SEWARD. It is nearly five o'clock, and I move an adjournment.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, May 14, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, in answer to a resolution of the 5th May, calling for papers relating to the claim of J. H. Wheeler, late Minister to Nicaragua; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the House a communication from the Commissioner of Patents, transmitting the agricultural portion of the annual Patent Office report; which was laid on the table, and ordered to be printed.

TERRITORIAL BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER stated that the business first in order was the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union on the territorial bills made yesterday, beginning with a bill (H. R. No. 56) making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory.

Mr. BRANCH. I withdraw my motion to recommit the bills to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and I move the previous question on the engrossment of this bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded tellers on seconding the previous question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. HAWKINS, and DAVIS of Massachusetts, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 80, noes 15; no quorum voting.

Mr. PHELPS moved a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Ahl, Barksdale, Bishop, Boulman, Bravton, Burnett, Burns, Burroughs, Campbell, Caruthers, Horace F. Clark, Clark B. Cochran, Corning, Cox, Cragin, Davis of Maryland, Dewart, Edie, Elliott, English, Eustis, Garnett, Giddings, Gillis, Greenwood, Grosbeck, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Hardin, Hatch, Hickman, Hoard, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jenkins, Keitt, Kellogg, Kelly, Kelsey, Kilgore, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Leidy, Letcher, MacLay, McKibbin, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Miles, Montgomery, Freeman H. Morse, Murray, Nichols, Palmer, Powell, Purviance, Reilly, Ricard, Roberts, Savage, Seales, Scott, Searing, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stanton, Stevenson, William Stewart, Tappan, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Ward, Warren, Watkins, Whiteley, Winslow, Wortendyke, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright.

Pending the call,

Mr. MOORE stated that his colleague, Mr. STALLWORTH, was detained from the House by sickness.

Mr. REAGAN stated that his colleague, Mr. BRYAN, had been detained at his room yesterday by sickness, and he presumed that his absence to-day was owing to the same cause.

A quorum of members having answered to their names,

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER moved that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

The question occurred on seconding the previous question on House bill No. 56.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and under its operation the bill was engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. BRANCH moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, asked for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

Mr. BRANCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

WAGON ROAD IN NEW MEXICO.

The next bill taken up was a bill (H. R. No. 479) making an appropriation for the construction of a wagon and emigrant road in the Territory of New Mexico, reported back from the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the sum of $100,000 be, and is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be expended in completing connected sections of the road extending from Albuquerque, in the Territory of New Mexico, westward, on the route to the Colorado river, on or near the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude.

Mr. REAGAN. The official report says that emigrants can travel that road at the rate of forty miles a day, without doubling teams.

The question was taken on the amendment; and it was agreed to.

Mr. BRANCH moved the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 64, nays 79; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Anderson, Arnold, Blair, Bliss, Bowie, Buffinton, Burlingame, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clawson, Clay, John Cochran, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Damrell, Dawes, Dimmick, Dodd, Edie, Florence, Foster, Gilman, Gooch, Greenwood, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Huyler, Kelsey, John C. Kunkel, Leidy, Lovejoy, MacLay, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Niblack, Olin, Pettit, Phelps, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Aaron Shaw, Spinner, Stanton, Stephens, Walton, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, and Wortendyke—64.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Atkins, Avery, Bennett, Bingham, Boyce, Branch, Case, Caskie, Chapman, Clemens, Covode, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Edmundson, Fenton, Foley, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Goodwin, Granger, Gregg, Thomas L. Harris, Hopkins, Howard, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Knapp, Leach, Leiter, Letcher, McQueen, Mason, Matteson, Miller, Millson, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Parker, Pendleton, Peyton, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Quitman, Reagan, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Searing, John Sherman, Singleton, William Smith, Stevenson, William Stewart, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Wood, and Zollicofer—79.

So the bill was rejected.

Pending the vote,

Mr. LEIDY stated that his colleague, Mr. DEWART, was detained from the House by indisposition.

Mr. SHORTER stated that he had paired off with Mr. McKIBBIN; and that Mr. McKIBBIN would have voted for, and himself against, the bill.

Mr. BRANCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ROADS IN WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

The next bill taken up was a bill (H. R. No. 58) for the completion of military roads in the Territory of Washington, reported back by the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, with the following amendment to be added to the bill:

And be it further enacted, That the sum of $15,000 be appropriated for the completion of the military road from Fort Vancouver to Fort Steilacoom, in the Territory of Washington.

Mr. BRANCH called for the previous question on the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I do not think we want military roads to hunt Indians. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 54, nays 99; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Andrews, Arnold,

Bennett, Billingshurst, Bliss, Bowie, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clay, Colfax, Comins, James Craig, Dawes, Dimmick, Farnsworth, Florence, Foster, Gillis, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Greenwood, Grow, Horton, Huyler, Kilgore, John C. Kunkel, Leach, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Edward Joy Morris, Niblack, Phelps, Ritchie, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Robert Smith, Stanton, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Walton, Israel Washburn, Watkins, White, Wilson, and Wortendyke—54.

NAYS—Messrs. Atkins, Avery, Bingham, Blair, Bocock, Boyce, Branch, Chaffee, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clemens, Cobb, Cockerill, Covode, Crawford, Curry, Damrell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Iowa, Dick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Edmundson, English, Fenton, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Granger, Gregg, Robert B. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Kelsey, Knapp, Leidy, Leiter, MacLay, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Millson, Moore, Morgan, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Peyton, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Quitman, Reagan, Ricard, Robbins, Royce, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Singleton, W. Sherman, Shorter, Singleton, William Smith, Spinner, Stevenson, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Trippe, Underwood, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Winslow, Wood, Woodson, Augustus R. Wright, and Zollicofer—99.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Has the morning hour expired?

The SPEAKER. It has not commenced.

Mr. CHAFFEE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was rejected; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope we shall dispose of these territorial bills.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I hope they will be postponed until some day next week.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I think the House has sufficiently indicated its purpose in reference to these bills, and we might as well dispose of the whole of them at once.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Some of the bills are of a different character from those on which we have acted, and I hope the House will pass them without the yeas and nays.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. MAYNARD, by unanimous consent, the Committee of Claims was discharged from the further consideration of the petition and papers of B. Maillefert; and the same were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

REPORT FROM COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER, by unanimous consent, laid before the House a report from the Court of Claims, accompanied by a bill for the relief of Richard Fitzpatrick; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of Claims, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to withdraw his motion for the present, and let the committees be called for the purpose of receiving reports of a private character.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Will that be the order of business if I withdraw my motion?

The SPEAKER. Not except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Then, I must insist on my motion.

Mr. QUITMAN. I would ask the gentleman to permit me to make some reports of a private nature, from the Committee on Military Affairs, for the purpose of having them placed upon the Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope unanimous consent will be given. I desire to report some private bills from the Committee on Commerce, for the purpose of having them placed upon the Private Calendar, and printed.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House to devote one hour to the call of committees for reports of a private nature?

Mr. MORGAN. I object.

Several MEMBERS. Withdraw the objection.

Mr. MORGAN. Well, I withdraw it.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEES.

No further objection being made, the Speaker proceeded to call the committees for reports of a private character, commencing with the call of the Committee of Claims for business relating to the Court of Claims.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the Committee of Claims, reported back, with a recommendation that they do pass, the following bills from the Court of Claims; which were severally referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying reports, ordered to be printed:

A bill (S. C. C. No. 184) for the relief of John Robb;

A bill from the Court of Claims for the relief of Michael Nourse;

A bill (H. R. C. C. No. 5) for the relief of John Robb; and

A bill (H. R. C. C. No. 12) for the relief of Moses Noble.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do pass, a bill (H. R. C. C. No. 2) for the relief of Asbury Dickins, which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House; and, with the accompanying report, together with the views of the minority of the committee, ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, reported back, with a recommendation that it do not pass, a bill (H. R. C. C. No. 11) for the relief of George A. Magruder; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SAN FRANCISCO MARINE HOSPITAL.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Would it be in order to report a bill not coming from the Committee of Claims?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time. The Committee of Claims will again be called in its order.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. Well, sir, I ask the consent of the House to report back a Senate bill to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the marine hospital at San Francisco, California, and that it may be considered at this time. It will take but a moment. It is a case of a peculiar nature and hardship. I hope there will be no objection.

There being no objection; the bill was reported back, and taken up for consideration.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California, upon principles of equity and justice, and to pay whatever may be found due him.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. The accounting officers of the Treasury were unable to settle the account of this contractor on account of the appropriation having been exhausted. This bill merely authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to settle his accounts and to pay him the money which may be found justly due him.

Mr. MORGAN. Is this discussion in order? I have no objection to the bill, but I do object to the time of the House being taken up by its being discussed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I will not trouble the House with any debate if there be no objection to the bill. If there be any objection, I wish to explain it.

Several MEMBERS. No objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

C. C. CARLTON.

Mr. GOODWIN, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of C. C. Carlton and others, of Cleveland, Ohio; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

LOOMIS L. LANGDON.

Mr. GOODWIN, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Loomis L. Langdon; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID M'CLURE.

Mr. GOODWIN, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of David McClure, administrator of Joseph McClure, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

HENRY HUBBARD.

Mr. GOODWIN, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 123) for the relief of Henry Hubbard; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT KIRKHAM.

Mr. GOODWIN, from the same committee, made an adverse report upon the memorial of Robert Kirkham; which was laid on the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

LEWIS H. BROADWELL.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for the relief of Lewis H. Broadwell; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS HASAM AND B. S. BREWSTER.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of Thomas Hasam and B. S. Brewster; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

LUTHER JEWETT.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 245) to settle the accounts of Luther Jewett, late collector for the district of Portland and Falmouth, Maine.

Mr. DAVIDSON. I ask that that bill may be put on its passage.

The bill was read in extenso. It provides for refunding to the said Jewett the sum of $1,000, lost on its transit to the sub-collector at Boston.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. DAVIDSON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

QUIETING LAND TITLES.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee of Claims, reported a bill for quieting certain land titles in the late disputed district in the State of Maine, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House; and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

THOMAS S. SPRAGUE.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on the petition of Thomas S. Sprague; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE A. O'BRIEN.

Mr. MAYNARD, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 92) for the relief of George A. O'Brien; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and ordered to be printed.

RUFUS DWINEL.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee of Claims, reported back Senate bill (No. 189) for the relief of Rufus Dwinel; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the bill and report ordered to be printed.

ISAIAH WOODWARD.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the Committee of Claims, reported adversely on the petition of Isaiah Woodward; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

CAPTAIN JOHN W. M'CRABBE.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 164) to provide for the settlement of the account of the late Captain John W. McCrabb, with a recommendation that the committee be discharged from its further consideration, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

It was so ordered.

JONAS P. KELLER.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 67) for the relief of Jonas P. Keller; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and the report ordered to be printed.

CHARLES H. VENABLE.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Charles H. Venable; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

BAILY AND DELORD.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported adversely on the petition of Baily & Delord; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

R. A. DAVIDGE.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois, from the same committee, reported a bill for the relief of R. A. Davidge; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN S. ISAACS.

On motion of Mr. JOHN COCHRANE, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John S. Isaacs, and that the same be laid upon the table.

CAPTAIN DOUGLAS OTTINGER.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill for the relief of Captain Douglas Ottinger; which was read a first and second time, referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. L. SHEARS.

On motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Commerce be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of A. L. Shears, of Omro, Wisconsin, and that the same be laid upon the table.

BOUNTY LAND WARRANTS.

On motion of Mr. COBB, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of sundry petitions in reference to bounty land warrants, and the same be laid upon the table.

ANNA M. E. RING.

Mr. COBB. I ask that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of the case of Anna M. E. Ring, and that it be laid upon the table. This case has been provided for by a law passed a few days ago. There is a land warrant amongst the papers which I ask be returned to the gentleman from South Carolina, [Mr. MILES,] who presented it with the papers to the House.

It was so ordered.

MONROE D. DOWNES.

Mr. COBB, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 426) for the relief of Monroe D. Downes, with an amendment.

Mr. C. said: Mr. Speaker, I have lately made many adverse reports on cases from Nebraska, and the Delegate from that Territory has, in consequence, become much discouraged. This case is that of one of his constituents, and I hope it will be at once put on its passage.

I will make a brief statement. On the 30th of March, 1857, Congress passed an act authorizing persons living on the sixteenth and thirty-sixth school sections, and who had settled there before the survey of the lands, to perfect their preemptions on making application within three months from the passage of the act.

Mr. MORGAN. Is discussion in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. COBB. The preëmptor in this case has lived upon the land for many years. Not knowing the law, however, he made his application a few days after the expiration of the time fixed in the law. The Department thinks that the bill is right, and the opinion of the Committee on Public Lands is, that it should pass. I ask that it be now put upon its passage. The amendment provides that he shall have the land upon which he has settled, if he makes application within three months after the passage of this act; and also authorizes other lands to be located for school purposes. The Delegate from Nebraska is anxious that the bill shall pass.

The bill and amendment were read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and having been engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

GEORGE M. GORDON.

Mr. COBB. I am directed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back Senate bill (No. 83) to vest the title of certain land warrants in George M. Gordon. I have taken up very little time of the House. I have made no Kansas speeches. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

Mr. SEWARD. I object to the bill.

Mr. COBB. Send it back here, then.

LAND GRANTS FOR RAILWAY PURPOSES.

Mr. COBB. The Committee on Public Lands are prepared to report against the following resolution referred to, them:

Resolved, That the communication of the Secretary of the Interior in reply to the resolution of the House of the 16th instant, calling for information in regard to the amount of land certified to the State of Iowa for building a railroad from Dubuque to Sioux City, and a certain branch therein named, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and that they be instructed to inquire into all facts in relation to building the said branch of the said road, whether the main trunk of said road has been completed beyond the point of intersection of the said branch, and whether the said branch has been completed in conformity with the provisions of the act of Congress, and if not, to report such action to the House as may be deemed expedient and proper in the premises.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I object to that report coming in now. I want to develop some of the facts in the case for the information of the House.

REBECCA M. BOWDEN.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Rebecca M. Bowden, of Prince George county, Virginia; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I ask that that bill be put on its passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. KELSEY. I think that the law passed the other day provides for that case.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. It does not. It is for a poor widow in the State of Virginia.

[Cries of "Pass it!"]

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and, being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

RAILROAD GRANTS.

Mr. HILL, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on the petitions of Ashburn Regan, and others, in reference to grants of land for railroad purposes in Missouri, which were laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

ANTOINE BAUBIEN.

Mr. WALBRIDGE, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported adversely on the petition of Antoine Baubien; which was laid upon the table, and the report ordered to be printed.

JOHN M'NEIL.

Mr. WALBRIDGE, from the same committee, reported back Senate bill (No. 100) releasing to the legal representatives of John McNeil, deceased, all title of the United States to a certain tract of land, with an amendment; which was referred to a Committee of the Whole House, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ISAAC DREW AND OTHERS.

Mr. BENNETT, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill for the relief of Isaac Drew and others, settlers upon the public lands in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. BENNETT. I ask that the bill be put upon its passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move that the bill be referred to a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I hope there will be no objection to the consideration of the bill now. If the gentleman from Mississippi will hear one word of explanation, I am sure that he will raise no objection to it. I will state that this bill is for the benefit of sundry poor men who have settled by accident on the public lands in Wisconsin. It happened in this way: Wisconsin was entitled to five hundred thousand acres of land when she became a State. In making the selection, some forty thousand acres were selected more than the State was entitled to. While those forty thousand acres were supposed to belong to the State of Wisconsin, sundry persons settled upon them. When the case came to be adjudicated by the General Land Office, those selections were rejected, leaving the persons who had settled upon the lands without remedy. This bill allows them, as they have settled upon the lands in good faith, a right of preemption upon the lands thus settled upon. I will state that the bill has been submitted to the Commissioner of the General Land Office and meets entirely with his approval, and I hope there will be no objection to it.

Mr. BRANCH. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire if this is a private bill.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. It is a bill for the relief of Isaac Drew and others.

Mr. BRANCH. Yes, but it embraces a very large class.

The SPEAKER. The bill seems to be a public and a private one—both.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, if it is a mongrel bill, I reckon it is not in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the objection comes too late, the bill having been read twice.

Mr. QUITMAN. My objection to the bill was this. I was unable to hear it read, and I will not vote for any measure which I do not distinctly understand. I am satisfied with the explanation of the gentleman from Wisconsin, and withdraw my motion.

Mr. LETCHER. As I understand it, this bill proposes to confirm these locations, and the parties will get the lands on the lines of railroads for $1 25 an acre instead of $2 50. Will they not?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. They will get the lands at the minimum price.

Mr. LETCHER. Ought it not to be $2 50?

Mr. COBB. If the lands are within six miles of the road the minimum price is $2 50 an acre.

Mr. LETCHER. That is not in the bill.

Mr. COBB. That is the price they will have to pay when they go to enter the lands.

Mr. LETCHER. The bill states at the minimum price.

Mr. COBB. The committee had this subject under consideration, and supposed that the minimum price of the lands within six miles of the road was $2 50 an acre.

Mr. LETCHER. Well, I want the $2 50 put in the bill.

Mr. COBB. There is no objection to putting it in, but it is not necessary.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I will state that the bill, as reported, meets the entire approval of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. The minimum price of the lands lying within six miles of the road is fixed by law at $2 50.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire how long these people have been on the lands?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Some of them four or five years, and some of them longer.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Were they on the lands before the railroad grants were made?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Most assuredly they were.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Well, then, I hope they will not be made to pay $2 50 an acre for their lands.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I hope not, either.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think that, to say the least of it, it is very improper and unjust.

Mr. LETCHER. You are beginning to see the color of the animal now.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. I move the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed, and read a third time.

Mr. LETCHER. Has the bill been engrossed?

The SPEAKER. It has not.

Mr. LETCHER. Then I object to the third reading.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I believe the question is, "When shall the bill have its third reading?" and the House can now fix the time.

The SPEAKER. The House has already ordered it to be engrossed and read a third time; but the gentleman from Virginia objects to its being read a third time now, as it has not yet been engrossed.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin. Well, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and upon that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 25, nays 118; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Avery, Bowie, John B. Clark, Curry, English, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Thomas L. Harris, Jackson, Jenkins, Landy, Leidy, Millson, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Phillips, Sandidge, Scott, Searing, Seward, Singleton, George Taylor, and White—25.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Atkins, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Branch, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Caskey, Chaffee, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cox, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Dammell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dimmick, Dodd, Dowdell, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garrett, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Gregg, Grow, Robert B. So the House refused to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, stated that he had paired off for the day with Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. FARNSWORTH stated that he had been requested to announce that Mr. GIDDINGS had paired off for the rest of the session with Mr. WARREN.

The bill, being now engrossed, was read the third time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, moved the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. LETCHER. I demand the yeas and nays upon the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 109, nays 38; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clay, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Colfax, Comins, Covode, Cragin, Curtis, Dammell, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dimmick, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garrett, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Wright, and Zollcoffer—38.

So the bill was passed.

Pending the call of the roll,

Mr. McQUEEN stated that he understood in committee that the word "minimum" in the bill meant $2 50 per acre for the reserved sections of land. With that understanding, he voted "ay."

Mr. COBB. That was the unanimous understanding of the committee. That is the principle they have adopted.

Mr. SCALES stated that, if he had been within the bar when his name was called, he should have voted "no."

Mr. WASHBURN, of Wisconsin, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. CHAFFEE moved that the rules be suspended, and that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House, (Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the Private Calendar.

This being, under the order of Monday last, objection day, the Calendar was read over, and the bills to which no objections were made were laid aside to be reported to the House.

CYRUS H. M'CORMICK.

An adverse report (H. R. C. C. No. 11) upon the petition of Cyrus H. McCormick. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

Mr. GROW. I would suggest that this bill be laid aside, to be reported to the House with the recommendation that the decision of the Court of Claims be confirmed.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. The parties interested in this case prefer that it should remain on the Calendar.

WILLIAM NEILL AND OTHERS.

An adverse report (H. R. C. C. No. 30) upon the petition of William Neill and others. [Objected to by Mr. GREENWOOD.]

CHARLES J. INGERSOLL.

A bill (H. R. No. 197) for the relief of Charles J. Ingersoll. [Objected to by Mr. KELSEY.]

BARCLAY AND LIVINGSTON, AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 204) to refund to Barclay & Livingston, and others, duties on certain goods destroyed by fire in the city of New York, on the 19th day of July, 1845. [Objected to by Mr. CLEMENS.]

HENRY LEEF AND JOHN M'KEE.

A bill (H. R. No. 206) to indemnify Henry Leef and John McKee for illegal seizure of a certain bark. [Objected to by Mr. MILLSON.]

WILLIAM HEINE.

A bill (H. R. No. 219) for the relief of William Heine, artist in the Japan expedition. [Objected to by Mr. EUSTIS.]

ELIPHALET BROWN, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 220) for the relief of Eliphalet Brown, jr. [Objected to by Mr. EUSTIS.]

MARY BAINBRIDGE.

A bill (H. R. No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge.

The bill was read. It provides that the name of Mary Bainbridge, of Massachusetts, be placed upon the pension list of the United States, at the rate of thirty dollars per month, commencing June 1, 1857, and to continue during her natural life.

The report states that Colonel Henry Bainbridge entered the service of the United States as a cadet of the Military Academy at West Point, in 1817, graduated in 1821 as lieutenant of infantry, and from that time to the 1st day of June, 1857, a period of thirty-six years, was constantly engaged in the active duties of his profession, as an officer of the Army of the United States; that the records of the War Department furnish the most gratifying testimony to his faithful services during all this period of time, at the remote posts of the western frontier, in the wars of Florida and Mexico; that for his distinguished services in Mexico, having taken part in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and being wounded in the storming of Monterey, while charging at the head of his command; with the division of General Scott at Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, (he headed the storming column,) Contreras, Churubusco, Molino del Rey, and at the city of Mexico—for all these distinguished services he received two brevets in succession; that this distinguished soldier met his death on the steamer Louisiana, in Galveston bay, on the morning of the 1st of June, 1857; and that his widow, after all these distinguished services and this tragic act, is left in indigent circumstances.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH E. V. FIELD.

A bill (H. R. No. 222) for the relief of Elizabeth E. V. Field.

The bill directs that the name of Elizabeth E. V. Field, widow of the late George P. Field, then a captain in the Army of the United States, be placed on the roll of invalid pensions, at the rate of twenty-five dollars per month, commencing September 21, 1851, to continue during her natural life.

From the report, it appears that Captain Field was killed while serving with his regiment, on the 21st September, 1846, at the battle of Monterey, in Mexico, leaving the petitioner, his widow, and a son now eight years old, unprovided with any suitable means of subsistence; that under the act of Congress, approved 22d February, 1849, she received a sum equal to his half pay, (twenty dollars per month,) which enabled her to support herself and son; but this resource has failed since September last, by the expiration of the law. It also appears that her paternal grandfather was a colonel in the revolutionary war, and at its close breveted brigadier general; that her father entered the Army in 1812, and remained in it until his death, which occurred at New Orleans, July 15, 1845, a period of thirty-three years. His son, a brother to the petitioner, was a lieutenant in the third infantry, served in Florida, and died on his way home, of disease contracted by exposure. That the said Captain Field graduated at West Point in 1834; was in Florida during the war, and participated in the battles of Palo Alto, Resaca de la Palma, and Monterey, and had but four months' leave of absence while he held his commission. Her petition states that in making this application for a small stipend from the Government of her country, she cannot feel that she is soliciting individual charity; she feels that she is but urging an equitable claim for subsistence for herself and child, after having surrendered to that country a husband, father, and brother.

Mr. LETCHER. When does that pension commence?

Mr. CHAFFEE. In 1851.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I would like to hear some reason why this pension should date back five years, when, if I understand the statement of this report, she has been receiving half pay until within a few months.

Mr. CHAFFEE. That will of course be deducted.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hold that no debate can be entertained in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection, the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House. If there is objection, the committee will pass to the consideration of the next case.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I shall object, unless I can hear some reason why this pension should date back.

A MEMBER. Move to amend.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Very well. I move to amend by striking out that clause which gives the bill a retroactive effect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is it not in order to inquire about the facts of the case, so that the committee may act upon it understandingly?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will not entertain that species of debate which springs from a system of questions and answers. The committee is acting under a special order, which reads thus:

"There shall be no debate in Committee of the Whole; but the bills which are not objected to shall be reported to the House for final action."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want to know the facts about the bill.

Mr. QUITMAN. It is with a great deal of reluctance that I feel myself compelled to interfere with a bill of this kind, affecting as it does the family of this deceased officer. But, sir, I am determined to act upon principle, and therefore I am determined that no distinction shall be made between officers, or widows of officers of the same grade. Now, sir, the utmost that is allowed to widows of officers of this grade is twenty dollars per month. Now, sir, if a distinction is to be made between officers for service, let it be made by a general bill, and do not make the distinction in this way. I move to amend the bill by striking out "twenty-five dollars," where it occurs, and to insert "twenty dollars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

KATHARINE K. RUSSELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 223) for the relief of Katharine K. Russell. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

STEPHEN BUNNELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell.

The bill was read in extenso. It directs that the name of Stephen Bunnell, of the State of Indiana, a sergeant major of the war of 1812, be placed upon the list of pensioners of the United States for and during his natural life, at the rate of fifteen dollars per month, to commence and be computed from and after January 1, 1855.

The report states that the Adjutant General having certified that the said petitioner served as quartermaster's sergeant in the artillery corps of the United States Army for five years, from March, 1812, to March, 1817, the committee have examined into the merits of his claim, and find them as follows:

Mr. Bunnell testifies, under oath, that he entered the Army in robust health; that his physical powers were broken down by arduous service and exposure in his specially hazardous line of duty; and that now, in his old age, with his constitution broken down, being unable, from his failure to claim a discharge when sick, and from the death of his captain and comrades since, to furnish the evidence required at the Pension bureau, he applies to Congress for its recognition. It appears that he was the first who landed at the taking of Fort George, shared in the capture of Queens-town Heights, participated in the battle of Stony Creek, lying on the wet ground at nights with the rest of the army on their march thither, which caused him such a fit of sickness as to confine him for many months in the hospital at Youngstown. Although this sickness has impaired his system ever since, he recovered sufficiently to again join the army, and to man the gun under his charge at the battle of Chippewa. At Lundy's Lane, his captain being slain and his lieutenant wounded, he took command, under direction of General Scott, of the last gun left to his company, and kept it in operation till he had but one man left, and his ammunition was exhausted, when he succeeded in getting the gun from the field of battle. At Fort Erie he was honored with a command above his rank, namely, of a battery in a specially exposed condition, in front of the gate of the fort; and by its discharges, after the fort had been taken by the enemy, blew it up, discomfiting the whole British detachment. He was wounded in the wrist at Chippewa, and at Fort Shelby was badly injured in the shoulder by a fall, occasioned by rotten timber in a bridge; but had never claimed a pension on account of those injuries, not deeming, at the time, that he would ever need it. Such a record of faithful and important service to his country certainly deserves the recognition, as well as the relief, which the granting of a pension would afford.

Corroborating this statement are affidavits of Samuel Bunnell and Elizabeth Marsh, who depose that the claimant entered the army in good health, but has been in impaired health ever since; another from S. M. Bishop, that since 1820 the claimant has not been able to perform a full day's work; the affidavits of eminent physicians, corroborating his statement, and certifying that he cannot perform one third of a day's work in a day, and not even that without great pain; the vouchers of Hon. N. Eddy and Hon. C. W. Cathcart, former members of Congress from his district; and, finally, a strong recommendation in his behalf from Lieutenant-General Winfield Scott, his old commander.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLOTTE BUTLER.

A bill (H. R. No. 226) for the relief of Charlotte Butler. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

J. M. PLUMMER AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 227) for the relief of Joseph

M. Plummer and Mary R. Plummer, minor children of Captain Samuel M. Plummer. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

HENRY TAYLOR.

A bill (H. R. No. 228) for the relief of Henry Taylor. [Objected to by Mr. JEWETT.]

SAMUEL GOODRICH, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 229) for the relief of Samuel Goodrich, jr. [Objected to by Mr. REAGAN.]

MARY BENNETT.

A bill (H. R. No. 230) for the relief of Mary Bennett. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

NANCY SERENA.

A bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Nancy Serena.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Nancy Serena, widow of Joseph Serena, deceased, on the pension roll, and pay her at the rate of — dollars per month, commencing June 15, 1854, and to continue during her natural life or widowhood.

It appears from the report that the petitioner is the widow of Joseph Serena, who was a private in Captain Craig's company Pennsylvania militia in the war of 1812. While in the service, and from exposure therein, her husband became an invalid, and as such was allowed a pension under the laws of the United States. He died from the disease thus contracted in 1834, about the 15th of June. It having been settled that the husband was an invalid, and as such entitled to relief, and it being quite clear from the evidence that the same disease which rendered him an invalid ultimately caused his death, the committee are of opinion that his widow is entitled to relief, and they therefore report the bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. LEITER. I move to fill the blanks in the bill with "eight" dollars per month.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I understand there is a general law now pending in the House which will regulate that matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. No, sir.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARGARET WHITEHEAD.

A bill (H. R. No. 232) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Margaret Whitehead, widow of William Whitehead, a boatswain in the United States Navy, on the pension roll, and cause to be paid to her the sum of ten dollars per month, from the 9th of April, 1854, and to continue during her natural life or widowhood.

It appears from the report that the petitioner is the widow of William Whitehead, deceased, who was a boatswain in the United States Navy: while engaged, under orders, in removing some cannon and balls at Old Point, he received a strain in the groin, resulting in hernia, and he died of strangulated hernia and hydrocele, April 9, 1854. The committee are of opinion that the petitioner is entitled to relief, and therefore report the bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

SYLVANUS BURNHAM.

A bill (H. R. No. 233) for the relief of Sylvanus Burnham. [Objected to by Mr. REAGAN.]

JOHN HOPPER.

A bill (H. R. No. 280) for the relief of John Hopper. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

JOHN A. HOPPER.

A bill (H. R. No. 237) for the relief of the heirs of John A. Hopper. [Objected to by Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana.]

RICHARD TARVIN.

A bill (H. R. No. 238) for the relief of the heirs of Richard Tarvin. [Objected to by Mr. REAGAN.]

ZINA WILLIAMS.

A bill (H. R. No. 239) for the relief of Zina Williams. [Objected to by Mr. CURRY.]

BRIG GENERAL ARMSTRONG.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 149) upon the petition of the claimants of the brig General Armstrong.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I move that this report be laid aside, to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object.

The report was passed over.

BENJAMIN F. HALL.

A bill (H. R. No. 244) for the relief of Benjamin F. Hall. [Objected to by Mr. RUSSELL.]

BAUDOUIN AND ROBERTS.

A bill (H. R. No. 245) for the relief of A. Baudouin and A. D. Roberts. [Objected to by Mr. HAWKINS.]

NANCY D. HOLKAR.

A bill (H. R. No. 249) for the relief of Nancy D. Holkar.

Mr. COX. I move that the bill be reported back to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass. I have received information since the report was presented which satisfies me that the report was a mistake.

Mr. LEITER. I object.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Is it in order to object, after a motion to report with a recommendation that it do not pass?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so considers. The motion indicates a final disposition of the case, and the Chair considers that the special order of the House is, that a final disposition shall not be come to where there is objection.

Mr. STANTON. The motion itself is an objection, and the bill must be passed over.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not so consider it. The rule is, that if there be any objection at all to the final disposition of a bill, it shall not be considered.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. If the gentleman will allow me to state one word, I think he will withdraw his objection.

Mr. LEITER. If there is to be no discussion, I withdraw my objection; if there is to be, I will not withdraw it.

Mr. POTTLE. I renew the objection.

JOHN R. TEMPLE.

An act (S. No. 38) for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana.

The bill confirms John R. Temple in his title to a tract of land, containing six hundred and seventy arpents, lying and being within what is known as the "Baron de Bastrop grant," on the east side of Bayou Bartholomew, and more particularly described in a plat and survey executed on the 19th and 20th of January, 1855, by Henry Curtis, parish surveyor for the parish of Morehouse, in Louisiana; and being all that part of two certain tracts of land, not heretofore confirmed to any other claimant, as follows, to wit: a tract of land sold and conveyed by the heirs of Morehouse to George Hook, by deed dated December 10, 1814; and a certain other tract conveyed by Abraham Morehouse to Jacob Stroop, son of George Stroop, by deed dated December 10, 1812.

The second section enacts that the Commissioner of the General Land Office, upon the receipt of a plat and survey of the land hereby confirmed, executed by the proper officer, shall cause a patent to be issued therefor to the said John Temple; provided, however, that such patent shall only operate as a relinquishment of title on the part of the United States, and shall not affect the rights of any third person.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that the claim of John R. Temple was not filed with the commissioners under the act of 1851, providing for the adjustment of private land claims in the Baron de Bastrop grant, on the ground, as he alleges in his memorial, that he believed his claim was confirmed with the Bonaventure claim, which it adjoins. The committee find a regular chain of title from Morehouse to John R. Temple. The claimant and the persons under whom he holds, have been in uninterrupted possession of a part of the lands since 1807, and the remainder since 1812 and 1814, and the same has been inhabited and cultivated from those dates, respectively, up to this time. Two affidavits, accompanying the papers, show that the lands have been inhabited and cultivated for more than twenty years. The committee are unanimously of the opinion that if this claim had been presented to the commissioners under the act of 1851, with the proofs now before the committee, such commissioners would have recommended this claim for confirmation. The omission of the memorialist to present his claim to the commissioners ought not, in the opinion of the committee, to defeat the rights of the claimant under the act of 1851; they therefore report a bill to confirm the memorialist in his title to six hundred and seventy arpents of land, being the tract which he holds by a regular chain of title from Morehouse, and upon which he now resides.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

PIERRE GAGNON.

A bill (H. R. No. 250) for the relief of Pierre Gagnon, of Natchitoches, Louisiana.

The bill allows Pierre Gagnon to enter and pay for his preemption claim to the northeast and southeast fractional quarters of section seven, in township nine north, of range six west, containing about one hundred and eighty-nine acres, in the land office of Natchitoches, Louisiana, and that a patent issue therefor as in ordinary cases; provided, however, that this right of entry, nor any patent issued under it, shall prejudice any valid adverse claim, should such exist.

The report was read, and is as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the memorial of Pierre Gagnon, of Louisiana, report:

That, as per statement of the register of the land office at Natchitoches, Louisiana, Mr. Gagnon filed in that office on the 28th of May, 1836, his proof of a preemption claim to certain lands.

The memorialist states "that he has repeatedly offered to pay for the same, but that payment has been refused to be received, on the ground that there was a claim thereto by one Lewis Moreno; which claim, he alleges, is entirely fictitious and a fraud, no such man having lived in that section of country, as can be proved by competent witnesses who have resided in the vicinity of said land for more than sixty years."

This statement by Mr. Gagnon is indorsed and corroborated by thirty-two of the best citizens of that neighborhood.

The Commissioner of the Land Office, in his response to a call made by the committee for any information to be furnished by his department touching the case in question, says, "that no objection is perceived to the passage of an act relinquishing the title of the United States in favor of the claimant (Gagnon,) and specifying in such act that no preexisting right or valid adverse claim which may exist should be prejudiced thereby."

In view of these facts, and that for more than twenty years no attempt has been made to establish the claim standing in the name of Moreno, your committee see no reason why Gagnon, who has lived on and cultivated a portion of the land during all that time, should not now be allowed to make payment therefor, and receive title as suggested by the Commissioner of the Land Office, and herewith report a bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

JOHN HUERTAS.

A bill (H. R. No. 251) to authorize the claimants in right of John Huertas to enter certain lands in Florida.

The bill authorizes the claimants in right of John Huertas to a tract of six thousand acres in Florida, confirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States at the January term in 1834, to enter, at any land office in Florida, three thousand three hundred and thirty-two acres and thirty hundredths of an acre of any of the public lands in that State offered or unoffered, the same being in addition to the area of two thousand six hundred and sixty-seven acres and seventy hundredths of an acre surveyed for said claim, and designated as section forty-eight, in township nine south, of range twenty-seven east, in the St. Augustine land district, Florida, and being the difference between the quantity embraced by the survey and the six thousand acres confirmed for the claim; and the register and receiver of any of the land offices shall receive the proper applications and proofs, and shall issue the necessary certificate; upon the return of which to the General Land Office, with satisfactory proof of the rights of the claimants, a patent shall issue for the lands so located.

Mr. COBB. I move to amend by inserting a provision that the lands shall not be located within six miles of any railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The report was read. It appears thereby that after the acquisition of Florida, in 1819, various acts were passed by Congress for the adjustment of private land claims within the ceded Territory, but the tribunals authorized to decide them were not authorized to settle any which exceeded one league square; on those claims exceeding that quantity they were directed to report especially their opinion for the further action of Congress. By the sixth section of the act of the 22d May, 1828, all those claims exceeding the one league were, upon petition of the claimants, to be adjudicated by the judges of the superior court of the district in which the land was situated. The memorialist shows that on the 24th December, 1817, Don José Coppinger, Governor of Florida, for reasons stated, granted to John Huertas fifteen thousand acres of land in absolute property; and that on the 24th April, 1824, the land commissioners recommended to Congress, for confirmation, the claim of Francis J. Avíce to six thousand acres of land, in certain locality, being a portion of the fifteen thousand granted to Huertas. (See State Papers, vol. 4, page 450.) On this recommendation, accompanied by petition, final judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States was delivered by Chief Justice Marshall, (8 Peters, page 488,) confirming the decision of the superior court of East Florida in favor of the claimants under Huertas to the six thousand acres mentioned by memorialist, to be located in conformity with the original grant, &c., &c. Under this mandate, the surveyor general of Florida, in 1850, located at the proper place two thousand six hundred and sixty-seven acres and seventy hundredths of an acre of the six thousand acres; balance being located elsewhere.

Dissatisfied with this failure to locate the whole amount in accordance with the decree of the Supreme Court, the parties in interest obtained an order from the United States district court in Florida for its rejection, in so far as it failed to conform to that decree; and a new survey was ordered by the court. This last order has not been carried out by the Land Office department, because its execution might interfere with claims of other persons, made in good faith, after the first erroneous survey, and whose claims would be embraced by the extension of the two thousand six hundred and sixty-seven acre tract, so as to make it six thousand acres. Himself unwilling to disturb settlers in good faith, the present claimant is willing to take other Government land to make up the deficiency. In response to a communication from the committee, asking for any information to be furnished by his department in reference to this claim, the Commissioner of the Land Office says:

"The bill to authorize the claimants in right of John Huertas to enter certain lands in Florida, which is herewith returned, is approved by this office, and deemed an act of justice to the claimants. Although it is customary in cases of this kind for this office to recommend the restriction of such grants to lands subject to private entry, that rule is departed from in the present instance, and the location allowed on any lands in the State, offered or unoffered, in consideration of the difficulty of finding in the class subject to entry land of a quality equal to that of which the claimants have been deprived."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

CARONDELET CITY.

A bill (H. R. No. 133) for the relief of the city of Carondelet.

The bill requires the Secretary of the Interior to cause to be issued to the city of Carondelet warrants to be located on any public land subject to private entry, equal in amount, according to the minimum price of such lands, to the actual cash value at the time of sale, of so much of the tract of land lying in the county of St. Louis, Missouri, heretofore gratuitously conveyed to the United States by that city for military purposes, near Jefferson barracks, and which has been excluded from the Jefferson barracks tract, and disposed of by the United States.

The report was read, and is as follows:

The Committee on Private Land Claims, to whom was referred the bill for the relief of the city of Carondelet, report:

That, by the first section of the act of June 13, 1812, entitled "An act to make further provision for settling the claims to land in the Territory of Missouri," it is provided that "the rights, titles, and claims to town lots, out lots, common field lots, and commons in, adjoining and belonging to the several towns or villages of Portage de Sioux, St. Charles, St. Louis, St. Ferdinand, Village à Robert, Carondelet, Ste. Genevieve, New Madrid, New Bourbon, Little Prairie, and Arkansas, in the Territory of Missouri, which lots have been inhabited, cultivated, or possessed, prior to the 20th of December, 1803, shall be, and the same are hereby, confirmed to the inhabitants of the respective towns or villages aforesaid, according to their several right or rights in common thereto."

This act vested a complete title in the lots, commons, &c., in the individuals and communities referred to in it.—(Guitard vs. Stoddard, 16 Howard, p. 592.) As, however, the extent of the grants thus made were not clearly known, it was provided that surveys should be made by the United States surveyors, which, when accepted by the confinee, was conclusive against the United States that the land granted was the same thus designated by the officers of the United States. Accordingly, such a survey was made of the commons of Carondelet in 1817, by Elias Rector, which was retraced by Joseph C. Brown in 1834, and the survey duly recorded in the office of the surveyor general at St. Louis.

In 1826, the town authorities of Carondelet granted to the United States a part of their commons, "so long as it may be found useful for military purposes." And it was under this authority, and without any other claim at that time, that the United States took possession and erected Jefferson barracks, as appears by a letter from General Atkinson, late of the United States Army, dated 7th August, 1839, to Mr. Poinsett. The authorities of Carondelet, in 1839, having denied the right of their predecessors in 1826 to make such a grant, the question of the extent of the commons of Carondelet was taken before the General Land Office, and in 1840 the Commissioner of the General Land Office disapproved of the survey made twenty-three years before; and, on the 16th November of that year, Mr. Poinsett ordered General Atkinson to have a survey, to include one thousand seven hundred and two acres, made. This was done, and the survey was sent to the General Land Office, with a request that the Commissioner would have the survey noted in his office as a reservation of public land for military purposes; which was accordingly done. The survey of their commons having been thus set aside, the inhabitants of Carondelet could neither enforce any right against the United States, or others, in possession of the land; and to relieve themselves from this condition and procure the reestablishment of their survey, they made a deed to the United States for the land lying within it which had been thus reserved for military purposes, and thereupon, in pursuance of instructions from the Secretary of the Interior, the survey was approved on the 8th October, 1855, excluding therefrom the Jefferson barracks survey of one thousand seven hundred and two acres.

The commons, as shown by the survey as now approved, includes the whole of the military reserve, and it is therefore apparent that the only title of the United States to this reserve is that derived altogether from Carondelet; whether it was proper to extort the conveyance from the inhabitants of Carondelet in the manner exhibited by the facts above recited, it is not necessary here to inquire. The question presented for the consideration of the committee was, whether, after thus obtaining a deed for this land without consideration, the possession of which was originally obtained from Carondelet for military purposes, the United States could properly sell immediately a part of it without making compensation to Carondelet for the portion so sold, and which was found unnecessary for the purpose for which it was conveyed to the Government. About one hundred acres of this land were thus disposed of, and it was the opinion of the committee that this portion of the land should have been restored to the people of Carondelet. A purchaser, with notice of such facts, would acquire no title. The land would revert to the donor when the donee undertook to alienate or use it for a different purpose than that to which it was to be devoted by the express terms of the grant. But in this case the records did not give notice, and the people of Carondelet have therefore no title to the specific land, but can rightfully claim of the Government other land of equal value.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY JEMISON.

A bill (H. R. No. 252) for the relief of the heirs of Mary Jemison, deceased. [Objected to by Mr. REAGAN.]

JOHN J. BULOW, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 253) for the relief of the heirs of John J. Bulow, jr., deceased. [Objected to by Mr. MORGAN.]

WILLIAM HUTCHENSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchinson.

The bill instructs the Secretary of War to pay to William Hutchinson $150, in full settlement of his claim for compensation for services as a spy during the late war with Great Britain; and that that sum be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

It appears from the report that the petitioner was a private in the company of Captain Noah Forrest, which went from Harrison county, in the State of Kentucky, during the late war with Great Britain, and served in the northwest in the regiment commanded by Colonel Butler. By the order of the said Colonel Butler, a company of spies were organized, and a promise was made to the men who composed it that, in addition to their regular pay, they should receive, for their services as spies, the compensation of one dollar per day. The petitioner became a member of that company, and was employed in the duty assigned it for a period of five months, but has not as yet received any portion of the compensation so promised. The committee recommend that the petitioner be paid for his said service the sum of $150, being at the rate of one dollar per day for the period he was so employed, and report a bill accordingly.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

THOMAS PHENIX, JR.

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Thomas Phenix, jr., late paymaster's clerk in the service of the United States. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

OLIVER P. HOVEY.

A bill (H. R. No. 255) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Oliver P. Hovey, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, $1,555 compensation for printing the Kearny code of laws for New Mexico in 1846.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

HENRY E. READ.

A bill (H. R. No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes.

The bill raises the half pension heretofore allowed to Henry E. Read, of Kentucky, a non-commissioned officer in the Mexican war, to thirteen dollars a month.

The second section enacts that the benefits accruing to Henry E. Read, under and by virtue of this act, shall commence March 3, 1848, and continue for and during his natural life.

It appears from the report that Sergeant Read entered the army intended for the invasion of Mexico, in Louisville, Kentucky, in the spring of 1847; that he was in every battle fought by the American arms from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico; and until he fell desperately wounded in the abdomen, in the right shoulder and right arm, at the storming of Chapultepec; that his conduct in every engagement was that of a truly courageous citizen soldier, until his fall at the storming of Chapultepec, with the colors of his regiment in his hands, on the 13th of September, 1847. The committee further report that Sergeant Read's profession or calling before he entered the Army, was that of a blacksmith; and that he has been compelled, by the wounds received in the defense of his country, to abandon his trade; and that he is wholly unable to perform manual labor, and is in that condition at this time. The committee further report that Sergeant Read was honorably discharged from the service in the city of Mexico, while in the hospital, where he lingered for seven months, and had ultimately to find his way home as best he could.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

AUGUSTUS J. KUHN.

A bill (H. R. No. 258) for the relief of Augustus J. Kuhn. [Objected to by Mr. JEWETT.]

ISAAC CARPENTER.

A bill (H. R. No. 260) for the relief of Isaac Carpenter.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Isaac Carpenter, of New York, upon the invalid pension list, at the rate of eight dollars per month, commencing on the 10th of June, 1856, to continue during his natural life.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that the petitioner was a soldier in the war of 1812, from September, 1813, till the spring of 1815, about eight months of which time he was an ensign, and the residue a lieutenant in the fortieth regiment United States infantry. That in the spring of 1814 he marched with a detachment of his regiment from Boston, Massachusetts, to Eastport, Maine, a distance of about five hundred miles, in thirty days; that the march was through deep mud all the way, and storms most of the time; that on the last day but one he marched fourteen or sixteen miles knee-deep through snow, mud, and water, when, having fell and hurt himself, he was seized with an attack of rheumatism, and was sent on to Eastport in a schooner, with some other invalids who were not able to proceed by land. He was there taken prisoner, and released on his parole, and returned to his native town in Massachusetts, sick with a fever. His physician's bills while there were paid by the Government. Since that time he has had fever and rheumatism, and been compelled to give up labor at his trade. For the last two years he has been wholly unable to work, in consequence of frequent attacks of those complaints. It is the opinion of the physicians and surgeons whom he has consulted, and whose affidavits to that effect are on file, that those diseases were fastened on his constitution by that severe march from Boston to Eastport. He is old, infirm, and unable to work, and now, after such protracted suffering for services rendered his country, the committee are of opinion that he should be placed on the pension list.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

LEONARD LOOMIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Leonard Loomis.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to raise the pension of Leonard Loomis from six to eight dollars per month, and to pay him such increased pension from the 9th of August, 1857.

The report was read. It appears therefrom that the petitioner was disabled in the war of 1812, by a disease called scrofula hernia, while in the line of his duty, hauling heavy timber up a steep bank, at Fort Oswego, and was discharged under a certificate of disability in the spring of 1812; that by an act of Congress, approved June, 1838, he was placed on the pension list, on account of such disability, at the rate of six dollars per month; that since then his disease has continued with increased pain and debility, and that he is now old, poor, and unable to labor. He asks that his pension be raised to eight dollars per month. The committee consider it just that his prayer should be granted.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

HECTOR ST. JOHN BEATLY.

A bill (H. R. No. 262) for the relief of Hector St. John Beatly. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

HENRIETTA S. CLARK.

A bill (H. R. No. 263) for the relief of Henrietta S. Clark. [Objected to by Mr. LEITER.]

THOMAS ALLCOCK.

A bill (H. R. No. 264) granting a pension to Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, New York.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Thomas Allcock, of Rochester, New York, upon the invalid pension roll, at a rate of eight dollars per month, to commence on the 1st of July, 1852, and to continue during his natural life.

It appears from the report, that the memorialist was a private in company F, third artillery, in the Army of the United States, and was stationed at Fort Pierce, on Indian river, in East Florida, during the Florida war; that on or about the 6th day of July, 1839, the said Allcock, whilst discharging the duty of a sentry, was struck by the sun to the ground, and was totally blind for the space of six days; that since that time he has been, time and again, laid up, by reason of the disease of his eyes; and that now he is using artificial pupils, one of which enables him to see objects at a short distance, and the other is entirely useless. For this permanent injury to his eyes, rendering them perfectly useless for the remainder of his life, received in the service of his country, the committee think he is justly entitled, in some degree, to the consideration of his Government. The committee, therefore, looking at the completeness of his proof, fully establishing the fact of his service and the extent of his injuries, have concluded to recommend that a pension be allowed to the petitioner, dating back from the 1st of July, 1852, the period of the first application of the petitioner for a pension.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY W. THOMPSON.

A bill (H. R. No. 265) for the relief of Mary

W. Thompson. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

WILLIAM YORK.

A bill (H. R. No. 266) for the relief of the heirs of William York. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

TIMOTHY L. O'KEEFE.

A bill (H. R. No. 267) for the relief of Timothy L. O'Keefe, of Missouri. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

WILLIAM CRAMPTON.

A bill (H. R. No. 268) extending the patent granted to William Crampton, for an improvement in figure and fancy power-looms, for seven years from the 25th day of November, 1858. [Objected to by Mr. PHILLIPS.]

DAVID BRUCE.

A bill (H. R. No. 269) for the relief of David Bruce. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

BENJAMIN L. M'ATEE AND J. N. EASTHAM.

A bill (C. C. H. R. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and J. N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky.

The bill directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Benjamin L. McAtee and J. N. Eastham, $6,000 in full for transporting extra mail matter over routes No. 3960 and No. 4169, between July 1, 1846, and June 30, 1850.

The report shows that the claim of the petitioners has been before Congress at different times before the organization of the Court of Claims. Two different reports were made by the House Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads in favor of allowing claimants $21,000. The Court of Claims, upon a review of all the evidence in the case, have decided that the claimants are entitled to receive from the Government, for services rendered, the sum of $6,000.

Mr. NIBLACK moved to amend the bill by substituting "Isaac N. Eastham" for "J. N. Eastham."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

BREVET MAJOR H. L. KENDRICK.

A bill (H. R. No. 272) for the relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to credit and allow Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick, of the second artillery, $1,294 66 in the settlement of his account for the sales made by him, by order of General Worth, of certain ordnance property belonging to the United States at Puebla, in Mexico, in June, 1848; that sum being so much of the proceeds of said sale as were stolen from him at Jalapa, while transporting the same to Vera Cruz.

It appears from the report that the petitioner's prayer for relief is based upon the following facts: In the month of June, 1848, on the eve of the evacuation of Puebla, Mexico, by the American forces, Major Kendrick was directed to sell the ordnance and ordnance stores in depot in that city, and was charged with the care and transportation of the proceeds to Vera Cruz. While encamped near Jalapa, on the 7th day of July, 1848, notwithstanding every precaution was taken by guards and other means to avoid loss, one of the specie wagons was robbed of the sum of $1,294 66. Every effort was made to arrest the robber and recover the money, but without success.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

HARRIS AND MORGAN.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 9) authorizing the Postmaster General to revise and adjust the accounts of Harris & Morgan, on principles of justice and equity. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

JOHN F. CANNON.

A bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of John F. Cannon.

The bill authorizes and directs the Postmaster General to pay to John F. Cannon at the rate of $120 per annum, for and during the time he carried said mail, according to his contract, in addition to the amount already paid to him, for additional expense incurred, and extra service performed by him, on mail-route No. 2627.

It appears from the papers filed in this case, that the petitioner, at the letting of the mail contracts in 1851, put in a bid for route No. 2627, setting forth in his proposal to the Post Office Department that he would carry the mail on said route from Campbell Court-house to Halifax Court-house, for the annual sum of $380. It is manifest, not only from the written proposal of the petitioner, but also from his affidavit, that he did not mean to contract beyond the route indicated in his bid, and that in not having in express terms excluded the residue of the route embraced in route No. 2627, he acted wholly in ignorance of the usages of the Post Office Department. Notwithstanding these facts, the Postmaster General insisted that, according to the usages of the Department, the petitioner was bound to carry the mail a further distance of thirty-eight miles, from Campbell Court-house to Chalk Levels, but intimated that he would have relief in the premises. The petitioner accordingly did, during the continuance of his contract, carry out the views of the Department, and performed a service of thirty-eight miles of road over and beyond the true intention of his proposal. It appears from an accompanying letter of the Postmaster General, that he fixes the compensation properly due by the Government to the petitioner, at $120 a year, that, with the sum already paid, being the amount of the next lowest bid on the route.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

J. W. NYE.

A bill (H. R. No. 275) for the payment of the claim of J. W. Nye, assignee of Peter Bargy, jr., and Hugh Stewart. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

MARGETT VAN BUSKIRK.

A bill (H. R. No. 276) for the relief of Margett Van Buskirk, heir of Thomas Van Buskirk, deceased, late of Bergen county, New Jersey. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

GENERAL SYLVESTER CHURCHILL.

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill.

The bill directs the proper disbursing officer to allow and pay to General Sylvester Churchill, inspector general, the pay and allowances of inspector general, from April 29, 1845, the date of his discharge, to January 21, 1846, when he was reinstated in his office, according to the rates of pay then allowed, deducting from said pay and allowance any amounts which may have been paid to Churchill for services performed between the time of his discharge and restoration to office.

It appears from the report that the memorialist, then a major of artillery in the Army, was, on the 15th of September, 1841, appointed one of the inspectors general of the Army, to take rank from the 15th of June of that year; that, from considerations of public policy alone, he abandoned his permanent position in the line of the Army, and accepted the staff appointment tendered to him. On the 23d of August, 1842, an act of Congress passed reducing the number of inspectors general of the Army from two to one; but the President of the United States, for reasons presented by him to Congress, deemed it necessary to continue both in office. Subsequently, these reasons ceasing to exist, President Polk deemed it his duty to discontinue the services of one of the inspectors general; and, on the 29th of April, 1845, the memorialist, being the junior, was honorably discharged from the service. The wants of the service, however, and the apparent injustice done to a meritorious officer, induced Congress, at the next session after the discharge of General Churchill, to wit, on the 12th of January, 1846, to repeal the act of 1842, by which the inspectors general were reduced, and to revive and continue in force the former organization allowing two inspectors general. Immediately after this repeal, on the 21st of the same month, the memorialist was again commissioned, and restored to his original rank and position; and in his new appointment the date of his former commission was inserted. It appears, further, that, during the interval which occurred between his discharge on the 29th of April, 1845, and the 21st of January, 1846, when he was restored to office, the memorialist performed, at the request of officers of the Government, important services connected with his former duties as inspector general, such as investigating and settling references, &c.—services affording in themselves ample consideration for the amount of his salary during that time. The memorialist now asks that he may be allowed the same pay and allowances during the interval between his discharge and his reappointment as he would be entitled to if he had been in commission the whole time.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

MARY BOYLE.

A bill (H. R. No. 277) for the relief of Mary Boyle. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

REPORTS FROM THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The following adverse reports stood next in order upon the Calendar:

An adverse report (C. C. No. 154) upon the petition of Charles D. Arfwedson.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 155) upon the petition of N. and B. Goddard, executors of Nathaniel Goddard.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 156) upon the petition of Benjamin Cozzens's trustee.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 157) upon the petition of Jacob Bigelow, administrator of Francis Cazeau.

Mr. LETCHER. I move that those reports be reported to the House, with a recommendation that the House concur in the reports of the Court of Claims.

Mr. STANTON. Here are three pages of reports from the Court of Claims—these adverse reports, and a number of bills from the Court of Claims, which have been reported on adversely by the Committee of Claims. I take it for granted that none of them can be passed to-day, and I suggest that we should pass over them all.

Mr. REAGAN. I object to passing over the bills unless some disposition is made of them.

The CHAIRMAN. No disposition will be made of them if they are passed over.

Mr. REAGAN. Then I object.

Mr. STANTON. Let them go over until some day when we can discuss them and act upon them.

Mr. DAVIDSON. Do I understand the gentleman to move that the adverse reports from the Court of Claims be passed over?

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is, to pass over all the adverse reports from the Court of Claims.

Mr. STANTON. And all the bills from the Court of Claims which have been reported on adversely by the Committee of Claims.

Mr. DAVIDSON. The court have decided in favor of many cases in which the Committee of Claims have reported against the bills. And I desire to notify the House now, that on Monday next I shall move to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of the bill (C. C. H. R. No. 44) for the relief of Jane Smith, of the county of Clermont, State of Ohio, in order that we may test the question, and either pass the bill or reject it.

Mr. PHELPS. How many of the cases reported from the Court of Claims does this motion cover?

The CHAIRMAN. It refers to the whole mass of cases on this part of the Calendar.

Mr. PHELPS. I desire to have an exception made. There is one bill which I desire to have reported to the House, with a recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of Claims.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I call for the regular order.

Mr. LETCHER's motion was agreed to; and adverse reports from the Court of Claims, Nos. 154, 155, 156, and 157, were laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that the reports be confirmed.

ISAAC S. SMITH.

A bill (H. R. No. 317) for the relief of Isaac S. Smith, of Syracuse, New York. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

JOHN DAVIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 318) recognizing the assignment on land warrant No. 35,956, issued to John Davis, as valid.

The bill directs that the assignment upon land warrant No. 35,956, issued to John Davis, for forty acres, be recognized as valid.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, moved to insert, after "John Davis," the words, "under the act of September 28, 1850."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The committee then, by unanimous consent, passed over the thirty-five bills next on the Calendar, reported from the Court of Claims, reported back by the Committee of Claims, with the recommendation that they do not pass.

BENJAMIN SAYRE.

A bill (H. R. No. 319) for the relief of Benjamin Sayre. [Objected to by Mr. CLEMENS.]

J. W. NYE.

A bill (H. R. No. 320) for the relief of J. W. Nye. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

JOHN B. ROPER.

A bill (H. R. No. 321) for the relief of John B. Roper. [Objected to by Mr. REAGAN.]

REV. JAMES CRAIG.

A bill (H. R. No. 322) for the relief of the heirs of Rev. James Craig, deceased.

Mr. DAWES. I move to amend the bill by striking out the word "heirs," and to insert the words "legal representatives;" and to strike out the names of the claimants.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOODE. I feel it to be my duty to move to amend that bill, by striking out the sum of $10,000, and inserting $20,000.

Mr. LEITER. I then object to the bill.

Mr. GOODE. If the House will hear me for a moment, they will see the justice of the amendment.

Mr. STANTON. If there is to be debate, I object.

WILLIAM WALKER.

A bill (H. R. No. 323) for the benefit of William Walker. [Objected to by Mr. LETCHER.]

SAMUEL JONES.

A bill (H. R. No. 324) to allow the legal representatives of Samuel Jones five years' full pay, in lieu of half pay for life. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

Mr. EUSTIS (at four o'clock) moved that the committee rise.

Mr. COBB demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BOWIE and CLEMENS were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 16, noes 102.

So the committee refused to rise.

GUSTAVUS B. HORNER.

A bill (H. R. No. 325) for the relief of the legal representatives of Gustavus B. Horner, deceased. [Objected to by Mr. JONES, of Tennessee.]

REVOLUTIONARY CLAIMS.

A bill (H. R. No. 234) to provide for the settlement of the claims of the officers and soldiers of the revolutionary army, and of the widows and children of those who died in the service. [Objected to by Mr. RUSSELL.]

LIEUTENANT BARTLETT HINDS.

A bill (H. R. No. 326) for the relief of the heirs of Lieutenant Bartlett Hinds. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

MARIE MALINES.

A bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of the legal representatives of Marie Malines.

The bill directs that the legal representatives of Marie Malines, born Rillieux, be confirmed in all the right, title, and interest now held or possessed by the United States, in and to a certain tract of land in Louisiana, containing about thirty-two hundred arpents, being a part of a grant made by the French Government, in the year 1764, to Marie Rillieux, according to a survey and plat made by the royal surveyor, Don Carlos Trudeau, and of record in the land office at New Orleans; and upon a proper survey, duly approved, being returned to the General Land Office, a patent shall issue; provided, that the act shall only be construed to vest in the said legal representatives of Marie Malines, born Rillieux, the rights, title, and interest in said land now held and possessed by the United States, and shall not be construed in any way to impair the bona fide rights, interests, or claims acquired by any other person under adverse grants, concessions, or purchases, made prior to the passage of the act.

The report states that on the 16th of July, 1764, Marie Rillieux, of the Province of Louisiana, addressed a petition to the director general and royal commandant, praying a grant or concession of ten thousand one hundred and twenty Paris arpents of the royal domain, included within the river Manchac on the north, the river Le Sueur on the south, Lake Pontchartrain on the east, and Lake Maurepas on the west; that such grant was made in accordance with the prayer of the petition; and that Marie Rillieux, widow of, by her marriage with, Solomon Malines, entered in the possession of the tract of land, there being no evidence that her rights of property and control of the same were ever questioned or disturbed by the sovereignty of the Province previous to the transfer and delivery of the country to the United States, under the treaty of purchase from the French Government. Under the provisions of the act of Congress passed in the year 1807, relative to the ascertainment and adjustment of titles and claims to lands within the Territory of Orleans, Marie Malines, Emelie Malines, and Rosalie Malines, the children and heirs of the original grantee of the tract of land, all of whom were inhabitants of the territory at and before the time of its cession to the United States, presented their memorial to the commissioners appointed under the said act of Congress, praying the confirmation, in their favor, of the original grant, so made in the year 1764; and that, as appears by the record of their proceedings, (American State Papers, Public Lands, volume 2, page 279, and case No. 383,) the commissioners did affirm the same, without qualification. It is true, as alleged by the memorialist, that, owing to the restricted clauses and conditions of the law under which the commissioners acted, their confirmation of claims could only inure to the benefit of the claimants to the extent of a league square, which, in the present instance, was greatly less than the land embraced by the original grant. But it does not appear that the United States have ever entered upon the possession of the remaining portion of the land, or caused it to be surveyed and offered for sale, or in any manner appropriated it. The claim, as above stated, was confirmed in favor of the legal representatives of Marie Malines, without any terms of qualification or reservation; and there can be no doubt that, had the law not contained the conditions and restrictions above alluded to, those parties could have exercised all rights of property, as against the United States, over the entire extent of the ten thousand one hundred and twenty Paris arpents, as specified in the grant made in 1764, and which had been allowed by a possession of nearly forty years' donation, as against both the Spanish and French Governments, previous to the existence of any territorial rights in the Province on the part of the United States.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

CYRENUS GLASS.

A bill (H. R. No. 328) for the relief of Cyrenus Glass. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

MEMONONIE INDIANS.

A bill (H. R. No. 329) to authorize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to adjudicate and settle certain claims against the Menomonee Indians. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

GEORGE CHORPENNING AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 330) for the relief of George Chorpenning and Elizabeth Woodward, deceased, and the children of said Elizabeth Woodward. [Objected to by Mr. LOVEJOY.]

DENT, VANTINE, AND COMPANY.

A bill (H. R. No. 331) for the relief of Messrs. Dent, Vantine, and Company, for provisions furnished to Indians in California during the years 1851 and 1852. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

RICHARD B. ALEXANDER.

A bill (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander.

The bill directs the proper accounting officers of the Treasury to pay to Richard B. Alexander, late a major in the first Tennessee regiment, Mexican war, $250 in full of the value of one horse and one mule lost by him during the war.

The evidence establishes that Major R. B. Alexander, of the first regiment of Tennessee volunteers, in the war with Mexico, was severely wounded in the battle of Monterey, in consequence of which he was prevented from marching with his regiment when it was ordered to proceed to Vera Cruz. After his recovery he proceeded to join his regiment, by the way of Brazos St. Iago. At the latter place he was obliged, by order of General Worth, then in command there, on account of deficiency of transportation, to leave his horse and mule in charge of Quartermaster Hill, under an engagement that they should be forwarded to him. Whether forwarded or not is not known; but it appears they never were received by Major Alexander. The Government, having thus failed to furnish to a field officer, on a duty which required him to embark on sea, the means of transportation for his necessary horses, is liable to pay for their loss. The value of the animals thus lost is proven to be two hundred and fifty dollars.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

JEREMIAH Y. DASHIELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 333) for the relief of Major Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, paymaster in the United States Army.

Mr. QUITMAN. I desire to state that that bill was reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. Since it was reported, however, the House has passed a Senate bill upon the same subject. I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The motion was agreed to.

SIMEON STEDMAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simeon Stedman.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to instruct the proper disbursing officer to pay to Simeon Stedman, who served in Captain Christopher Ripley's company, of the thirty-seventh infantry, during the war with Great Britain, in 1812, such sum or sums as may have accrued to him, from the time of his last receiving payment, for services till the end of the war.

The report states that Simeon Stedman first enlisted in the company of Captain Christopher Ripley, of the thirty-seventh infantry, on the 9th of July, 1813, and faithfully served till the 1st of June, 1814. At this latter period he re-enlisted in said company and regiment for and during the war. On the 7th of April, 1815, he received leave of absence, to visit his sick mother. During his absence he himself was taken ill, and was unable to return until after the disbandment of his company and regiment. He was then refused payment, on the ground that he was a deserter.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

SUSANNAH REDMAN.

A bill (H. R. No. 335) for the relief of Susannah Redman; widow of Lloyd Redman.

The bill directs the Secretary of War to pay to Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman, formerly of Captain Clay's company of Kentucky volunteers, $170, being the amount adjudged as due to Lloyd Redman for three horses lost by him while in the service of the United States, during the Mexican war.

The report states that Lloyd Redman, deceased, was the husband of the petitioner, Susannah Redman. He served as a private in the company of Kentucky volunteers, commanded by Captain Clay, in the Mexican war. Redman contracted a disease during his service; and, from the evidence, it appears this disease went far to hasten his death. In consideration of these facts, a pension of $3 50 per month, to continue for five years, was granted to the present petitioner, on the 4th of September, 1857. It appears, further, that Lloyd Redman, while in the service of the United States, lost three horses; one of them being "snagged," and the other two poisoned by the Mexicans.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with a recommendation that it do pass.

B. W. PALMER AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of B. W. Palmer and others.

The bill directs that the excess of salary paid to B. W. Palmer and others, as pursers' clerks, under the estimates made in the naval appropriation bill for the year 1854, be confirmed and made legal; provided, however, that nothing contained in the bill shall be construed into a repeal of the existing laws regulating the pay of pursers' clerks.

From the report it appears that the pay of pursers' clerks, as fixed by law, was and is $500 per annum; that the estimates in the Navy appropriation bill for the year 1854 were for $750 per annum for pursers' clerks, but the act regulating the pay at $500 per annum was not repealed; that, misled by those estimates of the Navy Department, the pursers' clerks at several of the navy-yards received the increased pay; that the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury afterwards notified the pursers that the said allowance of $750 had been illegal, and that it was their duty to make a deduction of the excess thus allowed their clerks from their future salaries, but that such deduction would not be required until the said clerks should have an opportunity to apply to Congress for relief. It further appears that $750 per annum was not excessive; and having been paid under the circumstances aforesaid, it would be unjust and oppressive to require it now to be refunded.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

HIRAM PAULDING.

A bill (H. R. No. 337) for the relief of Hiram Paulding. [Objected to by Mr. SMITH, of Virginia.]

JOHN M. BROOKE.

A bill (H. R. No. 338) for the relief of John M. Brooke. [Objected to by Mr. LEITER.]

FRANCIS DAINESE.

A bill (H. R. No. 339) for the relief of Francis Dainese. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

PETER VAN BUSKIRK.

A bill (H. R. No. 340) providing an increase of pension to Peter Van Buskirk, of Washington city, in the District of Columbia. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

JOHN HARRIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 341) for the relief of John Harris, of Warren county, Kentucky. [Objected to by Mr. GARNETT.]

JOHN CAMPELL.

A bill (H. R. No. 342) for the relief of John Campbell. [Objected to by Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. As gentlemen are objecting without knowing anything about the bills, we might as well adjourn. I move (half past four o'clock) that the committee rise.

Mr. EUSTIS demanded tellers upon the motion.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BUFFINTON and FLORENCE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—ayes 48, noes 46.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. KELSEY. No quorum has voted, and I submit that the roll must be called.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum is necessary for the committee to rise.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, the Chairman [Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky] reported that the Committee of the Whole House had, according to order, had the Private Calendar under consideration, and had directed him to report sundry bills back to the House, with specific recommendations. The committee had then found itself without a quorum.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask the Speaker if he can receive a report without a quorum being present?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that all the bills ordered to be reported back before the committee found itself without a quorum, can be received.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the report of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole is hardly parliamentary. The report should have been simply that a majority of the committee had determined to rise. It was not necessary that a quorum should vote on the motion that the committee rise, and the fact that there was no quorum, therefore, would not have been reported to the House.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I suppose that is my business, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, to make a report, and whether, or not, it is done strictly in a parliamentary manner, is another question. I report the fact, and my object in so doing, is to let the business of the committee, so far as it has been properly transacted, come before the House in the shape of the bills and amendments which have been laid aside to be reported to the House. As I understand it, the gentleman challenges the report that the committee found itself without a quorum and agreed to rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will state the point I wish to make.

Mr. SEWARD. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I want my question of order entertained by the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to say that if the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House had confined himself to the report, which I think is a proper one to make, then the question would not be before us of the want of a quorum, and the point of order could not be made. The committee, while it had a quorum, ordered the report to the House of certain bills; and although, afterwards, it found itself without a quorum, yet a majority determined to rise and report. But the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House has no right to report a fact to the House that is not material. Less than a majority can rise; and therefore the want of a quorum does not affect the report.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I make the point that less than a quorum cannot make a report; and that even if it be made, less than a quorum of the House cannot receive it. There is no legal and constitutional House to receive the report if there be not a quorum present.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. There is no evidence that there is not a quorum present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Only five minutes ago we ascertained by a count that there was not a quorum present.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. That was in committee, and some time ago. There may be a quorum here now.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no knowledge of the fact that there is no quorum present. The Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House reports to the House that they have had the Private Calendar under consideration, and have directed him to report sundry bills to the House, some with, and some without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I object to the reception of that report, on the ground that there is no quorum present.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How do you know that?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It was ascertained by a count in committee only five minutes ago that there was no quorum present. If there be a quorum here let it be shown. I do not make the point of order to obstruct the business of the House. When a quorum is present I am willing to vote for discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the bills which have been laid aside to be reported to the House.

Mr. FLORENCE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House; and on that motion I demand tellers. We can soon see whether we have a quorum or not.

Mr. RUFFIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move that the bills reported from the Committee of the Whole House be recommitted; and on that motion I call for the previous question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Has the Chair decided to receive the report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided to receive it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I take an appeal from that decision.

Mr. HOUSTON. I will make an appeal to the House. The gentleman from Tennessee says that if it appears to-morrow that a quorum is present he will make no objection to action on the bills laid aside to be reported from the Committee of the Whole House. In a full House he is willing that the Committee of the Whole House shall be discharged, and the bills acted on. Why not, then, adjourn now, when we know the bills will come up in the morning? There is no quorum present now.

Mr. RUFFIN. I insist on my motion to adjourn.

Mr. SEWARD. Will these bills come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that they will.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I call for the yeas and nays. We can then see who is here, and who is not.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 47, nays 59; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Bliss, Bonham, Bowie, Bryan, John Cochrane, Cragin, James Craig, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Eustis, Garnett, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hawkins, Houston, Jackson, Humphrey Marshall, Milson, Moore, Niblack, Nichols, Pendleton, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Russell, Seales, Seward, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, William Smith, Stevenson, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Underwood, Waldron, White, and Wortendyke—47.

NAYS—Messrs. Andrews, Bingham, Boyce, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Chaffee, Clawson, Clemens, Cobb, Colfax, Covode, Davis of Maryland, Dawes, Dodd, Dowdell, Farnsworth, Florence, Foley, Foster, Gilman, Goodwin, Grow, Hoard, Howard, Huyler, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kelsey, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Mott, Olin, Pettit, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Robbins, Royce, Sandidge, Judson W. Sherman, Spinner, Stanton, James A. Stewart, Tompkins, Walbridge, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, and Winslow—59.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. RUFFIN. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GROW. Is that motion in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is. A motion for a call of the House has been submitted since the question was taken on the adjournment.

Mr. GROW. But the motion for the call of the House has not been acted on.

The SPEAKER. But the practice has been that the submission of the motion was enough.

Mr. COVODE. I insist that there be a call of the House. We will have this thing every day, unless we insist on that call.

Mr. CLEMENS. I call for tellers on the motion to adjourn.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. OLIN and CLEMENS were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes forty-nine; noes not counted.

Mr. MORGAN. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 46, nays 56; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Arnold, Avery, Bliss, Bonham, Boyce, Burns, John Cochrane, Cragin, James Craig, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Dowdell, Eustis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Hawkins, Houston, Huyler, Jackson, Jewett, George W. Jones, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Miles, Milson, Moore, Niblack, Nichols, Pendleton, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Russell, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, William Smith, Stevenson, Waldron, Walton, Israel Washburn, White, Winslow, and Wortendyke—46.

NAYS—Messrs. Andrews, Atkins, Bingham, Buffinton, Burlingame, Chaffee, Clawson, Clemens, Cobb, Colfax, Covode, Davis of Mississippi, Dawes, Dodd, Farnsworth, Florence, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Gilman, Goodwin, Grow, Thomas L. Harris, Hoard, Howard, J. Glancy Jones, Kelsey, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Matteson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Mott, Olin, Pettit, Phelps, Phillips, Pike, Robbins, Royce, Sandidge, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Singleton, Spinner, Stanton, James A. Stewart, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Underwood, Walbridge, and Elihu B. Washburne—56.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred on the motion that there be a call of the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barskdale, Bennett, Billingham, Bishop, Blair, Bocock, Bonham, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Brayton, Bryan, Burnett, Burns, Burroughs, Campbell, Caruthers, Case, Caskie, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Cockerill, Comins, Corning, Cox, Cragin, Burton Craige, Crawford, Curry, Curtis, Damrell, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Davis of Massachusetts, Dean, Dewart, Dick, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edie, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Fenton, Garrett, Giddings, Gillis, Gilmer, Goode, Granger, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Haskin, Hatch, Hawkins, Hickman, Hill, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Hughes, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kellogg, Kelly, Kilgore, Knapp, John C. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Letcher, MacLay, McKibbin, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miles, Miller, Milson, Montgomery, Isaac N. Morris, Freeman H. Morse, Oliver A. Morse, Murray, Niblack, Nichols, Palmer, Parker, Peyton, Phillips, Potter, Pottle, Powell, Purviance, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Reilly, Ricaud, Ritchie, Roberts, Russell, Savage, Seales, Scott, Searing, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Spinner, Stallworth, Stephens, William Stewart, Talbot, Tappan, George Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Trippe, Wade, Ward, Warren, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Watkins, Whiteley, Wilson, Wood, Woodson, Augustus R. Wright, John V. Wright, and Zollicoffer.

The SPEAKER. The doors will be closed and kept closed until they are ordered to be reopened. The names of absentees will be called for excuses.

The Clerk proceeded to call the names of absentees:

NEHEMIAH ABBOTT. No excuse offered.
GARNETT B. ADRAIN. No excuse offered.
JOHN A. AHL. No excuse offered.
T. L. ANDERSON. No excuse offered.
JOHN D. C. ATKINS. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM J. AVERY. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM BARKSDALE. No excuse offered.
HENRY BENNETT. No excuse offered.
FRANCIS P. BLAIR, Jr. No excuse offered.
THOMAS S. BOCKOCK. No excuse offered.
MILLEDGE L. BONHAM. No excuse offered.
THOMAS F. BOWIE. No excuse offered.
JOSEPH BURNS. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM W. BOYCE. No excuse offered.
LAWRENCE O'B. BRANCH. No excuse offered.
WILLIAM D. BRAYTON.

Mr. DURFEE stated that his colleague, Mr. BRAYTON, was called home by illness in his family, and moved that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES BILLINGHURST.

Mr. SICKLES. Mr. BILLINGHURST is a member of the Judiciary Committee, which has leave to sit during the sessions of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the gentleman know that he is now engaged in the duties of that committee?

Mr. SICKLES. I do not know that fact; but that committee has leave to sit during the sessions of the House, and the House has no knowledge whether that committee is now in session.

Mr. MOORE. That committee is not in session.

The question was taken on excusing Mr. BILLINGHURST; and it was not agreed to.

GUY M. BRYAN.

Mr. SANDIDGE. Mr. BRYAN, on leaving the House a short time ago, told me that he was very unwell indeed; and it is certain that that is the cause of his absence. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

HENRY C. BURNETT.

Mr. STEVENSON. My colleague, Mr. BURNETT, was called from the city by the indisposition of his family; and is now at one of the Virginia watering places. I move he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM D. BISHOP.

Mr. ARNOLD. My colleague, Mr. Bishop, has been called home on account of sickness in his family. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

SLAS M. BURROUGHS.

Mr. LEITER. Mr. BURROUGHS has paired off, and gone home.

Mr. MORGAN. "He has taken a wife, and cannot come." [Laughter.]

Mr. HOARD. He is out of the city on urgent business; and I move that he be excused.

Mr. LEITER. I suppose his pair is a proper pair. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROW. For what reason is he to be excused?

Mr. HOARD. That he is out of the city on urgent business, and paired.

The motion was agreed to.

LEWIS D. CAMPBELL.

Mr. PENDLETON. Although my colleague is not here at this time, he is usually very attentive to business; and I move that he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

SAMUEL CARUTHERS.

Mr. CRAIG, of Missouri. It is unnecessary for me to say to the House that my colleague is not able to be here. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

CHARLES CASE. No excuse offered.

HENRY CHAPMAN. No excuse offered.

EZRA CLARK, Jr. No excuse offered.

HORACE F. CLARK. No excuse offered.

JOHN B. CLARK. No excuse offered.

JOHN S. CASKIE.

Mr. GARNETT. Mr. CASKIE is in attendance upon his sick wife, and I move he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

JAMES B. CLAY. No excuse offered.

CLARK B. COCHRANE.

Mr. COLFAX. Mr. COCHRANE has been out of the city for some days, having paired off with Mr. Cox. I move he be excused.

The motion was not agreed to.

JOHN COCHRANE. No excuse offered.

JOSEPH R. COCKERILL. No excuse offered.

LINUS B. COMINS. No excuse offered.

ERASTUS CORNING. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL S. COX. No excuse offered.

AARON H. CRAGIN. No excuse offered.

BURTON CRAIGE. No excuse offered.

MARTIN J. CRAWFORD. No excuse offered.

JABEZ L. M. CURRY. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL R. CURTIS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM S. DAMRELL.

Mr. BUFFINTON. I move that my colleague, Mr. DAMRELL, be excused on account of physical debility.

The motion was agreed to.

THOMAS G. DAVIDSON. No excuse offered.

H. WINTER DAVIS.

Mr. PETTIT. I know that Mr. DAVIS was indisposed yesterday, and although he did not assign that as a reason for his absence, I have no doubt that it is so. I move that he be excused.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I would suggest that this is certainly rather an unusual, and I should think, an injudicious proceeding; but we are attempting to establish a rule, and to take a step which will produce some result. I would suggest that if the Sergeant-at-Arms be dispatched for members, and finds any one sick, as a matter of course he will not bring him here. We may leave the execution of the order to his discretion.

Mr. PETTIT. I withdraw the motion.

JOHN G. DAVIS. No excuse offered.

REUBEN DAVIS. No excuse offered.

TIMOTHY DAVIS.

Mr. BURLINGAME. My colleague has been ill for several days past. Although he was here this morning, he was not able to remain here all the day, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. DAVIS, of Massachusetts, was excused.

SIDNEY DEAN.

Mr. OLIN. Mr. DEAN was here this morning; but in consequence of the injury which he recently received by being thrown from his carriage, he was obliged to return to his home. I move that he be excused.

The motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM L. DEWART.

Mr. FLORENCE. My colleague was very ill yesterday, and was scarcely able to get to the House. I presume that he is also ill to-day. I move that he be excused.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that to-day one of the colleagues of Mr. DEWART stated that he was detained from the House in consequence of indisposition.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. DEWART is not in the city. He was called to Baltimore last evening by a dispatch announcing that it was necessary for him to go there.

The question was taken; and Mr. DEWART was excused.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move to suspend all further proceedings under the call.

The question was taken on Mr. SMITH's motion, and it was disagreed to.

So the House refused to suspend the proceedings under the call.

JOHN DICK.

Mr. GROW. I desire to say that my colleague's health has been very poor for some time. I suppose that every one about the House knows the condition of his health, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. DICK was excused.

WILLIAM H. DIMMICK.

Mr. FLORENCE. My colleague, Mr. DIMMICK, has just risen from a sick bed. He has been here but a few days, and bears upon his person the evidences of indisposition. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. DIMMICK was excused.

JAMES F. DOWDELL. No excuse offered.

JOHN R. EDIE. No excuse offered.

HENRY A. EDMUNDSON. No excuse offered.

JOHN M. ELLIOTT. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM H. ENGLISH. No excuse offered.

GEORGE EUSTIS. No excuse offered.

JOHN F. FARNSWORTH. No excuse offered.

CHARLES J. FAULKNER. No excuse offered.

REUBEN E. FENTON. No excuse offered.

LUCIUS J. GARTRELL. No excuse offered.

JOSHUA R. GIDDINGS.

Mr. BINGHAM. I wish to say that my colleague, Mr. GIDDINGS, has left for his home in Ohio on account of his own indisposition and that of his family. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken, and Mr. GIDDINGS was excused.

JAMES L. GILLIS. No excuse offered.

JOHN A. GILMER. No excuse offered.

AMOS P. GRANGER. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM S. GROESBECK. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM O. GOODE.

Mr. GARNETT. I move that my colleague be excused. The condition of his health is so well known to the House that I need say nothing about it. He is unable to attend.

The question was taken; and Mr. GOODE was excused.

LAWRENCE W. HALL. No excuse offered.

ROBERT B. HALL. No excuse offered.

AARON HARLAN.

Mr. BINGHAM. My colleague has left for his home on account of indisposition. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. HARLAN was excused.

J. MORRISON HARRIS. No excuse offered.

JOHN B. HASKIN. No excuse offered.

ISRAEL T. HATCH. No excuse offered.

GEORGE S. HAWKINS. No excuse offered.

JOHN HICKMAN.

Mr. FLORENCE. My colleague has been compelled to leave the city in consequence of indisposition. He has been very ill for several days past, and I suppose he will not return this session; and certainly not unless he convalesces very much. I move that he be excused.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I am very sorry to see that the Pennsylvania delegation is in such a bad condition. [Laughter.]

The question was taken; and Mr. HICKMAN was excused.

JOSHUA HILL. No excuse offered.

GEORGE W. HOPKINS.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Judge HOPKINS is in very delicate health. I think he ought to be excused; and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. HOPKINS was excused.

VALENTINE B. HORTON. No excuse offered.

GEORGE S. HOUSTON. No excuse offered.

JAMES HUGHES. No excuse offered.

ALBERT G. JENKINS. No excuse offered.

J. GLANCY JONES. No excuse offered.

OWEN JONES. No excuse offered.

LAWRENCE M. KRIFF. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM KELLOGG. No excuse offered.

JOHN KELLY. No excuse offered.

DAVID KILGORE. No excuse offered.

CHARNEY L. KNAPP. No excuse offered.

JOHN C. KUNKEL. No excuse offered.

LUCIUS Q. C. LAMAR.

Mr. SINGLETON. Mr. LAMAR has been sick for a week or ten days past. He was here for a little while yesterday. He has been having chills every other day, and the condition of his health is such that he is not able to be out on such a day as this, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. LAMAR was excused.

JAMES LANDY. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM LAWRENCE. No excuse offered.

DEWITT C. LEACH.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I wish to say, in behalf of my colleague, Mr. LEACH, that he has been for several days in feeble health, and left the House an hour and a half ago in consequence of increased indisposition.

The question was taken; and Mr. LEACH was excused.

Mr. FLORENCE. My attention was diverted at the moment the name of my colleague, Mr. KUNKEL, was called. I am authorized by that gentleman to say—and he is within sight and hearing—(Mr. KUNKEL was in the gallery)—that he understood that the House had adjourned. He was on his way to the House; but hearing that it had adjourned he turned away. I move you that he be excused.

The question was taken; but, before the result was announced,

Mr. FLORENCE said: I ask for a division upon my motion, if I am entitled to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to it.

Mr. FLORENCE. I consider the excuse I have offered for my colleague a good one. Gentlemen have evidence of Mr. KUNKEL's disposition to be here, and I want to see how many just men there are in the House. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it is not in order to debate the excuse.

Mr. FLORENCE. I concur in that opinion.

The House divided on Mr. FLORENCE's motion, and there were—ayes 11, noes 49.

So Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania, was not excused.

Mr. MOORE. Is it in order to move that gentlemen who are within hearing be admitted? [Loud cries of "No!" "No!"]

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the motion would not be in order.

PAUL LEIDY. No excuse offered.

JOHN LETCHER. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM B. MACLAY. No excuse offered.

JOSEPH C. McKIBBIN. No excuse offered.

JOHN McQUEEN. No excuse offered.

HUMPHREY MARSHALL. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL S. MARSHALL. No excuse offered.

JOHN C. MASON. No excuse offered.

W. PORCHER MILES. No excuse offered.

JOSEPH MILLER. No excuse offered.

JOHN S. MILLSON. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM MONTGOMERY.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I move that Mr. MONTGOMERY be excused, on the presumption that he is unwell. It seems to me that most of the Pennsylvania delegation are in bad health, and I think it is a fair presumption that he is detained from that cause, as his appearance has been exceedingly feeble during the whole session. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEMENS. To my certain knowledge, Mr. MONTGOMERY is at home electioneering for a reelection to Congress. [Renewed laughter.]

The question was taken; and Mr. MONTGOMERY was not excused.

ISAAC N. MORRIS. No excuse offered.

OLIVER A. MORSE. No excuse offered.

FREEMAN H. MORSE.

Mr. GILMAN. My colleague has been of late much indisposed, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

AMBROSE S. MURRAY. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM E. NIELACK. No excuse offered.

MATTHIAS H. NICHOLS. No excuse offered.

GEORGE W. PALMER. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL O. PEYTON. No excuse offered.

JOHN W. PARKER. No excuse offered.

HENRY M. PHILLIPS. No excuse offered.

JOHN F. POTTER. No excuse offered.

ENORY B. POTTLE. No excuse offered.

PAULS POWELL. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL A. PURVIANCE.

Mr. FLORENCE. Mr. Speaker, my colleague ought to be excused. He is absent for the same reason I have stated in the case of my other colleague, [Mr. KUNKEL.] He was coming here, when he was stopped by the announcement that the House was adjourned. He is here now. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. QUITMAN.

Mr. SINGLETON. General QUITMAN has been here all day, and only went away a short time ago. He was so unwell that it was impossible for him to remain longer. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

CHARLES READY. No excuse offered.

JOHN H. REAGAN. No excuse offered.

WILSON REILLY.

Mr. WHITE. My colleague has been called home by indisposition in his family. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JAMES B. RICAUD. No excuse offered.

DAVID RITCHIE.

Mr. TOMPKINS. The gentleman, I know, has been indisposed, and I move that he be excused. I do not know whether his sickness is that which affects the other members from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FLORENCE. The members from Pennsylvania I have moved be excused ought to be excused for the reason that they were not here because of a providential dispensation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the question is not debatable, and in that decision the gentleman has concurred.

Mr. FLORENCE. I submit that it is not in order to reflect upon the reasons that gentlemen have given for the absence of their colleagues.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

ANTHONY E. ROBERTS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM F. RUSSELL. No excuse offered.

JOHN H. SAVAGE.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. My colleague has been unwell for several days past. I do not recollect to have seen him here, and I suppose that his absence has been occasioned by indisposition.

Mr. GROW. He has been here.

Mr. LEITER. I know that Mr. SAVAGE is indisposed, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

ALFRED M. SCALES. No excuse offered.

CHARLES L. SCOTT.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Mr. SCOTT's wife has been confined to her room for two months, and still lingers on, though convalescing. I have no doubt he has, as he ought to have done, gone home to look after her. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

JOHN A. SEARING. No excuse offered.

JAMES L. SEWARD.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It is known that the gentleman from Georgia is too unwell to be here.

Mr. JACKSON. My colleague is and has been unwell. He has been suffering from the same disease as the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. LAMAR.] He came here yesterday for the first. I think that he is too much indisposed to be here, and therefore move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

AARON SHAW. No excuse offered.

HENRY M. SHAW. No excuse offered.

ELI S. SHORTER.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. SHORTER was in his seat till a late hour to-day. He mentioned to me this morning that he was unwell. He was very unwell last night.

Mr. LEITER. I met the gentleman in the Committee on Indian Affairs this morning, and he looked, I think, as well as usual.

Mr. MOORE. I presume my colleague is unwell. He was unwell last night, and so told me this morning. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

ROBERT SMITH. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL A. SMITH. No excuse offered.

JAMES A. STALLWORTH.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I know that Mr. STALLWORTH is unwell and unable to be here, and I therefore move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

ALEXANDER H. STEPHENS.

Mr. STEVENSON. The condition of Mr. STEPHENS is known to everybody. He was compelled to leave the Hall from indisposition, and I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

WILLIAM STEWART. No excuse offered.

Mr. COVODE. I wish to state that my colleague is in perfect good health, and in order to preserve his health, I presume he has gone to dinner.

ALBERT G. TALBOT. No excuse offered.

MASON W. TAPPAN. No excuse offered.

GEORGE TAYLOR. No excuse offered.

ELI THAYER. No excuse offered.

JOHN THOMPSON.

Mr. MORGAN. My colleague has been called home by the illness of his daughter. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. THOMPSON was excused.

ROBERT P. TRIPPE. No excuse offered.

EDWARD WADE. No excuse offered.

ELIJAH WARD. No excuse offered.

EDWARD A. WARREN.

Mr. GREENWOOD. My colleague left the city some weeks ago, for the purpose of attending the sick bed of his mother, and he did not expect to return this session. He paired off for two weeks with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. MONTGOMERY.] That pair ended, I believe, yesterday; and I have paired him off from yesterday with the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GIDDINGS.]

The question was taken; and Mr. WARREN was excused.

CADWALADER C. WASHBURN. No excuse offered.

ALBERT G. WATKINS. No excuse offered.

WILLIAM G. WHITELEY. No excuse offered.

JAMES WILSON. No excuse offered.

JOHN M. WOOD. No excuse offered.

SAMUEL H. WOODSON. No excuse offered.

AUGUSTUS R. WRIGHT. No excuse offered.

JOHN V. WRIGHT. No excuse offered.

FELIX K. ZOLLICOFFER. No excuse offered.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I am requested to say that Mr. WADE remained in the House till after the last roll call on the motion to adjourn; and that he went off, on being informed that the House had adjourned; he came back immediately and has been in the gallery ever since. I move that he be excused.

Mr. MORGAN. I am sorry, indeed, that so old a member should not have known enough to know when the House adjourns.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Members ought to know that, under the parliamentary law, it is the duty of members to remain in their seats till the House has adjourned, and till after the Speaker has passed out gracefully. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair would like to call the attention of the House to that rule at the proper time.

The question was taken; and Mr. WADE was not excused.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be instructed to take into custody the absent members who have not been excused, and to bring them before the bar of the House.

Mr. LEITER. I ask for the reading of the rule on the subject.

The SPEAKER. The rule on the subject is this:

"62. Upon the call of the House, the names of the members shall be called over by the Clerk, and the absentees noted; after which the names of the absentees shall again be called over; the doors shall then be shut, and those for whom no excuse or insufficient excuses are made, may, by order of those present, if fifteen in number, be taken into custody as they appear, or may be sent for and taken into custody, wherever to be found, by special messengers to be appointed for that purpose."

Mr. GOODWIN. I did not hear the name of Mr. BENNETT called. I was by his side when he left the Hall, and I know that he left, complaining of a severe headache. I move that he be excused.

The question was taken; and Mr. BENNETT was excused.

Mr. SINGLETON. Will it be proper for this House to adjourn, and allow these gentlemen to be taken into custody, and dealt with when we meet again?

The SPEAKER. The motion to adjourn is not in order.

The question was taken on Mr. CLEMENS's motion; and it was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I beg to ask the consent of the House to absent myself at this time for a limited period—three hours, or so. I have an engagement of some importance. I am sure that, while there is no practical good in remaining here, no gentleman will withhold from me his consent to leave. I ask it in good faith; and I trust leave of absence will be granted to me.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will inform the House what is the character of his engagement?

Mr. FLORENCE. I will when I return.

Mr. FOSTER. If the gentleman's object is to visit the sick members of the Pennsylvania delegation, I hope he will be allowed to go. [Much laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I will say, in all candor, that it is not for that purpose. I trust sincerely that my colleague [Mr. WHITE] and myself will be granted leave of absence for three hours. We have been very faithful in our attendance here; and there are reasons why we desire to be absent now.

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to know if the gentleman desires leave of absence for the rest of the session?

The SPEAKER. No; only for three hours.

Mr. FLORENCE. The request is made in good faith; and I trust sincerely that it will be granted.

The question was taken; and leave of absence was not granted to Mr. FLORENCE and Mr. WHITE.

Mr. GROW. I presume that, if my colleague had asked leave of absence four or five weeks ago, it would have been granted. [Laughter.]

Mr. FLORENCE. Respect for the House prompted me to make the request. I can absent myself if I choose, and subject myself to penalties. Every one knows that I am as faithful in my attendance here as any gentleman upon the floor. I have made this request in good faith; and I say again, that I hope the House will extend this courtesy to me. I do not desire to violate the decorum or rules of the House, or to pursue any other course than that which a gentleman ought to pursue. I ask that this privilege may be extended to myself and my colleague, for reasons satisfactory to ourselves.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman renews his request, he says, in good faith.

Mr. GROW. My colleague's company is so desirable that I hope he will not be excused.

Mr. FOSTER. I should be gratified if the gentleman would inform the House how he proposes to get out of it without its leave.

Mr. MOORE. My colleague, Mr. COBB, answered to his name, but the doors were closed while he was out. I move that he be allowed to come in.

Mr. COBB, (in the gallery.) I do not want to come in. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will preserve order in the galleries. [Great laughter.]

Mr. CHAFFEE. If it is in order on this interesting occasion, I would like to bring up the case of Mr. WADE. He has been a little singular in his movements of late, and I understand that about a week since his family became exceedingly alarmed. About that time he was found in the vicinity of, and I believe at, the Government Asylum, and I understand that since that time he has been a little erratic in his movements. [Laughter.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHAFFEE. Certainly.

Mr. BINGHAM. I would like to know in whose company my colleague was found at the Lunatic Asylum? [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAFFEE. Never mind that. On account of the gentleman's peculiarities, I think he ought to be excused.

Mr. GROW. I would like to inquire if any of these symptoms were noticed before the Medical Convention met here. [Laughter.]

Mr. CHAFFEE. I was not in the city at the time the convention met, and therefore do not know.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. MORRIS of Illinois, PURVIANCE, KUNKEL of Pennsylvania, STEWART of Pennsylvania, WILSON, and CRAGIN, were present within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House, on account of absenting yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. Have you any excuse to offer for that absence?

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I have not been absent from the sittings of the House for a single day. I was here to-day before the hour of eleven this morning, and remained until between half past three and four o'clock. But I had important business in another place, and I had to go to attend to it. When I left the House, I supposed that it would adjourn immediately; and I understood afterwards that it had adjourned. I will remark further that I returned to the House voluntarily, and have been waiting some time to get in. I came back as soon as I found that the House had not adjourned; and now, out of one hundred and thirty absentees, I have the pleasure of knowing I am the first at my post.

Mr. GROW. I move that the gentleman be discharged, on the payment of fees.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire the House to understand that this is a fair case upon which to make up its judgment. If Mr. MORRIS is to be discharged, of course there is no use in proceeding further. The gentleman says he was absent on business, when he should have been in attendance here. The very object of this proceeding, unpleasant as it is in many respects, is to secure a quorum in Committee of the Whole; and, under the circumstances, I simply call the attention of the House to these facts.

Mr. CLEMENS. In a parliamentary sense, I cannot see how members can have business anywhere except in this Hall while the House is in session; and therefore the excuse rendered by the member from Illinois is, in my opinion, unacceptable. If the House discharge him merely on the payment of his fees, we will fail in accomplishing the object which I have had in view in this movement, and that is to secure a greater efficiency in the attendance of members of the House, to execute the joint resolution to adjourn on the 7th of June next, and to still further carry out the action of this House in agreeing to meet at eleven o'clock. Why, sir, it has been apparent to all of us, that since the resolution has passed for the daily meetings at eleven o'clock, a. m., we have each day been without a quorum after three o'clock. My object in taking the part I have done to-day, has been to secure the cooperation of my fellow-members in the discharge of my duty.

Mr. FLORENCE. Is the question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the question is debatable.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that the member be fined.

The SPEAKER. The payment of fees is the greatest fine that has been exacted.

Mr. CLEMENS. What are they?

The SPEAKER. Two dollars.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I thought the member was to be discharged unconditionally. I hope the suggestion of the Chair will be concurred in.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced, in obedience to the order of the House, he had within the bar Messrs. GRANGER, READY, WADE, and PALMER.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CRAGIN, you have been arrested, and brought to the bar of the House, in consequence of your absenting yourself from the sittings of the House without its permission. What reason have you to give for your absence?

Mr. CRAGIN. A short time after five o'clock this afternoon, I sent a page to the Clerk's desk, and he returned me the answer that the House had agreed to adjourn. Supposing that honorable men would remain in the same mind ten minutes, I thought that I would go home and get my dinner.

Mr. GROW. Is not there a rule of the House that no persons shall be about the Clerk's desk during the call of the yeas and nays.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

MONDAY, MAY 17, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 135.

The SPEAKER. The rule applies to members. Mr. GROW. I move that the gentleman be discharged, on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FLORENCE. I ask that I may be excused, with my colleague, [Mr. WHITE,] from attendance here for the next three or four hours. I trust that that courtesy will be extended to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to be absent for two or three hours, to fulfil an engagement.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will put the question to the House.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I ask that I may be excused from attendance.

The SPEAKER. For two or three hours?

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. No, sir; that will not answer my purpose. I ask to be excused from attendance during this sitting.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE asked to be excused; but subsequently withdrew the motion.

The SPEAKER. Mr. WILSON, of Indiana, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to submit for your absence?

Mr. WILSON. I remained here up to the usual hour of adjournment, and then went home to answer some letters which could no longer be delayed. They were letters in which my constituents were interested. So soon as I heard that there was a call of the House, I came here.

Mr. LEITER. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on payment of the fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House in consequence of having absented yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania. A friend of mine came here from the district which I represent, and his business here required my presence with him. I paired off with the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. DAVIS,] to be absent for a short time. I returned to the House, and found that there had been a call of the House. I meant no disrespect to the House by my absence from its sittings.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. PURVIANCE, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for being absent from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. PURVIANCE. I believe that I have not been absent a single day during this session, but a portion of this day, and about a week, when I went home to attend the funeral of my mother. This afternoon, after four o'clock, I was absent a short time from the House. When I was returning, I met some members in the rotunda of the old Capitol, and they informed me that the House had adjourned. I then went back to my boarding-house. If it had not been for that misinformation, I would have been here in my seat, as usual.

Mr. WINSLOW. In consideration of the peculiar character of the gentleman's excuse, I move that he be discharged from custody on the payment of fees. [Laughter.]

Mr. PURVIANCE. I ask to be excused altogether.

The question was taken on Mr. WINSLOW's motion, and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. You have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absence from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for that absence?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. I was in committee at ten o'clock this morning; shortly after four o'clock this afternoon I went home with my colleague. The bills upon the Private Calendar were almost all objected to; and a motion to adjourn was made which I was under the impression would be carried. On my return, I met a number of gentlemen in the old Capitol, coming from the House, who informed me that the House had adjourned.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GRANGER being at the bar of the House—

The SPEAKER. Mr. GRANGER, you have been arrested and brought before the bar of the House for having absented yourself from the sittings of the House, without the permission of the House. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. GRANGER. I have but little excuse to make. I was a little unwell, but I will not offer that as an excuse. I went down to get a cup of tea; and I repented, and came back; and now I throw myself on the mercy of the court. [Laughter.]

Mr. STANTON. I desire to state that I lately visited the gentleman from New York, and found him in bed; and I am very well satisfied that his health is such that he ought not to remain here during long sessions; I therefore move that he be discharged on payment of fees.

The question was taken; and Mr. GRANGER was discharged.

The SPEAKER. Mr. READY.

Mr. READY. I have been in session with my committee from ten o'clock till half past four. When the committee adjourned, I stepped out, and a member of my family being indisposed, I thought I had better go home to see how that member was coming on, and to get a little refreshment. While there, I met with the chairman of my committee and another gentleman, and I asked if the House had adjourned. One of them promptly answered in the affirmative. My returning here, was wholly accidental. I had forgotten some keys in my desk, which it was important for me to have. I returned here for them, and the first I knew of the House being in session, was when I was met at the door by the Doorkeeper.

Mr. SICKLES. I move that the gentleman be excused.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that he be excused on the payment of costs.

Mr. GROW. If the gentleman from Tennessee says that he left here because one of the members of his family was sick, I would be in favor of excusing him.

Mr. READY. I will not say that that was the sole reason.

The question was taken; and Mr. READY was excused on the payment of fees.

The SPEAKER. Mr. WADE, of Ohio.

Mr. WADE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see that my services in this House are becoming better appreciated. I was here all the day doing all in my power for the good of the country, as I thought. I went out for a moment to dinner, and was returning, when I met my colleague, Mr. NICHOLS, on the steps of the rotunda. I asked him if the House had adjourned and he said it had; and thereupon I turned around and went back again to my lodging—but, after a while, I found there was a more effectual calling on me.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. PALMER, of New York.

Mr. PALMER. I am pleased to see such praiseworthy determination on the part of gentlemen around me to enforce the attendance of members; but, for myself, I will say, that since I took my seat here, on the 7th of December, I have not been absent from the House one day. Sick or well, I have been in my seat. To-day when the usual hour for dinner arrived, apprehending a long session, and not being able to remain here till six o'clock without refreshment, I went down to dinner, and when I came back I found the doors closed.

Mr. BLISS. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, (at twenty-eight minutes past six o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GROW. I thought it was understood that we should go through with the call.

Mr. LEITER. I appeal to the gentleman to withdraw that motion. In fairness to those gentlemen who have been brought here, let us execute the order in good faith.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I withdraw the motion.

The SPEAKER. Mr. DAVIS, of Iowa.

Mr. DAVIS, of Iowa. I answered to my name when I was called, and have not been out of the Hall since.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair owes the gentleman from Iowa an apology for calling on him. His name was returned by the Sergeant-at-Arms. The gentleman's name is recorded as being present.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, (at half past six o'clock.) I now renew the motion to adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. LEITER. Would it be in order now to have the sick-list of the Pennsylvanians read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has great doubts on the subject. [Laughter.]

Mr. KELSEY. Would it be in order to call up the resolutions reported by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, in relation to the Clayton-Bulwer treaty at this time? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It is hardly in order, as there is no quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I ask the consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the absentees from the House on the last vote by yeas and nays before adjournment be entered upon the Journal and reported in the Globe.

Mr. KELSEY. The Chair cannot entertain the resolution, as there is no quorum present.

Mr. MOORE. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolution has not been received.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. My resolution does not refer to this proceeding, but to the proceedings of the earlier part of the session.

Mr. COLFAX. I rise to a question of order. There is no quorum here for the transaction of business.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution is not in order, inasmuch as there is no quorum here, and the House is engaged in the call.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in pursuance of the order of the House, Mr. CASE, of Indiana, was within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CASE, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. Have you any excuse to offer to the House for your absence?

Mr. CASE. I think I have a very good one. I remained here about three quarters of an hour after the House had stopped doing business in Committee of the Whole. I then went home to get my dinner, and when I came back I found the doors closed. A man has to eat in Washington as everywhere else. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEITER. After the excuse which the gentleman has given, I move that he be discharged on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. Suppose the House should adjourn now: would the residue of the order of the House be executed to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will consider that question for a moment.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. ATKINS, SHAW of North Carolina, and TALBOT, were now within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. TALBOT, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for having absented yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. What excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. TALBOT. I have very little excuse to offer, except that I thought the House was in the act of adjourning when I left.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that my friend and colleague be discharged on the payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina, what excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I have only to say that I remained here until five o'clock. The vote had then been taken on the adjournment, and I was informed by one of the pages on the floor that there was a majority in favor of the adjournment. Being somewhat anxious to get my dinner, I withdrew before the result of the vote was announced by the Chair. That is all the excuse I have to offer.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Inasmuch as the gentleman from North Carolina has given an excuse that has been approved of by the House before, I will move that he be discharged upon the payment of the fees. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ATKINS, what excuse have you to render for your absence?

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I have exactly the same excuse that was rendered by my friend from North Carolina, [Mr. SHAW.] I thought the House was about to adjourn. My excuse is not quite as good as his, as he left a little later than I did. I left after answering to my name. I supposed the House would adjourn, as it had been in session for five or six hours. I had also the same excuse which the gentleman from North Carolina had—an empty stomach. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the House will extend the same tender consideration to my colleague that it has extended to others. [Laughter.] I move that he be discharged from custody upon the payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the Doorkeeper admit my colleague, Mr. COBB. He was here during the call, and his name is recorded.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. He is here at the door, and can come in if he desires. He says he knows his rights.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. BOYCE and HUGHES were now within the bar.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BOYCE, of South Carolina, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absence from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. BOYCE. I thought that I had been remarkably attentive to the proceedings of the House, to-day, and, at the proper hour, I went to get my dinner. On my return, I found the doors of the House closed.

Mr. GARNETT. As a reward to a faithful servant, I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of the usual fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. HUGHES, of Indiana, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself without its permission. What reason have you to assign in excuse?

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. Speaker, I learned that the Sergeant-at-Arms was looking after me, and I began, at once, to look after him. I found him before he found me, and, therefore, I hope that the costs will be assessed in my favor against him. [Laughter.]

Mr. WINSLOW. I propose for the gentleman the same leniency that was extended to the gentleman from South Carolina. I move that he be discharged on the payment of costs.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. GROW. Is there not a rule compelling the closing of the doors until this order is issued?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that the doorkeepers will not allow a member to retire unless on his parole of honor to return, and return speedily.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I think, now, that we are punishing ourselves more than those outside. It is certain that we do not expect to do any business here to-night.

Mr. COVODE. I suggest that the Sergeant-at-Arms employ a larger force than he seems to have in bringing members in.

The SPEAKER. That is a matter within the discretion of the Sergeant-at-Arms. The Sergeant-at-Arms informs the Chair that he has five deputies.

Mr. HUGHES. If the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania be before the House, I should like to propose that there be a call for volunteers. [Laughter.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. ABBOTT, POTTER, KELLOGG, ENGLISH, TAYLOR of New York, COCKERILL, BILLINGHURST, WOODSON, and ANDERSON, were within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ABBOTT, of Maine, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason do you assign as an excuse for your absence?

Mr. ABBOTT. None in the world, except that I wanted my dinner, and went to get it. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that my colleague be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. POTTER, of Wisconsin, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. POTTER. I went to dinner; and after dinner, not feeling well, I came back, but found the doors closed. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEITER. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. KELLOGG, of Illinois, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sessions without permission. You will assign your reason for your absence.

Mr. KELLOGG. The only excuse I have is, that when it grew tiresome and dull here, I went into the city to get some dinner.

Mr. FOSTER. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ENGLISH, of Indiana, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sessions without its permission. What reason have you to assign for absence?

Mr. ENGLISH. I believe that I have a lawful excuse. I left the House about half past two o'clock, for the purpose of procuring some information at the Post Office Department in reference to business pending before the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the same terms as others have—by the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. TAYLOR, of New York, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason in excuse have you to assign?

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I left the House at quarter before five o'clock, under the impression that the vote then being taken on the adjournment would be decided in the affirmative. I find, however, that I was mistaken. I have nothing to offer but this, that I have had a good dinner and had excellent company on my return here.

Mr. KELSEY. The gentleman seems to be the victim of misplaced confidence. I move that he be discharged on the payment of fees. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. COCKERILL, of Ohio, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What excuse have you to make for that absence?

Mr. COCKERILL. Not being willing to fast longer than eight hours, I went to dinner. I have no other excuse. I am here now, ready for business.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BILLINGHURST. Mr. BILLINGHURST. For several days past I have been engaged on the Committee of the Judiciary from ten o'clock till the adjournment of the House, and have been absent by leave of the House. To-day, some time after four o'clock, when the committee adjourned, I went to my boarding place and took my dinner; and accidentally hearing that the House was yet in session, and that there was a call made, I came immediately to the House and reported myself to the Sergeant-at-Arms. That is the only excuse I have.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. In consideration of the extreme diligence of my colleague on the Judiciary Committee, I would move that he be discharged on the payment of fees. [Laughter.]

Mr. BILLINGHURST. If this includes travel to the Sergeant-at-Arms, I must take to myself some credit for coming voluntarily, and reporting myself. I hope I shall not be charged with any travel fees.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will have the right to appeal to the Speaker, if he objects to the taxation of costs.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. WOODSON, of Missouri.

Mr. WOODSON. I think I have as good an excuse as any man on earth has. Yesterday, my wife left me [laughter] to go home, and to-day I have felt very little like participating in legislation. I hope, therefore, I will be unanimously excused.

Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania. I hope the gentleman will be excused without payment of fees.

Mr. LEITER. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STEWART] is, in my judgment, under arrest; and he has hardly a right to make a motion. He is not in good standing in court.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman paid his fees?

Mr. WOODSON. I have arranged them.

Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania. No one has a right to raise that point except the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Mr. SHAW, of North Carolina. I move that the gentleman from Missouri be fined double the usual fees for permitting his lady to leave.

Mr. KELSEY. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania by inserting, on payment of fees.

Mr. STEWART, of Pennsylvania. I accept the amendment.

The motion, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. SPINNER. I have heard it suggested that the Sergeant-at-Arms is in the habit of not collecting the fees from delinquents. If that is so, this is a very expensive amusement for the Government; and I should like to know the fact before I vote for more fines.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that, where the House orders fees to be paid by members, the House, of course, will not be responsible for them.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ANDERSON, of Missouri.

Mr. ANDERSON. My wife left this evening for Boston, and I considered it my duty as an affectionate husband to escort her to the depot and see her safely off.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I think that, as this gentleman has been peculiarly situated, and has had the pleasure, while he was absent, of discharging his private duties, I move that he be excused on the payment of costs.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Can I be permitted, being under arrest, to offer an amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that a gentleman who has been discharged by order of the House may make a motion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Is not the discharge a conditional one, dependent on the payment of fees?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It is a condition precedent, not subsequent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman has the right to make a motion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I wish to correct the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana. He remarked that the gentleman from Missouri ought to pay the fees, as the cause of his absence was a pleasant one. It certainly could not have been very pleasant to the gentleman from Missouri to see his wife parting from him. I think, therefore, the House has been deceived in the remarks of the gentleman from Louisiana. The gentleman from Missouri was not only absent in the discharge of a high duty, but he was suffering exceedingly in the separation from his wife. I therefore move, as an amendment, that the gentleman be discharged without the payment of fees.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. In reply to my friend from New York, I beg leave to remark that I conceive there could be no greater pleasure for an affectionate husband than the consciousness of having discharged a duty to his wife. [Immoderate laughter.] As the gentleman has absented himself from the discharge of his public duties, and has the pleasing consciousness of having performed a private duty, I trust the amendment will be rejected.

Mr. LEITER. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri at what hour the train left?

Mr. ANDERSON. About half past three o'clock; and I supposed that, at that time, the House, as usual, had adjourned; but I ask that I may be treated the same way as other members have been.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. TAYLOR, of New York; and it was not agreed to.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. ANDERSON was discharged on the payment of costs.

Mr. WALBRIDGE, (to the Speaker.) Please, sir, may I go out? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will get a pass at the door. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEITER. I find my colleague, Mr. Cox, under arrest, and I do not wish for any Ohio member to be under arrest.

A MEMBER. I think he ought to stand.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. COX, TRIPPE, ZOLLICOFFER, and CLAY, were before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. Cox, of Ohio, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for having absented yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. What excuse have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I have simply to say that I have been home among my constituents, and have only arrived here to-day. I found some malignant diseases prevailing at home, and among the rest the small-pox; and I do not know but that I may have it now. My wife was vaccinated when I was at home; and in traveling on here, she became very sick and feverish, and I have been caring for her all the afternoon.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I move that my colleague be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES. I believe that the object of the call is to bring in a quorum.

[Cries of "No," "No."]

Mr. HUGHES. There has been no quorum here up to this time, until the arrival of Mr. Cox. I think there is now a quorum here.

Mr. MORGAN. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is no question pending before the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I was going to make a motion that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. CLEMENS. I ask for the regular order of business.

Mr. HUGHES. I shall submit no motion.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ZOLLICOFFER, you have been brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I have none other than that I supposed the time had come when the House ought to adjourn, and that it probably had adjourned.

Mr. MAYNARD. I move that my colleague be discharged from arrest; and inasmuch as he seems to have no very good excuse, that he be required to pay the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TRIPPE.

Mr. TRIPPE. Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have ever been caught in this category. I have not been arrested. I came here voluntarily. I thought the House had adjourned. Indeed, I had heard so, and was thunderstruck when I found that the House was still in session.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. As from the information which the gentleman from Georgia has given us, it seems that this is the first time that TRIPPE has tripped, I move that he be discharged upon the payment of the fees. [Laughter.]

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CLAY, what reason have you to give for your absence?

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I came here this morning suffering and coughing like a funeral, when I ought not to have left my house. I came here, sir, because I believed that the Clayton-Bulwer resolutions would perhaps come up to-day, and I had determined, that if I died in my tracks here in the House, and in this seat, I would reassert and maintain the Monroe doctrine. [Much laughter.] I staid here, sir, for hours, suffering greatly, and finally supposing that upon the rising of the committee, and upon the report of my honorable colleague from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] whom I do not see here now, [laughter,] the House was about to adjourn, and that there would be no chance for the Clayton-Bulwer resolutions to-day, or for me to die in my tracks in their defense, [laughter;] I therefore supposed that it would be better for me to return to the place from which I ought not to have come this morning—to my bed at home. I was summoned, not by the Sergeant-at-Arms of this House, but by quite a young man, with a cap on, [laughter,] who said he came from the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I immediately determined to obey the mandates of this House, whether by its highest executive officer, or by anybody who pretended to represent it; and I come, and now submit myself very respectfully to the control of the House.

Mr. MORGAN. On account of the great suffering which the gentleman has undergone, I move that he be discharged on payment of the fees.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I think that after the statement of the gentleman from Kentucky, he ought to be discharged without costs. He has stated to the House that he ought not to have left his bed this morning, and I understand that the remark was not made in jest, but in all sincerity. I move to amend the motion of the gentleman from New York, by striking out the payment of fees.

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. MORGAN's motion was then agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. MILLSON was present within the bar.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MILLSON, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. MILLSON. I have not been absent all the time voluntarily. I have been trying for some time past to get into the House. I had not intended to absent myself from the House. My purpose was to stay in the House until its adjournment. I was here and voted on the question of adjournment. Immediately after voting, having a lady in the gallery under my charge, I went out and attended her to an omnibus, intending and expecting to return before the conclusion of the roll-call. On my way back, I met two or three members of the House who told me the House had adjourned. I did not doubt the fact, but in order to be particularly correct and accurate, I walked on and inquired of two or three gentlemen, and they made the same statement, that the House had adjourned. I did not doubt the fact, and I then went home. I casually learned afterwards that the flag was still flying, and I returned to the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Would it be in order to move that the names of those who have not come in be read?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes that that could be done. There are one hundred and eighteen absentees.

Mr. ENGLISH. Is it in order to move to take up the resolution to abrogate the Clayton-Bulwer convention for the gentleman from Kentucky?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, no quorum being present.

Mr. COLFAX. Is it in order to inquire whether the Sergeant-at-Arms has yet found the whereabouts of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. No return has been made.

Mr. MOORE. With a view to see whether a quorum is present, I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MOORE. I withdraw my motion.

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair. After the House proceeds to the call, and takes the excuses of such members as present themselves, would it not be competent to make a motion fixing some day next week for hearing the excuses of those who are still absent? I see by Cushing's Parliamentary Manual that that course has been adopted in the British House of Commons, and that it has been adopted here.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. There is no quorum here to do that.

The SPEAKER. Less than a quorum can order the attendance of members.

Mr. BILLINGHURST. Can less than a quorum fix some future day for hearing excuses?

Mr. CLEMENS. If less than a quorum can compel the attendance of members, I think it can.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. CLAY. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have been here over nine hours.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is the question debatable? The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not propose to debate it.

Mr. WINSLOW. The gentleman has made a motion to adjourn, and it must be put without debate.

Mr. GARNETT. If the House adjourns will not the members the Sergeant-at-Arms arrests remain in his custody until the morning?

The SPEAKER. The precedents seem to be in conflict on the subject. It is stated that proceedings on a call of the House may be terminated at any time, by a vote, and that, in that case, members under arrest are thereby discharged. It is further stated, that in the mean time, members, under the rule, though personally present, are not allowed to participate in the proceedings, or are not recognized as members of the assembly by the Presiding Officer.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for the yeas and nays on his motion.

Mr. WINSLOW called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question was taken; and the motion was not agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. JENKINS, JOHN COCHRANE, and HATCH, were now before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. JENKINS, of Virginia, you have been arrested and brought before the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its session without its permission. What excuse have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, not being familiar with the proceedings of the House in such cases, I should rather some other member had been called first. [Laughter.] I suppose, however, that the Chair desires to know simply whether I have or have not a sufficient reason for absenting myself. I had a sufficient reason for myself, but I suppose it would not be sufficient for the House.

Mr. MOORE. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAY. I move that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

The SPEAKER. The motion cannot be entertained. The House is engaged in executing the order that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CLAY. Is it in order to move to take up the business on the Speaker's table?

The SPEAKER. It is not, for the same reason.

Mr. CLAY. Is the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union in order?

The SPEAKER. The House is executing an order that there be a call of the House, and no motion is in order except to adjourn; and for this additional reason, that there is no quorum.

Mr. CLAY. Is it in order to call the previous question on the call of the House? [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The previous question does not operate on the call.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I appear before the House, and on its call, under untoward circumstances. I had done—at least I so supposed—my duty during the day, for I had voted steadily with the Administration on every measure that came up, [laughter,] especially on one favorite measure, (at least it has always been a favorite measure of mine,) the motion to adjourn. I had delivered my last vote, and professed my last principle for the day, and was accompanying valiant men of war through the door. The wholesome, burly form of my friend from Kentucky, [Mr. MARSHALL,] who I regret to see is still absent, was in advance. He had delivered his battle well: so had we all. There were other companions with me; and on wholesome communication we were all unanimously of opinion that the House had adjourned. We supposed that they were foolish virgins whom we left behind, trimming their lamps, and crying for doctrines and for signs, when no more signs were to be given, evidently this day. I returned to my quarters, and was "taking mine ease in mine inn," when I was sharply arrested by the rude hand of your fell Sergeant.

Great, sir, was the shock of that arrest. The man physiological was astounded; the man psychological was appalled. Sir, my whole federal constitution trembled at the touch, and my whole

"Nature, through all her works,
Gave signs of woe that all was lost."

Sir, I felt then, and I am even now inclined to think, that I have a right to arraign the House for its want of respect to me. Why is it, sir, that after a five hours' sitting, a gentleman, a Representative, a patriot, [laughter,] an Administration man, [laughter,] one who disavows the spoils and contemns them, having voted as steadily as I did on every Administration measure, and at last having voted religiously to adjourn, in company with that noble band of patriots whom I have described—one who enjoyed himself as I did—why, I say, is it that all the rights and privileges of such a one were stricken down? Why was it that, in company with an honorable and venerable Senator from New York, whose burly figure reminded me of the trencher feets that he and I had just been performing—why was it then, that senatorial dignity was insulted—that a Representative of the people of a great State was arrested, on such an occasion, in the open streets of Washington? and above all, why was it—

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is expected to answer questions, not to ask them.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Sir, I am pursuing the Socratic method. [Great laughter.] I admit the gentleman's plea, put in on behalf of the House. I take it, and, sir, with Pickwickian magnanimity, I extend a measure of pardon to it

Sir, my excuse is this: that in company with these reliable gentlemen I have described, and impressed with the opinion which I have announced,—that our votes had determined the question, and that the House had adjourned—I thought there was good reason for my leaving the House. Whether it was excusable in those whom I left behind me to remain, is a question which it is not for me to determine; but upon which I entertain a very decided opinion.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I have listened with great satisfaction to what has fallen from my distinguished friend from New York. I sympathize with him in the various indignities that have been heaped upon him; I sympathize with him when he relates the story of his wrongs; I fancy now that I see him engaged in that trencher service; I fancy now that I see him enjoying all that satisfaction with which a wise man knows so well how to enjoy good viands and delicious wines. Sir, I sympathize with the gentleman when I remember that, after all this enjoyment, and when the probability is that his mind was full of those glowing images excited by the action of the rosy god, he should then, whilst in that glorious state, when in that condition that he felt that he was

"O'er all the ills of life victorious," have been grasped by the rude hand of authority, [much laughter,] that those feelings of his should have been disturbed; and that he should have been compelled to descend from that elevation to this lower world.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. May I interrupt the gentleman for one moment? Does he presume to insinuate that I was high? [Great laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. I rise to a question of order. I maintain that if, while there is a quorum of the House here, it is wrong to impute improper motives to a gentleman, it is much more wrong when the party is arraigned as a culprit before the House. [Laughter.] I therefore call my honorable friend from Louisiana to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana will avoid personalities. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I beg, in the most humble spirit, to apologize to the House if I have unwittingly indulged in allusions to any gentleman upon this floor, and above all to my honorable friend from New York, which are supposed to have touched him personally. I will say, however, in exculpation of myself, that I did not for one moment believe that my honorable friend was low. [Laughter.] I therefore did him the honor to believe, not that he was "high" in the sense to which he refers, but only that he was somewhat elevated in a Pickwickian sense. [Renewed laughter.] And now, sir, in consideration of the gentleman's sufferings, I do most cordially entreat the House that they will extend to the honorable gentleman the favors which have been so mercifully extended to so many of his unfortunate predecessors; and I move that he be discharged upon the payment of the fees. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Is that a feasible motion? [Renewed laughter.]

The SPEAKER. It has been entertained as such.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Before the motion is put, I desire, with the consent of the House, to ask the honorable member from Louisiana for some explanation. He says that he is not prepared to say that my honorable colleague is low, and he repudiates the idea that he is high—leaving us to infer that my colleague is Jack, as the Sergeant-at-Arms is to get the game. [Laughter.] The gentleman has confused the House, and I should like some explanation.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I rise to a personal explanation. It may be supposed that I am insensible to the many remarks which may be presumed to have personal allusion to myself, but I am not—I assure you I am not. My body is not my own. It is in the possession of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I call upon that officer to see that a member of this House is not treated disrespectfully. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER stated the question to be on agreeing to the motion of Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana, that Mr. JOHN COCHRANE be discharged from custody, on payment of the fees

Mr. CLAY. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If that proposition is divisible, I should like the question on the first portion of it to be put first. [Laughter.]

Mr. CLAY. I withdraw the demand for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the motion of Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana, was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms here appeared, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. BURNS and KNAPP were within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. HATCH, what reasons have you to assign for your absence from the sittings of the House without its permission?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I have no particular excuse to offer. I stayed in the House until late in the afternoon—until I thought it probable that the House would soon adjourn. I certainly thought the time had arrived when it ought to adjourn, and I left.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I submit whether that is a sufficient excuse?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody, on the payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BURNS, of Ohio.

Mr. BURNS. I am here, sir.

The SPEAKER. You have been arrested, Mr. BURNS, and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from the sittings of the House without its permission. What excuse have you to offer for so doing?

Mr. BURNS. I went home to get something to eat, sir. [Laughter.] It is unconstitutional to starve a man. I was here from eleven o'clock this morning until five o'clock this afternoon, and was here when the vote was taken on the adjournment.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. As the excuse of the gentleman from Ohio is exceedingly satisfactory, I move that he be discharged from custody on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNS here resumed his seat.

Mr. CLAY. I submit whether a prisoner in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms has a right to resume his seat?

The SPEAKER. Ex gratia, the Chair thinks the gentleman might be allowed to do so. [Laughter.]

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. GROESBECK was now within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. KNAPP, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without permission. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. KNAPP. After remaining in my place here for about five hours, it occurred to me that it would be seasonable and suitable for me to step out for the purpose of taking my usual and ordinary refreshment. For that purpose, I hastened to my quarters, intending in good faith to return immediately after accomplishing my object. I did so, and on coming here found the doors very unexpectedly closed. I proceeded at once to the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and was by him informed of the reason of this extraordinary state of things. It was without any intention to disrespect or disregard the proper authority of this House that I took the liberty thus to absent myself; and I am here on duty at the earliest moment I could return. I feel no disposition to call in question the authority of the House. I go further, and say that if, in doing as I have, I have infringed upon the letter or spirit of the rules of the House, I am heartily willing to be forgiven. [Laughter.]

Mr. COLFAX. As the House ought to be forgiving, and as the gentleman was not taking a nap, I move that he be discharged on the payment of the fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. GROESBECK, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. GROESBECK. I do not know that I have any reason for absenting myself from the sittings of the House. I left here about half past four o'clock, and went to my dinner. I have not been waited on by the officer of the House. I returned voluntarily, seeing a light in the dome, and supposing that some important business might be on hand. I came here of my own accord. I have no excuse whatever. If it be in opposition to the rules of the House for me to absent myself at that time, I have no apology to make.

Mr. KELSEY. As the gentleman has no excuse for leaving the House under the circumstances, I move that the severest penalty inflicted upon any be inflicted upon him; that is, that he be discharged on the payment of the fees.

Mr. HUGHES. I move to strike out payment of the fees; and I do it for this reason—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Is this question debatable?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that it is.

Mr. HUGHES. It was perfectly in order that a question of order should be raised on me before I had commenced. If it had not been done, this would have been the first time during the present session that it had not been done.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the gentleman from Ohio ought not to be subject to the payment of fees, for the reason that the excuse he has given, in my opinion, is sufficient to exempt him from any expense of that kind. I say this, not because there is anything particular in the excuse itself, but I believe it is the best excuse which has been given in the hearing of the House since I have been present during the giving of excuses. It is a good excuse on the same ground that an old lady once pronounced a certain sermon the best that she had ever heard in her life. She had been to church, and when she had returned she told her husband that she had heard the best sermon that was ever delivered in her hearing. Her husband asked her why it was the best. She could not tell exactly; but it was the best sermon she had ever heard in her life. "Well," said he, "what was the text?" "Oh, I do not know; but it was the best sermon I ever heard in my life." "What did the minister talk about?" "Oh, I do not know that; but it was the best sermon I ever heard in my life." "It is a strange thing," said he, "that you say it is the best sermon you ever heard in your life, and yet you cannot tell what was the text, or what it was he spoke of." She replied, "I do not remember the text, and I do not remember what he said; but it was the best sermon I ever heard in all my life, because he spoke in such a godly tone!" [Great laughter.]

Mr. BILLINGHURST. I rise to a question of order. The imposition of a fine is a matter of business, and the Chair has decided that less than a quorum cannot transact business. The proposition now is to discharge the gentleman from Ohio on the payment of fees. I take it that that is business; and to discharge or impose a fine upon the gentleman can be done only by a quorum. Less than a majority cannot fine a member or inflict any punishment whatever.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Less than a quorum can discharge, attaching a condition to the discharge.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered; there being, on a division of the House—yeas 9, noes 71.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on the motion to discharge the gentleman from Ohio on payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. TAPPAN, FENTON, and FARNSWORTH, were now before the bar of the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I connected my speech with a motion. What became of the motion?

The SPEAKER. The Chair heard the speech, but did not hear the motion.

Mr. HUGHES. I refer the Chair to the Manual, where the Chair will find that it is a breach of privilege for the Chair not to put a question which is in order. I made that motion in order. If the Chair did not hear it, it is not my fault.

The SPEAKER. As the matter has been disposed of and passed, it is too late for the gentleman to call it up.

Mr. HUGHES. I appeal from that decision.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. GROW. I should like to know how the Chair is to put a question which he did not hear?

Mr. CLAY. Would it be in order to move to reconsider the vote, in order that the gentleman may get in his amendment?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to be heard upon my appeal.

Mr. WINSLOW. Is the appeal debatable?

The SPEAKER. No. But the Chair hopes the gentleman will be indulged.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I am willing to hear the gentleman; but some of us have been here all day, and I trust that the gentlemen coming in at this late hour will not insist on making speeches.

Mr. HUGHES. I am going to speak on that point.

Mr. MORGAN. I object to his saying a single word, except he is entitled to do so.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce the following:

Ordered, That the fees imposed, under the present call of the House, upon the absentee members, be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, and that all further proceedings under said call be dispensed with.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. HUGHES. I wish to state the grounds of my motion. I made the motion to exempt the gentleman from Ohio from the payment of the fees, in good faith. I did it for this reason, that the House had voted to adjourn; and that it had been announced, though not by the Speaker, that the House had adjourned.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please confine himself to stating the grounds of his appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HUGHES. I would be glad to be indulged in some latitude. If the Chair confines me strictly to the appeal, I will conform to the wishes of the Chair. All that I have to say on that subject is this: I made the motion to strike out the words, "on the payment of fees." I made it as distinctly as, with the voice I have, I could make any motion. I suppose the Chair did not hear it. What ought to be done in a case of that sort?

Mr. CLEMENS. I will state for the satisfaction of the gentleman from Indiana, what perhaps he is not aware of himself, that there are occasions when his volume of voice does not reach me here, near as I am to him. It is a fault of his, in the commencement of his speech especially, not to speak in an audible tone, even to me here. If, therefore, the gentleman is so unfortunate as to speak in a low tone, the remedy is, let him increase his voice.

Mr. HUGHES. That is the point exactly. I suppose my constituents have a right to be heard on this floor; and if they happen to send a Representative who has not a strong voice—myself, for instance, or the gentleman from Mississippi, [Mr. QUITMAN]—is that a reason why they should be deprived of their right to be heard here? When a member makes a motion, and does so as loud as that member can ordinarily speak, and the Chair, exercising the highest degree of diligence, does not hear him, it is an accident for which the member and his constituents are not to be prejudiced. And when the matter is brought to the attention of the Chair, and the fact is ascertained, I conceive that, instead of cutting off the motion on the ground that it was not heard, the better course would be to submit the motion to the House. And if I remember aright, there have been many instances during the present session in which a similar course has been pursued.

Now, I do not want to have the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GROESBECK], or any other gentleman, subjected to any penalties in this matter, because I conceive this whole proceeding is unnecessary and wrong; and I made the motion for the purpose of arresting this process of inflicting pains and penalties on members of the House who were in no default, and which are ultimately to be paid out of the contingent fund of this House, as they generally are paid. Gentlemen around me will testify that I made the motion in the right time. I hope, therefore, the Chair will reconsider this matter without a vote on the appeal, which I do not intend to ask, because this is an appeal to the Chair, not to the House. If the Chair does not submit my motion I shall withdraw my appeal. I submit to the Speaker that, on the fact being called to his attention that the motion was made, it would not be amiss for him to submit that question to the House.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Indiana had called the attention of the Chair to the fact that he had offered an amendment before the resolution was announced to the House, the Chair would, with great pleasure, have arrested the decision of the question, and have propounded his amendment. The Chair did not hear the amendment which the gentleman says he offered; and, on inquiry from the Clerk, who sits nearer the gentleman, the Chair learns that the Clerk did not hear it. The only time for the gentleman to have corrected the wrong action of the Chair was before the result was announced on the main question. The Chair thinks it is too late now to reach it in any other way than that indicated by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. CLAY], by moving to reconsider the vote.

Mr. HUGHES. I withdraw my appeal; and I hope the gentleman will submit that motion.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to a question of privilege. I understand that, up at the President's House, there are a large number of members of this House now dining. I understand, further, that an officer of this House has been there and been refused admittance; and that he has been told by members of that house, and by those having the house in charge, that no members of this House are there. I am told that there are members of this House there, and, among others, the distinguished head of the Committee of Ways and Means, enjoying themselves, while we are sitting here without a quorum. I think that it is a disgrace to the House, and I would like to know what is to be done in a case of this kind?

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain a question of privilege while the House is engaged in the call.

Mr. CLAY. I move that the vote, by which Mr. GROESBECK was discharged on payment of fees, be reconsidered.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. HUGHES. I call for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were not ordered; only three members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. GILMER and McKIBBIN were now before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CHAPMAN, you have been arrested and brought before the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reasons have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. CHAPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I left the House between four and five o'clock under the impression that the House would adjourn in the course of a few minutes. I received no intimation that there had been a call of the House until a few minutes ago, and immediately on receiving that information I proceeded to the House and asked admission. I was not called upon by the Sergeant-at-Arms, and I have shown by my alacrity in attending here immediately upon being informed that there had been a call of the House, that I have no desire whatever to evade the performance of any duty that is incumbent upon me as a member of this House. This is all the excuse I have to offer.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. In consideration of the great alacrity which has been displayed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and in consideration, too, of his appearing to enjoy good health—which seems to be an unusual thing with the members of his delegation, [laughter]—I trust he may be discharged from custody on payment of the fees; and I make that motion.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Is this a debatable question?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I have been debating in my own mind whether this question does not merit more serious consideration than the House is apparently about to give it. In my judgment, the excuse of the gentleman from Pennsylvania is much too good; and I therefore move that in place of paying the fees, he shall pay a fine of $5,000; and on that motion I ask the yeas and nays. [Laughter.] If any gentleman is willing to suggest a larger sum, I will accept it. I pause for a reply.

A MEMBER. Say $10,000.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I accept that modification; and ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COLFAX. What does the gentleman intend to do with the money?

Mr. GREENWOOD. Pay it on the New York fire bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Bestow it on the contingent fund.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I suppose these motions will all be entered on the Journal, and read to the House to-morrow morning. If they are not, I shall move to correct the Journal.

The SPEAKER. All the motions that are voted on will be entered on the Journal; but the Chair thinks that the motion of the gentleman from New York is not in order.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair.

The motion of Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana, was then agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. FARNSWORTH, what excuse have you to offer for absenting yourself from the sittings of the House without its permission?

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I was in the House from eleven o'clock until five, when I went to my boarding-house—a few steps off—to my tea. I supposed the House would adjourn in a very few minutes. The Committee of the Whole had reported to the House that there was no quorum present. I took my supper, and had no knowledge that this proceeding was going on until a few minutes ago, when I came over voluntarily, and meeting the Sergeant-at-Arms, found myself reported to the House as an absentee, and as under arrest.

Mr. GROW. I have a word to say in reply to a remark which fell from the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES.] He said that he thought this call was useless. I think that it is not useless, and those who ordered it thought so, for the reason that almost every day the Committee of the Whole finds itself without a quorum at three or half past three o'clock, when we have over three hundred bills upon the Private Calendar, and when it is utterly impossible that we can do the business which this Congress ought to do before the 7th of June, the day fixed by resolution for adjournment, unless members enough remain here to make a quorum later than three o'clock in the afternoon. I now move that the gentleman from Illinois be discharged from custody on the payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. FENYON, what excuse have you to offer for your absence from the sittings of the House without leave?

Mr. FENTON. Mr. Speaker, I am generally present during the sittings of the House; and I was present to-day from eleven o'clock until some time after four o'clock. Feeling quite unwell, I then retired from the House, and remained in my room until a short time since, when I returned to the Hall without any knowledge that there was a call of the House. I have no further excuse to offer.

Mr. GROW. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on payment of the fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. GILMER, what excuse have you to tender for your absence?

Mr. GILMER. I regret very much if my absence has operated to retard the business of the House; but my excuse is, that I remained here a long time, having no business in behalf of my own constituents, who have no claims, and I believe never did have any, against the Government. Being a more industrious man than most of our fellow-members, I worked so hard up to half past four o'clock that I got fatigued; and, as I saw a great many of my friends down with the same complaint, and stretched upon sofas, I went home to get my dinner. In addition to that, a very venerable gentleman from my district is here; and inasmuch as I found that my friends who have business to attend to for their constituents were not disposed to attend to it, I thought I should be justified in tendering to that gentleman the civilities usually tendered to our constituents who visit the capital. I was in my own room, behaving myself peacefully and calmly, until I was sent for. I would have come at any moment; but I had no idea that my handsome presence was required by anybody in the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. In consideration of the mitigating circumstances attending the case of my friend from North Carolina, who was very much fatigued with doing nothing, I move that he be discharged on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I wish to inquire of the Sergeant-at-Arms, through the Chair, whether he has been at the White House. It is a fact that the country ought to know, whether members are there and refuse to come in under the order of the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to this. Let the Sergeant-at-Arms make his return to the House.

The SPEAKER. That is the formal way.

Mr. MORGAN. Withdraw the objection.

Mr. HUGHES. No, sir; I object to semi-official assaults upon men who are not permitted to defend themselves upon this floor.

Mr. JEWETT. I do not profess to be much acquainted with the usages of the House, but I learn, for the first time, that it is not regarded as a good excuse that a member was dining with the President.

Mr. STANTON. I would like to know whether a messenger is left waiting the convenience of members at the White House.

Mr. HUGHES. I object.

The SPEAKER. Mr. McKIBBIN, of California, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. McKIBBIN. It was impossible for me to be here before four or five o'clock, which is the usual hour of adjournment, and I did not come here then, thinking that an adjournment would be effected. I was not aware that the House was in session until summoned by the deputy Sergeant-at-Arms. I responded to his call immediately.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. POTTLE was within the bar.

The SPEAKER. Mr. POTTLE, of New York, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absenting yourself from its sittings without its permission. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. POTTLE. I was arrested in my seat just this moment. Is it an offense for a member to be in his seat?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is put down as an absentee.

Mr. POTTLE. I have no doubt that I was absent at the call of the House; but, sir, I came to the House, and came through the door as usual. No question was asked, and I of course answered none.

So far as an excuse for absence is concerned, I will say that I came here this morning at the usual hour, and remained until four o'clock.

Mr. READY. I think the arrest was an illegal one, and I move to quash it.

Mr. COX. Has a return been made by the Sergeant-at-Arms?

Mr. POTTLE. I have no doubt that I was absent when the call commenced, and I do not seek to avoid anything here by a quibble. I was allowed to come in, I presume the Doorkeeper mistaking me for one of the members who had gone out for refreshment. I think that no blame can attach to him. If there was any fault it was my own, in not informing him that I was one of the absentees. I desire to say that I came here at eleven o'clock this morning and remained until after four o'clock, when I left, suffering with headache that rendered me incapable of doing any business here. I went to my room, laid down upon my sofa, and remained there until a gentleman with whom I had made a casual acquaintance called, and I took a walk out with him. We met several members and I asked whether the House had adjourned; I was told by Judge CRAWFORD that he did not know. I came to the Capitol, and when upon the steps I learned from a gentleman just leaving, that there was a call of the House, and that he had answered to his name. I am here ready to hear the penalty whatever it may be.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move that the gentleman be discharged from custody on the payment of fees.

Mr. HOARD. I think the gentleman stated that his absence was caused by indisposition; and I move, therefore, that he be discharged unconditionally.

Mr. POTTLE. I wish to say that I do not care about this matter one way or other. I am willing to compare my record with that of any member. If I have not kept my seat as faithfully as my fellow-members, I am willing to pay a double fine.

Mr. GOOCH. Can a member be arrested in his seat?

The SPEAKER. If he gets there improperly he can. It was a violation of the order of the House for the gentleman to come in after the doors were closed.

The question was taken on Mr. HOARD's motion; and it was disagreed to.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BINGHAM; and it was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS. I move that the House adjourn.

The question was taken; and the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to ask the Chair whether it will not be in order to move, that when this House adjourns, if all the absent members shall not have been brought in at that time, all further proceedings under this call shall be suspended until to-morrow morning at eleven o'clock, and make it the special order at that time? The reason I make the motion is this: I am willing to remain here to carry out this order, but I am not willing that we should adjourn before all the absent members are brought in, and that those members who succeed in avoiding the officers of this House, shall come in to-morrow morning and entirely escape the action of this House. There are at least two cases where dinner parties are in progress, where ladies have interfered and said that members of the House were not in the dwelling at the time. Is it fair to the members who are kept here, or brought here, that those who remain absent shall escape the penalties incurred by those who have been brought in under the order of the House? I am only desirous of providing for a contingency when the House chooses to adjourn, in order to put non-attending members upon the same platform as those who have been brought in, and thus make no discrimination at all. I think by consulting Cushing's Manual, that such a motion can be made. I therefore make the conditional motion that if, upon the adjournment of this House, proceedings under the call are not completed, that the names of non-attending members shall be called over and excuses heard to-morrow morning, and that it shall be the special order for eleven o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not know what book the gentleman reads from, but there is another book or instrument that I would prefer to read from, and that instrument is the one under which this House was organized in 1789, and which then put this Government in motion. That instrument provides that each House of Congress shall be the judge of the elections and qualifications of its members, and that a majority of the members of each House shall be a quorum to do business, but that a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and compel the attendance of absent members. Now, I ask you what is your authority under that instrument? Is it not to compel the attendance of absent members here? If you adjourn now, and upon the meeting of this House to-morrow morning, those gentlemen are in their seats, what authority have you over them under the Constitution, to arraign them for their absence at this session? The object of that power in the Constitution, is that you may have a majority here to do the business of the country. And whether I am correct or not, my own opinion is, that, when you have a quorum, you have no right under that Constitution, to compel the attendance of any absent members. The clear and express power is, that less than a quorum may compel the attendance of absent members. What is the object of this call? Is it to get a quorum here to do the business of the country?

Mr. GARNETT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Tennessee a question. The clause of the Constitution which the gentleman quotes, says that a quorum may do business, but that less than a quorum may adjourn, or compel the attendance of absent members. He argues from that, that more than a quorum cannot compel the attendance of absent members. Will he not continue his argument, and argue that more than a quorum cannot adjourn from day to day?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. No such conclusion can be drawn from that clause of the Constitution. But, as I was saying, what is the object of this call. I was present when you called this House to order this morning. There was not then a quorum of members present in their seats. I staid here until you had gone through with the business in the Committee of the Whole House upon the Private Calendar: I stayed here until it was ascertained that there was no quorum here upon a motion to adjourn. I voted to adjourn; and it was understood all over this House that a majority had recorded their names as having voted in the affirmative upon that motion. At that point, a good many members, as is the custom upon such occasions, and upon such understanding, took their hats and left. After they had gone out, some other gentlemen who were here—as I thought at the time in a playful sort of way—got up and changed their votes; so that, when the list was read over, and the result announced, it was found that the House had refused to adjourn, and that there was no quorum present.

Mr. LEITER. I would ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether it is not a fact that upon that motion to adjourn there was not a quorum here?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Exactly so; and I have just stated how it resulted that the House did not adjourn.

When this call was moved, I voted against it, because I was satisfied that we were to do no more business to-night. This House had been in session six hours. That was a long session; and I was satisfied—and the result has proved it so—that there was no more business to be done here. Now, we have been here nearly four hours from that time, and here we are yet; and I think it is a little doubtful whether we have many more members present than we had then.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I would inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee whether he does not know that those gentlemen whose change of votes changed the result of the motion to adjourn, are not now in their seats?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not know how that is. I am willing to sit here any time to get a quorum whenever the object is to get that quorum for the purpose of doing business, and discharging the duties incumbent upon members here, but I do not see that any good is to result to us or to the country from this sort of fancy work of going through this call for the mere purpose of getting members here. At the same time, those who have been here from the meeting of the House this morning are now being punished a good deal more than those we are now bringing here and discharging upon the payment of costs, which hereafter, I presume, as has always been the case, will be ordered to be paid out of the contingent fund.

Mr. GARNETT. I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee, that for one, I voted for his call in good faith, on the understanding that it was really to be carried out to the last.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. One question right there. Did he intend when he voted for that call, to get a quorum here for the purpose of doing business?

Mr. GARNETT. I did it for this reason. I knew we had agreed to adjourn on the 7th of June; that we had a large mass of business upon the Calendar; that a motion was already pending, moved by the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. CONN.] to prolong the session, because we were not likely to get through our business by that time; that here was bill after bill involving large amounts of money, and principles of public justice, passing through without consideration and without a quorum. I accept my full share of blame in all this; but I voted for a call because I saw a disposition on all sides of the House, and in good faith, to make an example to the country, and to enforce on all of us, present or absent, the necessity of attendance; and I should think nobody would have it more at heart than the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. JONES,] who is remarkably punctual in his attendance, and who has objection to doing business without a quorum. If he will join with us in carrying out this call, it will be an example productive of good fruits hereafter.

While I am up, I wish to say this further: that I wish it understood that if we are to go on with this call, as I am willing to do, the Sergeant-at-Arms and his officers are not to go to the theater and find gentlemen there, and when gentlemen tell them they will not attend the call, come back here and neglect to report that to the House. They are not to go to houses—I do not care where—and neglect to summon the members whom they find; but they are to go, and, with all due diligence—just as your sheriff executes an order of the court—whenever a member is found, summon him, and if he refuse to come, arrest him, and bring him here truly in custody; and unless that is to be done the whole thing is childish.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to ask my friend from Virginia, if he expects us to sit here till the Sergeant-at-Arms brings in all the members who were not excused?

Mr. GARNETT. As many as are in the city. Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Why stop at the city? why not send for all of them?

Mr. GARNETT. The Sergeant-at-Arms will make his return to the House that such and such gentlemen have been arrested, and are here present; that such and such gentlemen have not been found, and that he believes they are absent from the city; and that such and such gentlemen have been found, and have refused to attend. If he makes that return before us, I think it will be productive of good; and I repeat, I assume no special merit because I happen to be present now.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would say to the gentleman, that, in all my experience in this Hall, I have never seen a call carried out.

Mr. GARNETT. Now is the time to set a good example.

Mr. CLEMENS. As the gentleman from Tennessee has the credit of being a parliamentary leader here, and as he is known from his long service here to be particularly scrupulous in the discharge of his legislative duties, I desire, with all due respect to him, to notice some of the points which he has made in the appeal he has made to the House, and through the House to the country. He has made two pregnant confessions, which justify the course we have taken in this matter. He has referred to the fact that on several occasions, at eleven o'clock, the House proceeded to business without a quorum. He has alluded to the further fact, that, during the course of the proceedings of the House, at three or four o'clock in the afternoon, the House has been without a quorum; and this very day, when the Private Calendar was under consideration, he called the yeas and nays, for the purpose, as he declared, of seeing whether there was a quorum or not. Now, I desire that the country shall understand precisely the motives which have actuated those who have resorted to a parliamentary remedy to get rid of a parliamentary abuse. Here we are, in the discharge of our legislative duties, having a salary of $3,000 imposed upon us by a former Congress, with the expectation all over the country that the business of the country would be discharged in a shorter period.

Mr. TRIPPE. If the gentleman conceives that a salary of $3,000 is an imposition, of course he need not take it.

Mr. GILMER. I desire to ask my friends from Virginia if they are not mistaken about all this thing, and whether the pressing everything into pell-mell is not violating the expectations of the country? whether we are not expected to sit here a whole year, if necessary, to do the business calmly and patiently, and not in a hurried manner?

Mr. CLEMENS. I appeal to the gentleman from North Carolina whether it is not known that, for two months past, the chief business of the House has been upon the shoulders of the few faithful members who have chosen to sit in the House, and perform the business of the country? and whether it is not notorious that we have been passing upon measures of great public importance without a quorum being in attendance? and whether, especially since this joint resolution was passed, we have not been without a quorum at the hour of three o'clock nearly every day? I desire that the country may understand the object with which this call has been carried out, and that we shall see who are in their places at a particular time willing to discharge their duty, and who are absent and not attending to the duties of Congress and of the country.

Mr. HUGHES. I desire to know from the two gentlemen from Virginia if they propose to proclaim martial law?

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to resort to every parliamentary remedy, I care not how severe the pains and penalties may be, and to hold up recalcitrant and unwilling members to the country. That is what I have decided to do, and what, so far as I am concerned, I intend to do.

Mr. PURVIANCE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Virginia whether he was not to-day engaged in sleeping on one of the sofas? [Laughter.]

Mr. CLEMENS. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he was not sleeping on the sofa to-day at the very same time?

Mr. PURVIANCE. I will reply to the gentleman by saying that I found the gentleman from Virginia engaged in sleeping on one of the sofas, and I did interrupt him in that pleasant occupation.

Mr. POTTLE. I want to inquire of the gentleman first, whether he seriously makes the charge that this House has been sitting during the present session, day after day, doing business without a quorum? secondly, whether it is not notorious that members have been more punctual in their attendance during this Congress than perhaps in any other that ever sat since the commencement of the Government? and thirdly, I ask the gentleman if he has not repeatedly left his seat here, day after day, pairing off with me and others? Until the gentleman has answered these three questions fairly, I assume that he has no right to hold up other gentlemen to the House and to the country, as derelict in duty; and certainly, when he talks about the faithful few, I beg he will not use the pronoun "we."

Mr. CLEMENS. I can satisfy the gentleman from New York in a very few minutes, by telling him in all sober seriousness and candor that I have not arrogated anything to myself; and if he choose, he may have an affirmative answer to all the questions which he has propounded to me.

Mr. POTTLE. Thank you, sir.

Mr. GROW. Perhaps the gentleman from Virginia will state that while the Kansas matter was under consideration, there was never any want of a quorum; and that it is only since that matter has been disposed of that gentlemen have become remiss in their attendance. It shows that that matter was beneficial in one sense.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to refer especially to what every member of the House must have seen—that since we passed the resolution to meet at eleven o'clock, on various occasions, at eleven o'clock, no more than forty or fifty members have been in their seats. So far as I am concerned, if the gentlemen will allow me to use the pronoun "I," and exclude the "we," in the course that I have taken in regard to this matter, I have been actuated by the desire to leave this House by the 7th of June. I do not desire to be here during the dog-days; and it must be apparent to every one that unless some measure is resorted to for the purpose of compelling the attendance of members here, we may remain till August—

Mr. WADE. I would like to know what the question in debate is?

Mr. CLEMENS. I presumed I was speaking by the general consent of the House. I desire now to submit my motion.

Mr. SICKLES. The resolution of the gentleman from Ohio is not before the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not receive it.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Virginia yield to me for a moment?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. I wish to know if the resolution just read is before the House?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If it is, I want the yeas and nays upon it.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Why is my resolution not entertained? There is no other proposition before the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CLEMENS] is upon the floor.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Upon what question?

Mr. CLEMENS. I have made a motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that he would make a motion that the members who are marked as absentees be required to present themselves to-morrow, or on some subsequent day, and render their excuses for their absence.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. Then no proposition is now before the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. Is the motion which the gentleman from Virginia indicates that he will make in order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion—

Mr. CLEMENS. Will the Chair allow me to state my proposition in my own phraseology?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that if, upon the adjournment of this House, any of the absentees who have not been excused shall not have appeared, the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to have them in custody at eleven o'clock, a. m., to-morrow, in order that the House may take such proceedings in reference to them as it may see fit.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia. Does the gentleman mean to imply censure upon all those gentlemen who have been absent upon this call of the House?

Mr. CLEMENS. No, sir; I simply wish to treat those who are still absent as we have treated those who are now here.

Mr. CLAY. That is the purport of the gentleman's resolution; but the purport of the remarks which he made rather implied a censure, it appeared to me, upon all those gentlemen who happened to be absent after five o'clock. I wish to know if that was his intention?

Mr. CLEMENS. I cast no reflections upon individual absentees, other than those which they have themselves willingly incurred.

Mr. CLAY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him, and to ask his colleague, [Mr. GARNETT,] how many times they have been absent in Virginia since the House has been in session?

Mr. CLEMENS. Does the gentleman desire to know how often I have been absent?

Mr. CLAY. I do.

Mr. CLEMENS. The record shows that.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to have my question of order decided.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that even if the proposition of the gentleman from Virginia should be entertained and adopted by the House, all proceedings under the call would fall with the adjournment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to ask this question: Suppose the House should adjourn now, or the matter should be postponed: would it not be competent for the House at any time to proceed against and fine the members who have been absent without the leave or consent of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is rather inclined to the opinion that the House can at a subsequent time require members to answer for violating its rules.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, was now within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, you have been arrested and brought before the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without the permission of the House. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. My reason, Mr. Speaker, is, that I remained here until I saw all the persons in the Hall with their hats on, and I supposed that the House had adjourned. I saw that the House was no longer competent to do business, and I thought it was time that I should go home.

Mr. GROW. As the gentleman gives the excuse that he thought the House had adjourned, I desire to call attention to the last paragraph on page 131 of the Manual, as to what is an adjournment.

The Clerk read the paragraph, as follows:

"If the question be put for adjournment, it is no adjournment till the Speaker pronounces it; and, from courtesy and respect, no member leaves his place till the Speaker has passed on."

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I was perfectly conversant with that rule, and my idea that the House had adjourned arose from the fact that every member was out of his seat.

Mr. GROW. Except the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is it the pleasure of the House that the gentleman from Kentucky remain in custody?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman from Kentucky be discharged from custody on payment of the fees.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I offer the following amendment:

Resolved, That the further proceedings under the present call of the House be dispensed with, and so much thereof as imposes the payment of fees on absentees be remitted.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object to that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the amendment is not in order.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Is it not parliamentary? I have been here, sir, during the whole call. I was opposed to it when it was first commenced. It is productive of no good, and I think that this would be the most dignified way of ending it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's proposition is not germane to the pending motion.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois; and it was agreed to.

Mr. SANDIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Is my proposition now in order?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Louisiana has been recognized, and is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I have acted in good faith so far in sustaining the call, with the hope of getting a quorum here, and not to show the power of the House to effect such a purpose. My hope was, then, when we secured the attendance of a quorum, we should take up the Calendar where we left off, and show the country that we could stay here after nine o'clock in the evening and do the business of the country. I wish now to know whether there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. There are one hundred and thirteen members present.

Mr. SANDIDGE. That is not a quorum, and I hope that we will proceed with the call.

Mr. GREENWOOD. If the Chair could ascertain by any means outside of the record, I think it would be found that there is a quorum present.

Mr. STEVENSON. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I call for tellers. We can see by a division of the House whether or not a quorum is present.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 40, nays 69; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Atkins, Billingshurst, Chapman, Clay, John Cochran, Cockerill, Cox, James Craig, Durfee, Furness, Fenton, Gilmer, Granger, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Hatch, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Humphrey Marshall, Millson, Parker, Pendleton, Ready, Rangan, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Stevenson, William Stewart, Tompkins, Trippe, Waldron, Walton, Wilson, Woodson, and Zollinger—40.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Bliss, Boyce, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Case, Chaffee, Clawson, Clemens, Colfax, Covode, Cragin, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dodd, English, Foley, Foster, Garrett, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Grow, Hoard, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, Kelsey, John C. Kunkel, Leiter, Lovejoy, Matteson, Maynard, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Ohio, Palmer, Pettit, Phelps, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Purviance, Robbins, Royce, Rufin, Sandidge, Judson W. Sherman, Singleton, Spinner, Stanton, James A. Stewart, Tabbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Wade, Walbridge, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Winslow, and Wortendyke—69.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the above call, Messrs. SMITH of Virginia, and UNDERWOOD stated that when their names were called, they were out getting some refreshment.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MORSE, of New York, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. MORSE, of New York. None other than that I went home to get my dinner.

Mr. STANTON. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. PENDLETON. Is it in order to move to take a recess until eleven o'clock to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. PENDLETON. There are many members here who have been here for over twelve hours. I have been here nearly thirteen hours. I came before nine o'clock, to attend one of the committees of this House. It seems to me not right that those who have been here for so many hours should be kept here, and punished for those who have been delinquent by absentsing themselves. I ask unanimous consent to make the motion.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. FENTON. I have a few words to say. The impression will prevail, from what has been said here to-night, that those who were absent and brought here, are those who are not unfrequently responsible for the want of a quorum to do business. That is, in part, a great mistake, and calculated to do injustice to many gentlemen who are uniformly prompt and efficient in the discharge of their duties. They are not mainly those who have left the House without a quorum since the order was made to meet at eleven o'clock in the morning. Many of the gentlemen now so zealous in promoting this call were only a few mornings since found absent on a call of the roll. I only mention the fact to have gentlemen see that their zeal is not only not according to wisdom, but that it assumes no merit to which they are justly entitled beyond their associates. The House was in session for six or seven hours, and it could not be expected that every member would be found in his seat at the end of that time, in the absence of any question of great and all-pervading interest. Some went to their dinners, perhaps; others left for a short time from physical exhaustion or indisposition, and those who felt the ability to do so, I suppose have returned or intend to return. When they arrive at the doors of the House they are arrested and brought here. I submit to gentlemen that we are accomplishing nothing practical in this; we are not facilitating the public business.

If there is not time to act deliberately on the business of the country within the time intervening between now and the 7th of June, let that time be extended. I do not believe there is time unless we sit through the hours of the night, and that I do not believe the country expects of us, and neither should we do so, having a proper regard for ourselves and the safety and correctness of the business intrusted to our hands. I am willing to extend the time, and I will vote for a resolution extending it for thirty days or any length of time gentlemen may find it necessary for the discharge of the public business. To act with deliberation, economize our time, and do all that we are sent here for, in a proper manner, to the best of our judgment, is our high and solemn duty, and I am not willing that the impression shall go out that all the gentlemen who were so unfortunate as to be absent on a call of the House on this occasion, are those who are frequently delinquent in the discharge of duty, or wanting in faithfulness to the public service; many of these gentlemen will not suffer in comparison with some of those, who, to-night, are distinguishing themselves as the ever faithful guardians.

Mr. ATKINS. I have heard intimations thrown out that gentlemen were delinquent in their duty, simply because, at five o'clock, they left the Hall to go to their dinner. I desire to say that I have not been absent from the Hall, during this Congress, but two days, and those two days I was detained in my room by sickness. Gentlemen on both sides of the House have spoken as though it were an offense to have left the Hall for a short while to go home and dine. Two or three of my colleagues are absent, who have, during the session, been always found in their seats. I have not been absent, as I have said, but two days, and those gentlemen I have seen here during every day I have been here. I think that the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CLEMENS] were altogether out of place.

Mr. COVODE. I wish to make a few remarks. The power of this House to compel the attendance of absent members is about being tested. If we adjourn, or postpone this until to-morrow, or any other time, it will be demonstrated that we have not the power, or have failed to make use of it. You cannot, then, at a future day, undertake to compel the attendance of members. It seems to me to be absolutely necessary that the House should make its authority respected.

Mr. STEVENSON. I rise to a point of order. Is there anything before the House which elicits this discussion?

The SPEAKER. There is no proposition before the House. These remarks have been indulged by unanimous consent.

Mr. STEVENSON. I object. It is late, and we ought to go on with this proceeding.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. HAWKINS and CURTIS were within the bar.

The SPEAKER. Mr. HAWKINS, of Florida, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. HAWKINS. I have none. I was not arrested by the Sergeant-at-Arms. I came to the Hall of my own accord, having ascertained that there was to be a night session. Further than that I have no excuse.

Mr. WINSLOW. That is a frank confession; and in consideration of it, I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CURTIS, of Iowa, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. CURTIS. I have none. I supposed when I left the Hall that there would be the same inclination to adjourn at four o'clock that there has been on previous days. I have returned here without compulsion, hearing that the House was still in session. I am pleased to see such manifestations of zeal on the part of gentlemen.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I think that the gentleman ought to be fined double for coming here without compulsion. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEITER. I move that the gentleman be discharged on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to renew the proposition made by the gentleman from Virginia a few moments ago, in this form. I move that the Sergeant-at-Arms be directed to take into custody the members not yet arrested, and to have them before the bar of this House at eleven o'clock to-morrow. It seems to me that this proceeding is an indispensable one, and that we could not possibly get along unless such a motion was in order. I submit to the Chair that it is in the nature of contempt that these parties are now guilty of. We are not now merely seeking to bring them in for the discharge of business; but their absence from the House during its sittings is a violation of the order of the House, and therefore a contempt. Well; a party being once decided in contempt, may be arrested, and brought before the House at a subsequent session of the House, for its action. It seems to me to be absolutely necessary. Here we are pretty well on to the middle of the night, waiting for absent members to be brought in. It cannot be that the rules of the House require us to wear ourselves out in proceedings against those who disregard the order of the House. It seems to me, therefore, that if the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary—gentlemen who wear the honors of the House—do not choose to bear its burdens, and if they choose to have to-morrow's session occupied in making a question of conduct on their absence, it is their responsibility, and not ours.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The name of the chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means has been used in this Hall to-night on more occasions than one, and I think it has been unnecessarily called in question as being one of the absentees on this occasion. I met the gentleman from Pennsylvania in the area here while the vote was being taken on the motion to adjourn, and when it was understood that that motion had been carried. He was here, and seemed to regret that the business of the House could not have been proceeded with. He was making his way out of the Hall, in company with other gentlemen who had supposed that the motion prevailed. I do not see why his name should be selected in this connection more than that of any other gentleman who is absent at this time.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I desire to make a suggestion before the motion of the gentleman from Ohio be put. I would suggest the propriety of requiring the Sergeant-at-Arms to make a return to the House in respect to what he has done in regard to the orders given to him. If it turn out that, in point of fact, he or his deputies have called upon members, and notified them that there is now a call of the House, and if members have refused to come here, or to notice that call, those gentlemen who have so failed are guilty of contempt of this House, and ought to be justly obnoxious to its censure. I therefore suggest the propriety of having a preliminary return made by the Sergeant-at-Arms of what he has done.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared, and reported that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. MILES and BONHAM were now before the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. MILES, of South Carolina, you have been arrested and brought before the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its session without permission of the House. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. MILES. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that I left the House after a vote upon the adjournment. Under the impression that the yeas had it, and that the House had voted to adjourn, I, in conjunction with one of the other members, left the House. It was reported to us by some of the pages that the yeas had it, and, under that impression we left the House. We did not receive any summons at our residence, and accidentally came up here seeing the Hall still lighted.

Mr. COCKERILL. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of fees.

Mr. SICKLES. The gentleman from South Carolina has not been taken into custody. There are no fees, and he should be discharged.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina was reported by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BONHAM, of South Carolina.

Mr. BONHAM. I left the House, Mr. Speaker, with my colleague, under precisely similar circumstances. Presenting myself at the door just now, and finding it closed, I asked the Door-keeper to call the Sergeant-at-Arms; and I am here under these circumstances. We were not aware that the House was in session at all, until we saw the light.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I move that the gentleman from South Carolina be discharged.

And I wish to say a word or two in vindication of myself, as well as of the gentleman from South Carolina, from the sweeping charges made against every man who absented himself after five o'clock. The impression is evidently sought to be made here that every man who happens to leave this House after five o'clock is guilty of a very gross dereliction of duty. [Cries of "No!" "No!"] If I understand anything about this matter, it is this, that the object of enforcing this rule is to get a quorum. If that be not the object, I should like to know what it is? Here comes a gentleman, a member of the House, opens the door, takes his seat, and up pops the Sergeant-at-Arms and says, "I have arrested this gentleman," and he reports his name, and it is found that the gentleman came here voluntarily. I left, as a great many others of these gentlemen left, when the yeas and nays were being called on the motion to adjourn. I voted against the adjournment, but I believed it was carried, or would be, and so I took my hat and went to dinner. No Sergeant-at-Arms or deputy came to me; but when I was informed of this proceeding, I came immediately to the Hall, not under arrest, but voluntarily.

Mr. BONHAM. I am not aware what course has been taken with other gentlemen; but I beg not to be excused on any other terms than those on which they were excused.

Mr. MILES. I trust I will be placed in the same category with my friends.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. It strikes me that we did a fair amount of business to-day. We had a session of six hours; and I understand from the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House that we passed on some thirty-five bills. It seems that this rule is to be enforced simply for the purpose of seeing whether it can be enforced, and for no other object in the world. I think that no man in this House has the remotest idea that we are going to sit down to the transaction of business to-night.

There is another thing, sir: I hear gentlemen all about the House saying that we must not adjourn until we get this gentleman here, and that gentleman here.

Mr. STEVENSON. What is the question before the House?

The SPEAKER. The motion that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BONHAM] be discharged on payment of fees.

Mr. STEVENSON. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Illinois is not discussing that question.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Illinois has wandered a little from the question before the House.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I believe the rules of order have not been very rigidly enforced.

The SPEAKER. It is the duty of the Chair to enforce them when a gentleman rises and asks that it shall be done.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. That is very true, sir.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I merely desire to suggest a single reason why it is very important for us, with a view to the future, to pursue such a course now as will insure the attendance of a quorum in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUGHES. I rise to a question of order. It strikes me that, under the rule, the gentleman from Virginia can only ask a question or make a personal explanation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia are hardly pertinent to the question.

Mr. HUGHES. They are evidently out of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I submit, respectfully, that I was proceeding to show, with the permission of the gentleman from Illinois—

Mr. HUGHES. The Chair has decided that both the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman from Virginia are out of order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I suppose the Chair will allow me to say a word not out of order, as I think. I have no desire to argue with the Chair, because I trust I have too proper a respect for the Presiding Officer of this House to do that. But I was proceeding to show the necessity of decided action now, and of not letting gentlemen off without the usual punishment.

Mr. KELLOGG. With the permission of the gentleman, I desire to say a word. It has been said more than once during this discussion, that the object of this proceeding is to enforce the rules against members who are in contempt. The programme is now changed. The gentleman from Virginia has taken the matter under his guardianship, and proposes to read lectures to the House in relation to our future action.

Mr. WINSLOW. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman cannot proceed, as it is objected to.

Mr. KELLOGG. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I desire to make a few remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will please confine himself to the question.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I am in favor of discharging the gentleman from South Carolina, and every other gentleman who may from this time out be brought to the bar of the House. I think that the House has carried this proceeding far enough. I do not understand that it is necessary that penalties should be inflicted upon members of this House to insure their attendance in future. We are not a school of boys presided over by a schoolmaster.

Mr. STANTON. I insist on the enforcement of the rules of order. I suspended my remarks at the request of the Chair.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I insist that I am in order. I have made a motion to discharge the gentleman from South Carolina, and I am speaking to that motion.

Mr. MORGAN. He does not want to be discharged without paying the fees.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I cannot help that; it is the right of the House to discharge the gentleman from South Carolina, volens volens, whether he wishes to pay his money to the Sergeant-at-Arms or not, and I am speaking to that question. I say that I do not understand that we are a school of boys, and that we are to be flogged for our absence in order to insure our attendance in future. I suppose that the object of the call is to get a quorum to do business; and if it is not the intention to proceed to business to-night, but only to bring in Mr. A, B, and C, and then suspend the call, I am opposed to it.

Mr. WINSLOW. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman is taking too wide a latitude in his remarks.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I do not intend to get out of order, but I am not familiar with the rules of the House or with parliamentary proceedings. We are told that, owing to the short time that is left for the business of the session—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that is not in order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. Well, sir, I was only going to say that I do not think this spasmodic attachment and devotion to the business of the House is going to forward the business of the country.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman's remarks are not in order.

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I think if gentlemen will talk less and work here five or six hours a day, we can do all the necessary business of the country by the 7th of June. I now withdraw my motion.

Mr. LEITER. I move that Mr. BONHAM be discharged from custody on payment of the fees. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STANTON. Mr. Speaker, I have but a single word to say. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAYLOR] insisted that the Sergeant-at-Arms should first make a return—

Mr. FARNSWORTH. I rise to a question of order. I would inquire what question is before the House?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio submitted the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms take into custody the members now absent without leave, and have them at the bar of the House to-morrow at eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I would ask if that would not have the effect of dispensing with all further proceedings under the call?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the resolution is not in order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Would it be in order to move to take a recess? But I would ask, in the first place, whether there is a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. There are one hundred and seventeen members present, if we have lost none while we have been gathering them together.

The Chair has been examining the question which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STANTON] presented to the Chair an hour or two since. The Chair came to the conclusion, upon reference to Cushing's Manual, that the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio was perhaps in order. But upon an examination of the Journals, the Chair finds that the very case that is referred to as a precedent is as follows: Mr. McKay, of North Carolina, offered a resolution almost the same in terms, and certainly the same in substance, as the resolution of the gentleman from Ohio. Here it is:

Resolved, That all the members now absent, except such as have been excused, be required, at the meeting of the House on to-morrow morning, to give excuses for their absence at this time; and it shall be the duty of the Clerk to enter their names on the Journal for that purpose."

The Speaker decided that the resolution was out of order. Mr. Ashmun, of Massachusetts, took an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and the decision of the Speaker was overruled by the House. The resolution was entertained and adopted by the House. On the next morning a motion was made to reconsider the vote overrul-ing the decision of the Chair. It was reconsidered, and then Mr. Ashmun withdrew his appeal, and the resolution of Mr. McKay, having been decided out of order, was not before the House. Thus, the very precedent referred to in Cushing's Law and Practice of Parliamentary Bodies seems to point conclusively to the fact that, upon an adjournment of the House, all proceedings in reference to this call must cease.

Mr. STANTON. If I understand the precedent read by the Chair, it seems to me that the construction is the other way. The Speaker held the resolution not in order. That decision was reversed the following day; and then the vote reversing it was reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. The appeal was withdrawn by Mr. Ashmun, and the resolution was declared then not to be before the House.

Mr. STANTON. So I understand it; but the opinion of the House was, on a direct vote, that the decision of the Chair was wrong. The decision of the Chair was reversed, and the resolution declared to be in order; but the question was evaded by the withdrawal of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The House reconsidered the vote by which it reversed the decision of the Chair.

Mr. STANTON. The House reconsidered it; but that is not a vote affirmatively on the question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman who took the appeal was satisfied, and withdrew it.

Mr. GARNETT. If the Chair has decided that, I wish to raise a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has decided the question.

Mr. GARNETT. Mr. Speaker, nearly every gentleman who has come here and excused himself, has stated that he came voluntarily and without arrest by the Sergeant-at-Arms. My friends from South Carolina, [Messrs. MILES and BONHAM,] who have just come, have made that statement; so has the gentleman from Florida, [Mr. HAWKINS.]. Yet, sir, they were at their usual places of residence. No messenger, no deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, had been sent for them.

Mr. CURTIS. I was not at my quarters.

Mr. GARNETT. I did not make any allusion to the gentleman from Iowa. I did not know anything of his case.

Mr. BONHAM. My colleague and myself were not at our quarters all the time, but we were there until seven or eight o'clock.

Mr. GARNETT. I know that they were at dinner, for I board in the same house with them. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ATKINS] was not arrested. It is the same case with a number of gentlemen round me. I think, then, as a question of privilege, that when we order our Sergeant-at-Arms to arrest those men who have not answered to their names, and he has arrested scarcely one of them, we have a right to know what he and his deputies are doing. I am told by the gentleman from North Carolina that one of these deputies informed a member of the House, who was at the theater, that the House was in session, and had ordered his presence, and that the member positively refused to come with him. The deputy, I say, acted in defiance of the order of the House in not arresting that member. He refused to give to the gentleman from North Carolina the member's name. I think that when the House orders the arrest of absent members, it is due to its own dignity that it shall compel its officers to make some return. We should not be kept here all night waiting for chance and the convenience of different gentlemen, when they have finished their avocation of business or pleasure, with no arrests made, and no Sergeant-at-Arms, or deputy Sergeant-at-Arms proceeding in the discharge of his duty. My question of privilege is, that we require the Sergeant-at-Arms to make some return of what he has done, and what he is doing.

The SPEAKER. The Sergeant-at-Arms has been making returns from time to time himself, and by his deputy more recently. In justice to the Sergeant-at-Arms, the Chair will say that immediately the order was given, he dispatched deputies to the different boarding-houses of the city; subsequently he went himself, and the Chair soon expects him back.

Mr. GARNETT. I have not the slightest idea who was the gentleman at the theater, to whom I have referred. I know that the Sergeant-at-Arms has been acting through his deputies; but, as every gentleman who comes in says that he has not been arrested, the question naturally arises, what have these deputies done? We have a right to have a return of the facts.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I am under the impression that there have been a good many arrests.

Mr. GARNETT. Only at the door.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. It is to be presumed that the Sergeant-at-Arms has been in the discharge of his duty. He has reported here from time to time that he had in custody various members of this House, and it matters not whether he found them at the theater, the hotels, or at the door of this House. They could not get in until the door was opened, and when they made their appearance there he took them into custody, and reported them to the House.

Mr. LOVEJOY. The rules of the House have been rigidly enforced on my colleague; and I would ask whether this debate is on any pending proposition?

The SPEAKER. There is no proposition pending.

Mr. READY. I wish to make a motion; but, before doing so, I wish to make a remark. I am satisfied that a misapprehension prevails in the House in regard to the course which ought to be pursued in reference to the adjournment. I have heard it stated all round me—it has been publicly stated by a number of members—that it would be unjust to those gentlemen who have been arrested, arraigned, and discharged, for the House to adjourn until the other absentees have been treated in the same way. I wish to assure those gentlemen that the members who have been arrested, so far as I have been able to ascertain their feelings in reference to the matter, will not feel themselves in the least aggrieved if the House should now adjourn without bringing in any other absentees. It is now past ten o'clock, and I believe the time has come when the House ought to adjourn. I make that motion.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar, and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs. J. GLANCY JONES, OWEN JONES, LANDY, AHL, GILLIS, PHILLIPS, and LEIDY, were within the bar.

Mr. FLORENCE. I rise to what I suppose to be a privileged question. In compliance with a vote of the House, my colleague [Mr. WHITE] and myself were excused from attendance for two or three hours. We are now here; and thanking the House for its kindness, report ourselves ready for duty.

The SPEAKER. Mr. J. GLANCY JONES, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What excuse have you to make?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. During this entire session, I have been present at all the daily sessions of the House, and have ever been in favor of proceeding with the public business as long as it was proper for us to remain here. I remained here until five o'clock this afternoon in the discharge of my duty. At five o'clock the vote was taken on the adjournment, and I was informed by the Clerk of the House that it was carried by six majority; and I left the House under the impression that the House had adjourned. As soon as I was informed that my presence was desired here, I presented myself at the earliest convenient opportunity.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to have the rule read to the gentleman, so that he may know how to determine when the House has adjourned.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. And I would say further, that I would be very happy to remain here so long as a quorum will remain here to transact business.

Mr. HOWARD. In consideration of the former good conduct of the illustrious chairman of my committee, I move he be excused on the payment of costs.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I will cheerfully pay the costs if my colleague will strike out the word "former."

Mr. HUGHES. I must have some information in regard to the facts of the case, before I can vote for the motion of the gentleman from Michigan. I have objected to the gentleman who is now at the bar of the House being arraigned in his absence, and to allusions being made to his locus in quo. Now that he is here, before I can vote to excuse him, I feel impelled by a high sense of duty to call upon him to say whether he has been at that dinner which has been so mysteriously alluded to here several times to-night; and I want him to tell the House exactly what he got to eat.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that would hardly be in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. The proposition is to excuse the gentleman. Well, sir, I could vote to excuse a gentleman for going to eat something—

Mr. MOORE. I call the gentleman to order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Indiana is in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I want the House to take notice of the fact that I am in order once. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana will proceed.

Mr. HUGHES. I am much obliged to the Chair for deciding that I am now in order, and I take considerable credit to myself for being in order once.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I desire to say that the gentleman is proceeding to the great annoyance of his friends.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, sir, I am sorry to annoy my friends, but sacrifices have to be made in the cause of the country. But to resume the remarks at the point where I was interrupted by a call to order—and I always expect to be called to order, and in fact I never get started until I am called to order, and I would say to gentlemen that it is not the proper or gentlemanly mode to shout out "order" from their seats, but that they should rise in their places and raise their points of order with the courtesy which distinguished the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Moore].

Mr. HOWARD. I rise to a point of order. If the gentleman is in order, it is out of order to discuss the question whether he is in order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks a further discussion of the question of order would hardly be in order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. Would it be in order to have a record made of the fact that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Howard] has made a good point for once in his life? [Laughter.]

As I was saying, before I can vote to excuse a gentleman for going to dinner—and it is a fact before this House, that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been to a dinner—I want to know what he had to eat. I can excuse a gentleman for going to eat something, but there are some things which I cannot excuse a gentleman for eating. For instance: it is said Frenchmen eat frogs; but I could not excuse a gentleman of this House for going to dine on the hind legs of a frog, because I regard that as a kind of barbarous dish.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Before this discussion proceeds upon this tender point, I wish to be permitted to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether he has partaken of a frog's hind legs?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I insist that gentlemen shall not be permitted to interrupt each other, except in order.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. Objection is made—

Mr. HUGHES. I cannot consent that the gentleman at the bar of the House should be permitted to interrupt these proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not at the bar.

Mr. HUGHES. So much upon the subject of what the gentleman had to eat. It now becomes very important to inquire as to the kind of plates from which he ate, and the kind of forks he used, and particularly whether he used one of those famous golden spoons?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I really do not like to interrupt the gentleman, but I insist upon it, that this is not in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I insist upon it also; and I wish it understood that I do not desire to be out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear the gentleman a little further, and hear what he has to say. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUGHES. I am contented with that; and as long as the Chair will hear me, it makes no difference whether the members will hear me or not.

Then, again, it becomes important to inquire where the gentleman has been to dinner?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that perhaps the gentleman is wandering away from the question. The question is, "Shall the gentleman from Pennsylvania be excused?"

Mr. GREENWOOD. I strongly appeal to the gentleman from Indiana to allow the vote to be taken. We are suffering here.

Mr. HUGHES. Well, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [cries of "Order!" "Order!"] has had his dinner, and I have had mine. [Renewed cries of "Order!"]

Mr. GREENWOOD. I call the gentleman to order; and if the Chair decides that the gentleman from Indiana is in order, I take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. HUGHES. I would like to see the point settled.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman is not in order.

Mr. HUGHES. Now, the question is, shall the gentleman from Pennsylvania be excused? Well, sir, I am in favor of excusing the gentleman, and I am in favor of excusing him without the payment of fees. I think he ought to be excused without payment of fees, because I believe that, in common with many other gentlemen, he left the House under the impression that it had adjourned. I think it a great hardship that he and other gentlemen—myself included—have been brought back here under a sort of snap judgment.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I trust the gentleman will pardon me for trying to bring the gentleman back to the question.

Mr. HUGHES. I will excuse the gentleman from Arkansas. I want that distinctly understood. I excuse him for his many interruptions, and hope he will have to make no further appeals to me to excuse him on that ground. I desire to repel the idea that has been put forth here that any considerable number of members of this House have been derelict in their attendance on the public business of the House during this session.

The SPEAKER. That question is not debatable.

Mr. HUGHES. Especially the gentleman from Pennsylvania—

The SPEAKER. That does not make it in order.

Mr. HUGHES. I observe that the Chair has been with me when everybody else was against me, and now that the Chair has turned against me, I will detain the House no longer.

Mr. STANTON. I desire to know from the gentleman from Pennsylvania how long it is since he was informed that the House was in session and waiting for him without a quorum?

Mr. HUGHES. I object to the inquiry. No person can be called upon to criminate himself.

Mr. STANTON. I insist that I have a right to propound that inquiry to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as his answer will govern my vote.

Mr. HUGHES. I object to it. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has made his excuse, and it is for the House to deal with it.

Mr. MOORE. I came to this Capitol at nine o'clock this morning to attend my committee, and it is now half past ten o'clock. If we are expected to meet to-morrow to attend to public business, it seems to me that we ought now to adjourn. I therefore move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I am ready to answer the interrogatory.

Mr. MILLSON. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and, on ordering the main question, the Speaker announced that there were but fifty-five affirmative votes—less than half of a quorum—and that, therefore, the matter went over till to-morrow.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. The previous question is not in order during the pending of a call of the House, for the reason that there is no quorum.

The SPEAKER. How would the gentleman ever terminate debate, if it were not?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I make also that point of order—that no debate is in order during a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. Would the gentleman hold that it is not in order for a gentleman to assign his excuse, and for that excuse to be discussed?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. He may certainly make his excuse, but no debate is in order during the pendency of a call of the House.

Mr. MILLSON. I desire to know whether the Speaker has announced that there was not a majority of a quorum voting to order the main question, and decided that a majority of the members present—not being a majority of a quorum—cannot order the main question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that less than a majority of a quorum cannot order the main question.

Mr. MILLSON. May not those members present—if they have a right to vote on a question—vote under the rules and principles governing the call of the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the main question cannot be ordered if there be not a quorum present. The previous question may be moved; but less than a majority of a quorum cannot order the main question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Less than a quorum can decide the main question, and why not be able to order the main question? We are acting under the rules governing a call of the House, and can dispose of all the questions incident to it without a quorum. It is like a motion to adjourn, which can be carried where there is less than a quorum voting; and the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn can be ordered by less than a fifth of a quorum.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. It is evident there is less than a quorum present now, and I suppose the House does not desire to carry on this thing any further. I move that all further proceedings under the call be dispensed with.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I wish to reply to the inquiry of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. STANTON.]

Mr. FLORENCE. I object.

Mr. COLFAX. I rise to a question of order. The Speaker has decided that this case stands over till to-morrow. The next case should now be taken up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that in entertaining the demand for the previous question, the Chair erred. No demand for the previous question can be entertained when there is less than a quorum of the House present.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I desire to offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That this House take a recess till to-morrow at eleven o'clock a. m., and that in the mean time the Sergeant at Arms take into custody the members of the House now absent without leave, and have them at its bar at that time.

The resolution was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the motion to discharge Mr. J. GLANCY JONES on payment of fees.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. What becomes of my motion?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion is in order.

Mr. READY. I rise to a question of order. I was upon the floor when the Sergeant-at-Arms announced that he had certain members at the bar of the House, and I was requested by the Speaker to suspend until he made his report. I have never yet yielded the floor, and I decline to yield it now for any purpose except to enable the gentlemen, who are in custody, to render their excuses.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I merely wish to answer the interrogatory propounded to me by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SICKLES. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to answer it.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I had an invitation two or three days since to dine with the President of the United States to-day; such an invitation, as I suppose, has been extended to every other member.

Several MEMBERS, on the Republican side of the House. On the other side, not this.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Well, I hope it has, or will be. I accepted that invitation with the reservation that I always make—

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is not answering the question propounded to him. The question was, at what time he was notified by the Sergeant-at-Arms that the House was in session and without a quorum?

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will excuse me if I am a little prolix.

Several MEMBERS. Come to the point.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I was saying that I accepted the invitation with the reservation that I would never leave this House so long as it was in session. And I would not have left the House till twelve o'clock to-night, or any other hour, unless I had been under the impression that the House had adjourned. I always feel it my duty to remain here until the House does adjourn; but I was informed that the House had adjourned, and then I left here and went to my lodgings. I remained at my lodgings at least an hour, and could have been summoned during that time. I left my lodgings at the end of an hour, supposing that, after the House had adjourned, I was at liberty to do as I pleased, and since then I have received no communication from any officer of the House except through a third person, and that communication was that I was expected to report myself here by half past nine or ten o'clock; and in obedience to that summons I have reported myself here.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I wish to ask the gentleman at what time he received notice that the House was awaiting his presence and that of other gentlemen in order to make a quorum?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This House has not been in session for any business purposes for the last five hours.

Mr. CURTIS. The gentleman from Pennsylvania seems to put the blame of his delinquencies upon two officers of this House—first upon the Clerk, who informed him that the House had adjourned, and then upon the Sergeant-at-Arms, who failed to notify him that his attendance was needed here. Under these circumstances, and as, according to his statement, these officers appear to have been culpable, I move that he be excused.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. Allow me to correct an erroneous impression. I want to do injustice to no one. The Sergeant-at-Arms, I have no doubt, discharged his duty faithfully. The information reached me through a third person, at a late hour. Nor is the Clerk of this House responsible. I went to the desk myself and inquired how the vote on the adjournment stood, and was informed that there was a majority of six in favor of adjourning against my own vote. I could not anticipate that gentlemen would subsequently change their votes. That was my error. I had no foreknowledge that gentlemen would change their votes and send after me. It was not the fault of the Clerk. Nor was it the fault of the Sergeant-at-Arms that I was not here sooner. In this "city of magnificent distances" it took a long period, perhaps, to reach me.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I hope the gentleman will answer my question. My vote will depend upon his answer.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I hope the gentlemen, with whom I have acted throughout this whole proceeding, will allow the same action to be taken in this case as in others.

[Cries of "Agreed!" and "That's fair!"]

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES was then ordered to be discharged from custody on payment of the fees.

The SPEAKER. Mr. AHL, what reason have you to assign for your absence from the sittings of the House without its leave?

Mr. AHL. I have no apology to offer further than that I remained here until after the usual hour of adjournment, and then, believing that my services were not particularly required here, and having a previous engagement, I absented myself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move that the gentleman be discharged on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared and announced that, in obedience to the order of the House, Messrs BOWIE, CAMPBELL, and WHITELEY were now within the bar of the House.

The SPEAKER. Mr. GILLIS, what reasons have you to assign for your absence from the House without its leave?

Mr. GILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I am the humble representative of the wild-cat district of Pennsylvania, [laughter;] and it is not to be expected that either the people of that district or their Representative should be completely conversant with all the rules of this House, or any other disorderly body. [Renewed laughter.] It is not to be expected that either they or their Representative should be acquainted with all the etiquette of this "city of magnificent distances," as my colleague has called it. I was invited to dine with the President to-day; and I had been informed that it was etiquette with members of this body that an invitation to the President's was an imperative order, and could not be disobeyed. [Great laughter.] Regarding it in that light, I accepted the invitation. I have been dining with the President, and have enjoyed myself, and enjoyed the company after dinner very much; and now I am willing to pay for it. [Excessive laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that gentlemen on the other side of the House, who did not receive invitations, are a little envious because they did not. [Renewed laughter.]

I have only another word to say. I heard that the Sergeant-at-Arms was after me, and I flew, not to the horns of the altar, but to the horns of old Buck. I seized them, and held on to them, until I found that I was out of danger. Then I let loose, and came here; and now throw myself upon the mercy of the House. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOORE. I move that the gentleman be discharged without paying fees.

Mr. MORGAN. I move that he be discharged on payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the amendment was agreed to; and then the motion as amended was agreed to.

Mr. GILLIS. I return my thanks to the House. I am perfectly willing to pay the costs for this dinner. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Mr. LANDY, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. LANDY. From the beginning of this session I have, unless sickness prevented, punctually attended the sittings of the House. At a late hour of the evening I left the Hall to answer an engagement which I had made. I have no apology to make, and whatever is the penalty let it be inflicted.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman be discharged on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. OWEN JONES, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What reason have you to assign for your absence?

Mr. OWEN JONES. I have little, if any, excuse to offer for my absence on this occasion. I remained here until I was very hungry, and I then left to get my dinner. I am willing to make amend to the House by payment of fees; and I will say that I have eaten many a worse dinner, at greater cost, than I am likely now to be mulcted in.

Mr. GROW. I move that my colleague be discharged on payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. PHILLIPS, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without its permission. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. PHILLIPS. If I thought my absence from the House prevented its doing any business, I would regret it; but from what I learn, the House has got on quite as well without as it would have done with me. I voted against the adjournment more than once to-day, and I did so because I thought it was right thus to rebuke those who are habitually absent from the Hall. I did not leave the Hall until I was informed that the House had agreed to adjourn. Still, I knew that a call of the House was probable.

There is one thing, surely, which entitles me to the indulgence of the House. The House seems, during this call, to have had a great deal of amusement, and I will tell them that it was to my kindness in moving that there be a call of the House, that gentlemen have remained here to enjoy themselves as they have. I throw myself upon their gratitude. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENGLISH. I move that the gentleman be discharged on the payment of all the fees imposed upon the other members; and on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the House has no power to impose a greater fine than that recognized by the rules.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. I move that my colleague be discharged on the payment of fees.

Mr. STANTON. I move that he be fined fifty dollars. A gentleman should not be let off so easily, who moves a call of the House, and then abandons the Hall, leaving the House in session.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The adjournment, I thought, was carried, when I left, and carried, too, against my vote. I would have remained here as long as any other gentleman, if I had not labored under a misapprehension.

The SPEAKER. The motion of the gentleman from Ohio is not in order.

The question was taken on Mr. KUNKEL's motion; and it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. LEIDY, of Pennsylvania, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without permission. What excuse have you to offer?

Mr. LEIDY. I accepted an invitation to dinner, and thinking the House had adjourned, I went to meet my engagement. That is the only excuse I have to offer. I am here at the request of the House.

Mr. LEITER. I move that my colleague be discharged on the payment of fees.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. BOWIE, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for absentsing yourself from its sittings without permission. What reason have you to offer for your absence?

Mr. BOWIE. I will give my reason. When I left this House, it was reported that the House had adjourned, and under that impression I went home. I have been suffering from sickness for eight or ten days, with an intermittent fever. I remained up here until five o'clock; and when I was told that the House had adjourned, I took my hat and went off. I went to bed. Shortly after I had got into bed I was molested by a messenger of the Sergeant-at-Arms. I told him to say to the House that I was laboring under high fever. He promised me faithfully that he would so report. Not satisfied with that, however, I was molested the second time, [laughter;] and I gave the same response; and finally I was molested the third time. [Laughter.] I then said to myself, "I will go up, and see what is going on. There must be something very extraordinary going on that requires my attendance." [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Speaker, I have no apology to offer to the House. I think, truly and sincerely, that the House owes me an apology. If the Sergeant-at-Arms, or his deputy, had reported as I charged him to do, I am sure the House would have excused my absence; but when the third messenger came, feeling bound to obey the order of the House—which I would do even at the risk of life itself—I have come here before the House. Allow me to say, sir, that, in my humble judgment, those gentlemen who changed their votes on the adjournment, and thereby changed the result, ought to be made to pay the whole cost. [Applauding laughter.] That is the truth; that is the justice. The House had bona fide adjourned. Gentlemen had gone home under the assurance that it was so; yet, by some trick or another, our sick beds have been molested, and we have been dragged up here, under the power of this House, to answer the mere caprices of certain gentlemen who thought proper to change their votes.

Sir, it is a wicked proceeding. [Laughter.] It is an unjust proceeding. It is a proceeding which ought not to be tolerated at all, for an instant, by this House, as I most solemnly think. My profession, sir, is one which demands obedience. I have obeyed the order of the House; but I do not feel called upon to make any excuse to anybody, for I have done no wrong. I certainly have committed no offense against the majesty of this body. Sir, "I would give millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute." [Roars of laughter.] I am in no default, but have come here without the power of the mace. On the third call, I volunteered to come up.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Concurring as I do in the opinion of my friend from Maryland, that the House owes him an apology, I move that he be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Without any summons from the Sergeant-at-Arms, Mr. Speaker, I appeared here a few minutes since, understanding that the House was still in session, and that there was business to be discharged. Am I arraigned? [The Speaker nodded affirmatively.] I am—and as a member of the House? My position, at best, Mr. Speaker, is somewhat equivocal. Your Committee of Elections reported, yesterday, I believe, that I was, that I was not, and that nobody was, a member of this House from the third congressional district of Ohio. I remained here during the whole of the proceedings of to-day, until about a quarter before five o'clock, when I thought I ought to have some dinner—not at the President's, for I am not on the congressional roll of those who are invited there, and who are willing to pay for their dinners. [Laughter.] I retired to my room. Your Sergeant-at-Arms did not call on me; but half an hour since—having paired off, by-the-way, with my friend from Delaware, [Mr. WHITELEY]—I returned and reported myself at the door. I have no fears, and no favors to ask. I am willing to discharge any obligation that may be imposed upon me, if I have violated the rules of the House.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the gentleman be excused on the payment of fees.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. WHITELEY, of Delaware.

Mr. WHITELEY. I have no excuse to offer, Mr. Speaker, other than this: having no colleague in the House to attend to the business in the Departments, I have to do it. I came up to the House this morning, and found that the only private bill for my State that has been before Congress for ten years was objected to; and I left the House in disgust, [laughter,] and went to attend to my business in the Departments. That is the only excuse I have to offer.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Illinois. I move that the gentleman from Delaware be discharged.

Mr. MORGAN. I move to amend by adding "on payment of fees."

The amendment was adopted; and the motion, as amended, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. Mr. WOOD, of Maine.

Mr. WOOD. I have no excuse to offer to the House. I came here about half past nine o'clock this morning to attend the special committee on which I am serving, and remained here till nearly three o'clock. Not feeling very well, I paired off with Mr. MACLAY, and went down to my lodgings to take dinner; and since that time I have been engaged on business pertaining to my duties as a Representative. I have no further excuse to offer.

Mr. BLISS. I move that the gentleman be discharged on payment of the usual fees.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. OWEN JONES. I rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. There can be no question of higher privilege than the motion to adjourn.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. PENDLETON. I desire to ask to be excused from the further attendance upon the House to-night.

The SPEAKER. The pending question must first be disposed of.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 78, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Billingshurst, Brigham, Bliss, Boyce, Chaffee, Chapman, Clay, John Cochran, Cockerill, Cox, Curtis, Davis of Iowa, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Florence, Gillis, Gooch, Goodwin, Gauger, Greenwood, Grossbeck, Grow, Hatch, Hawkins, Howard, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Kellogg, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Landry, Leeds, Humphrey Marshall, Maynard, Miller, Milson, Moore, Morrill, Oliver A. Morse, Olin, Pendleton, Phelps, Phillips, Purviance, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sinsdine, William Smith, Stanton, Stevenson, Talbot, George Taylor, Tompkins, Trippie, Underwood, Walton, Elihu B. Washburne, Isaac Washburn, White, Whiteley, Wilson, Winslow, Wortendyke, and Zolteoff—78.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Bonham, Bowie, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Clawson, Clemens, Colfax, Covode, Davies, English, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Leiter, Lovjoy, Matteson, Miles, Morgan, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Palmer, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Potte, Robbins, Ruffin, Sandidge, Henry M. Shaw, Spinner, James A. Stewart, William Stewart, Miles Taylor, Wade, Waldron, and Wood—45.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. DAWES stated that his colleague, Mr. ROBERT B. HALL, had been obliged to leave the House to-day on account of indisposition, and had since been confined to his bed.

Mr. CURTIS stated that out of respect for the officers of the House, many of whom were quite exhausted, he should vote to adjourn, and hoped his friends would do the same.

The result of the vote having been announced, the House (at twenty minutes after eleven o'clock, p. m.) adjourned.

IN SENATE.

SATURDAY, May 15, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. J. MORSELL.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a report of the Court of Claims, made in pursuance of law, in favor of the claim of Richard Fitzpatrick; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

INDIANA CONTESTED ELECTION.

He also laid before the Senate testimony in the case of the contested election of the Hon. JESSE D. BRIGHT and the Hon. GRAHAM N. FITCH, as Senators of the United States from the State of Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. GWIN presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of the construction of a breakwater at San Louis Obispo, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BRODERICK presented a resolution of the Legislature of California, in favor of a donation of land to each of the States and Territories of the Union, for the endowment and maintenance of colleges for instruction in such branches of education as pertain to agriculture, the mechanic arts, and natural history; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed.

He also presented a certified copy of an act of the Legislature of California, concerning the city of San Francisco, and to ratify and confirm certain ordinances of the Common Council of said city; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWARD presented a memorial of James Monroe, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the president and directors of the Metropolitan Railroad Company, asking for the assent of Congress to the act of the Legislature of Maryland, incorporating that company in the District of Columbia, and authority to extend their railroad through Georgetown and Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HAMMOND presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Charleston, praying for an appropriation for the lighting, buoying, &c., of Maffit's channel; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PEARCE presented two petitions of citizens of Washington, praying for a donation of land, or an appropriation of money, for the permanent endowment of the Columbian College in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HARLAN presented papers in favor of the establishment of a mail route from Burlington to Farmington, in the State of Iowa; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. DOOLITTLE presented the petition of William Merrihew, an officer of the Army in the Mexican war, praying for additional pay as such; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

Mr. POLK presented a memorial of R. H. Miller & Sons, praying that the duties paid by them on certain earthenware imported by them, and destroyed by fire in transitu from New Orleans to St. Louis, may be refunded; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CRITTENDEN presented a memorial of T. P. Shaffner, of Kentucky, praying for an amendment of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1857, entitled "An act to expedite telegraphic communication for the uses of the Government in its foreign intercourse," so that the subsidy granted by that act shall be general in its application to all Atlantic ocean telegraph lines; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; and a motion by him to print it was referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RICE presented twelve memorials of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying for the establishment of the following mail routes: between Shockapee, St. Valentine, Rockford, Monticello, and Clearwater, in that State; from the city of Glencoe to Watertown, in said State; from the city of Glencoe to Clearwater; from Minneapolis to Kandjoki; from Elliot to Blue Earth; from Minneapolis to Henderson; from St. Peter's to the Sioux Agency; from Brownsville to Winona; from Loo-neysville, in Houston county, via Houston, Yucatan, Dedham, and Lenora, to Elliot; from McGregor, in Iowa, to Owatonna, in Minnesota; from Chatfield to Austin; and from Chatfield to Winnebago City in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation for the erection of a bridge across Root river, in township one hundred and four, range eight west, county of Fillmore, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the citizens of the county of Pembina, in the Territory of Dakota, praying for the early organization of the Territory, and for the establishment of the capital at St. Joseph; which was referred to the Committee on Territories.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying that an appropriation may be made for the improvement of the St. Croix river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying that an appropriation may be made for the improvement of the Mississippi river, from the mouth of the Minnesota river to Sauk rapids; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying that an appropriation may be made for the removal of the Beef Slough bar, in the Mississippi river; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying for a donation of land for the establishment of an agricultural college in that State; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota praying for the enactment of a law securing to every person who will settle upon and occupy one hundred and sixty acres of land for five years, and have forty acres of the same, at the end of that time, under good cultivation, the right to purchase the same at a cost not exceeding the actual cost and expense of survey and transfer; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an amendment of the second section of "An act granting land to Minnesota for railroad purposes;" which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying an appropriation to aid in the construction of a wagon road from some point on Lake Superior, in the State of Minnesota, to the South Pass of the Rocky Mountains; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying relief to those settlers whose preemption claims have been lost by the grant of land to Minnesota for railroad purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, in favor of an appropriation to complete the Point Douglas and St. Louis military road; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

He also presented a memorial of the citizens of Buchanan, Minnesota, in favor of the northern Pacific railroad route; which was referred to the select committee on the Pacific railroad.

He also presented papers relating to the claim of Lewis Roberts, for indemnification for losses sustained by him by the burning of certain Indian supplies while being transported to the Indian country in November, 1855; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. THOMSON, of New Jersey, presented a petition of citizens of New York, praying that the public lands may be laid out in lots or farms of limited size, for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers not possessed of other lands; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SEIZURE OF J. M. AINSA.

Mr. GWIN presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of California, in relation to the release of J. M. Ainsa, an American citizen, held captive in Sonora, Mexico; which was read, as follows:

Whereas, J. M. Ainsa, an American citizen, pursuing a peaceful occupation on American soil, was, on the night of the 10th or 11th of April, 1857, arrested by an armed band of Mexicans, at the store of Messrs. Belknap & Dunbar, in the Guadalupe Purchase, and conducted thence, a prisoner in chains, to Hermosillo, and thence to the port of Guaymas, in Sonora, where he has since been detained as captive; and whereas, it is the duty of the American Government, at all times and under all circumstances, to protect the lives and property of its citizens: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Governor of California be instructed, and he is hereby authorized, to communicate with the President of the United States, setting forth these facts and such other testimony as may be furnished him in the premises, and requesting that officer to use the power of the General Government, so far as he is enabled, to effect the release of the said Ainsa, and his restoration to all the rights and immunities of which he was possessed before said arrest and imprisonment.

Resolved, That the Governor be requested to forward copies of these resolutions to the President of the United States and each of our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, the young gentleman, Mr. Ainsa, to whom these resolutions of the Legislature of California refer, is a brother-in-law of the gallant Colonel Crabb, who, with his brave associates, was massacred in Sonora, more than a year ago, through the instrumentality of the very man who invited and advised the expedition. The history of that bloody tragedy is unwritten; and it seems to be the earnest endeavor of those who planned the butchery of that ill-fated party to destroy all evidence of the part they acted in inviting Colonel Crabb into the country. Mr. Ainsa is perhaps the only living witness who could tell the whole of this horrible history; and hence his seizure on American soil, and subsequent detention as a captive at Guaymas.

Mr. President, I cannot restrain the expression of indignant denunciation of the atrocious acts of murder, robbery, and captivity, to which our citizens on the borders of Mexico and the northern Pacific Mexican coast have been subjected within the last few years, and the absence of successful efforts on the part of our Government to visit the guilty parties with summary punishment. In the case of Mr. Ainsa, he was in the employ of Mr. Dunbar, an American citizen engaged in commercial pursuits within our boundaries. At the same place, four American citizens were ruthlessly murdered by Mexicans stimulated by their desire for plunder and hatred of our people. They have gone unwhipped of justice, as have the captors of young Ainsa. His father, now and for many years a respected citizen of California, whose daughters are intermarried with our most respected citizens, is a native of Sonora; but is now, with his sons, an American citizen. Since the capture of this young man, he has been forced to sign papers denying that he was an American citizen, to put a stop to the intervention of our Government in his behalf. His case was brought before the Senators and Representatives in Congress from California last summer by his distressed family; and we united in a letter to our Minister to Mexico, earnestly urging him to exert his influence to procure Mr. Ainsa's release from captivity and restoration to his home.

In reply to our letter of the 8th of August last, he said that the President of the Republic, General Comonfort, had "that day issued an order that Ainsa should be restored to Sonora, where he had been illegally seized, and at the proper costs of the Mexican Government," thus confessing all the facts charged. The authorities of Sonora have paid no attention to the order; and as Mr. Forsyth, our Minister, further says:

"This Government has not a shadow of authority in Sonora; in fact, that State is as alien to this capital as is San Francisco; and when, as I thought, Mr. Ainsa had been set at liberty, according to the engagements of the Government, I find, by your letter, that he has not; and as this country is now in revolution, I find it utterly impossible to do anything in this matter until peace and order are restored."

And when, Mr. President, will that time come? And are our citizens to be held captive because there is no stable Government to be held responsible for these detentions? I have applied to the Secretary of the Navy to have a steamship of war ordered to the Mexican Pacific coast, to protect our citizens in their lives, liberty, and property; and have received the response that none can be spared from other service. I shall move to refer these resolutions of my State to the Committee on Foreign Relations; and earnestly ask their attention to the subject. I hope this Congress will not adjourn before means are placed at the disposal of the Government to demand not only the release of Mr. Ainsa, but to redress the numerous outrages perpetrated upon our citizens in that portion of the Mexican Republic. I move that the resolutions be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the petition of inhabitants of the town of Duxbury, Massachusetts, engaged and interested in the cod and haddock fisheries, reported adversely thereon, and asked that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject; which was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a memorial of Hezekiah Miller, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 217) to constitute Montgomery, in the State of Alabama, a port of delivery, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of John Grayson, submitted a report, accompanied by a joint resolution, (S. No. 38) for the relief of John Grayson. The resolution was read and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. DAVIS, from the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate of the 3d instant to inquire into the subject, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 367) to provide for the payment of certain California claims. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the report of the Secretary of War communicating, in compliance with a resolution of the Senate, the reports of the officers sent to Europe in 1855, to collect information in relation to military affairs, so far as they have not been heretofore communicated to the Senate, reported a joint resolution (S. No. 39) directing the printing of certain reports therein mentioned; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred a petition of Eliza E. Ogden, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 368) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza E. Ogden. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading; and the report was ordered to be printed.

INTERNAL IMPROVEMENTS.

Mr. CLAY. The Committee on Commerce, to whom were referred various bills for the improvement of certain rivers and harbors, together with the memorials and resolutions of several State Legislatures in behalf of the same or similar works, have had the subject under consideration, and have instructed me to report that they think it inexpedient to make the appropriations prayed for in the several bills and resolutions. The committee found, on careful estimate, that it would require not less than $3,000,000 to make the appropriations which are prayed for, and thought that in the present and prospective condition of the Treasury, it would be inexpedient, if no other objection could be raised to carrying on these works. They concluded with almost entire unanimity to make no appropriations except for the repair of works which, without such immediate appropriations, would go into destruction; and with that view, they have instructed me to report, in accordance with the recommendations of the topographical engineers of the War Department, certain bills in lieu of those which have been sent to the committee from the Senate. These bills are some twenty in number. I suppose it is unnecessary to read them over.

It is proper, perhaps, to say, that in accordance with the view of the committee and their instructions, I addressed a letter to the Secretary of War, advising him that the committee had determined to report no bill for the improvement of rivers or harbors, except in such cases as the corps of engineers supervising those works believed was indispensable to the preservation of works already made, and requesting him to furnish the committee with a list of such works, and such appropriations as would come within that class; and these bills have been drawn in accordance with the answer received from the War Department.

The petitions and memorials referred to by Mr. CLAY were as follows:

A memorial of a committee of the corporation of Georgetown, praying an appropriation for the removal of the mud in the harbor of that town; a memorial of a committee of the corporation of Georgetown, praying an appropriation for the improvement of the navigation of that place; a petition of citizens of California, praying that an appropriation may be made for the survey of the harbor of Crescent City, with a view to the construction of a breakwater; a resolution of the Legislature of Iowa, in favor of an appropriation of money for a double-track railroad around the lower rapids in the Mississippi river, on the west side of the river; resolutions of the Legislature of Massachusetts, in favor of a scientific survey of the harbor of Boston; resolutions of the Legislature of New Jersey, in favor of appropriations for the better preservation of life and property in case of shipwreck, and for the more effective working of the Government apparatus on the coast of New Jersey; a petition of the inhabitants of Jefferson county, New York, praying for the construction of a breakwater at the port of Cape Vincent; memorial of underwriters of Philadelphia, praying that a steam revenue cutter may be built at that place, and stationed in the Delaware bay and the coast adjacent thereto; petition of certain persons calling themselves Hollanders, adopted citizens of Michigan, praying for the improvement of Black Lake harbor, in that State, and compensation for a pile-driver lost while in the service of the United States; petition of citizens of Florida, praying that a light-house or light-boat may be placed at Bacon Rock, about ten miles west of Bayport; memorial of the Legislature of Wisconsin, in favor of the erection of a light-house at the mouth of Keweenaw river; petition of citizens of Wisconsin, praying for the erection of a light-house at Keweenaw; memorial of B. D. Hills and others, praying for the erection of a light-house at the mouth of the Keweenaw river, Wisconsin; two petitions of citizens of Michigan, praying for the improvement of the harbors of Mackinaw City, and the erection of a fort, a light-house, and a custom-house, at that point; petition of the residents of Ohio, praying the improvement of the harbor of Mackinaw City, the erection of a light-house and a custom-house thereat, also, a fort for the protection of the cities on Lake Michigan; petition of citizens of Lockport, New York, praying for the construction of a harbor of refuge at New Buffalo, Michigan; resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of an appropriation for the repair of the St. Mary's Falls ship canal; petition of citizens of Ashtabula county, Ohio, praying for the improvement of Ashtabula harbor; memorial and resolution of the Legislature of Nebraska, praying for an appropriation to bridge the Platte river; petition of citizens of Ashtabula, Ohio, praying for the repair or rebuilding of the light and pier at that place; resolutions of the board of trade of Cleveland, Ohio, in favor of an appropriation of public lands to aid in the construction of a ship canal around the Falls of Niagara; resolution of the Legislature of Michigan, in favor of an appropriation for the improvement of certain harbors; a resolution of the Senate in relation to appropriations for repairs and security of the works heretofore commenced for the improvement of harbors and navigable rivers; and a resolution of the Senate in relation to an appropriation for completing the removal of the raft of Red river; and the committee was discharged from their further consideration.

The bills reported on adversely are as follows: A bill (S. No. 5) to provide for a survey of the Ohio river and its principal tributaries;

A bill (S. No. 19) to continue the improvement in the harbor of Newark, New Jersey;

A bill (S. No. 7) for the improvement of navigation at the falls of the Ohio river;

A bill (S. No. 43) to authorize the improvement of the Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Arkansas rivers by contract, and making appropriations for the same;

A bill (S. No. 146) making an appropriation for deepening the channel over the St. Mary's river, in the State of Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 147) making an appropriation for deepening the channel over the St. Clair flats, in the State of Michigan; and

A bill (S. No. 228) making appropriations for certain public works in the State of Maine.

The following new bills reported by the committee, were severally read the first time, and ordered to a second reading:

A bill (S. No. 341) making appropriations for repairing and securing the works at the harbor of Chicago, Illinois;

A bill (S. No. 342) making appropriations for the preservation and repair of the piers at the mouth of Milwaukee river, Wisconsin;

A bill (S. No. 343) making appropriations for repairing the piers at the harbor of Sheboygan, Wisconsin;

A bill (S. No. 344) making appropriations for repairing the works at the harbor of St. Joseph, Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 345) making appropriations for repairing the works at the harbor of Monroe, Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 346) making appropriations for completing the improvements in the raft region of Red river;

A bill (S. No. 347) making appropriations for deepening the channel through the St. Clair flats, Michigan;

A bill (S. No. 348) making appropriations for the preservation of steam dredges and appurtenances;

A bill (S. No. 349) making appropriations for repairs of the piers at Burlington, Vermont;

A bill (S. No. 350) making appropriations for immediate repairs required for the preservation of Oswego harbor, New York;

A bill (S. No. 351) making appropriations for repairing the piers at Sodus Bay harbor, Wayne county, New York, and for dredging between the channel piers;

A bill (S. No. 352) making appropriations for repairing the public works at Genesee harbor, New York;

A bill (S. No. 353) making appropriations for repairing the piers of Oak Orchard harbor, New York;

A bill (S. No. 354) making appropriations for repairing the public works at Buffalo harbor, New York.

A bill (S. No. 355) making appropriations for the immediate repair of Dunkirk harbor works;

A bill (S. No. 356) making appropriations for immediate repair of the piers at Erie harbor, Pennsylvania;

A bill (S. No. 357) making appropriations for repairing the works at the harbor of Conneaut, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 358) making appropriations for repairing the works at the harbor of Ashtabula, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 359) making appropriations for repairs upon the works at Grand River harbor, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 360) making appropriations for securing and repairing the works at the harbor of Cleveland, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 361) making appropriations for repairs upon the works at Black River harbor, Ohio;

A bill (S. No. 362) making appropriations for repairs upon the works at Huron harbor, Ohio; and

A bill (S. No. 363) making appropriations for unforeseen contingencies of lake harbors.

Mr. CLAY. I will take occasion to say to the Senate that there may be some surprise on the part of some members that other bills have not been reported for works in other sections of the country, as these are confined almost exclusively to the northwestern lakes; but the committee have conformed entirely to the advice of the board of topographical engineers, limiting the bills to such works only as, in the opinion of that board, required immediate appropriations to preserve them from decay and destruction. I will say, moreover, in behalf of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Toombs] and myself, that I reported these bills in accordance with the instructions of the majority of the committee; and he and I do not assent to their constitutionality or their expediency.

Mr. HAMLIN. What the Senator from Alabama has said in relation to the report is all very accurate. There is, however, one other fact which I think ought to be stated, to give the Senate an idea of the whole matter. At all events, I think that some Senators who have not examined the matter carefully may not entertain precisely the right view of the subject from the statement the Senator has made, and he has made it very truthfully. All I desire to say is this: the committee classified the subjects which were referred to them; they concluded to make no recommendations, and to report no bills for continuing any work in process of construction; but they have reported another set of bills in accordance with the recommendation of the Department to preserve works, and to prevent them from going into decay. The point to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate is, that the Department was not called on for an opinion in relation to other works, and we do not know and cannot know that they would not have recommended every other work against which the committee have reported. It is therefore wholly the action of the committee in relation to all other matters, and not of the Department. That is what I desire to have known.

Mr. CLAY. It is proper that I should say that the Senator is correct in that remark; but, as he will acknowledge, the committee, with a single exception I believe, had agreed, in the first place, that we would report no bills except for such works as required an immediate appropriation to save them from destruction, and I addressed the Secretary with that view, to ascertain which they were.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to ask the honorable Senator, the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, at what time it will be convenient for him to take up these bills for consideration?

Mr. CLAY. I would defer them indefinitely.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I will give the honorable chairman notice that on Tuesday of next week, if he shall not object, I shall ask the Senate to take up these bills for consideration.

Mr. CLAY. If it is the pleasure of the Senate to defer all other bills which have precedence, of course I shall acquiesce with the best grace I can.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the Speaker had signed the following enrolled bill and resolution, which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President:

An act (S. No. 245) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Luther Jewett, late collector of the district of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine.

A resolution (S. No. 2) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California.

COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senate to excuse me from serving upon the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I presume the Chair was not aware of the fact that I was already on three committees when he placed my name on that committee. I think three is about the highest number of committees any member is required to work on. All the committees upon which I am, are really laboring committees. I am on the Committee on Printing, which, I presume, all will concede performs some labor, and the Committee on Military Affairs, and the Committee on Territories. But for that fact, I would not hesitate to perform the duties of this post with pleasure; but, really, to require of me, in addition to three others, to perform the duties of the committee upon which I have been recently placed, will entail upon me more labor than I think the Senate is inclined to entail upon any one of its members. I ask, therefore, that I be excused from serving on that committee.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senator from Alabama will consent to serve on that committee; for I believe it is an important one for the residue of the session. I dislike to interfere with him.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I would not hesitate to perform the labors incident to that station, but for the fact that some of the committees upon which I am now, meet twice a week. I have been in committee every day this week. The Committee on Printing is very laborious. The Committee on Military Affairs is also very laborious; the Committee on Territories is not so much so. But I am very well assured that members can be found in the Senate more competent, and perhaps more willing, than I am to undertake the performance of the duties of the Committee on Contingent Expenses. I would not hesitate to do so, if I could; but I really feel it impossible for me to perform the duties incident to that station, and to the other committees of which I am a member. I trust, therefore, that the Senate will excuse me.

The motion was agreed to; and Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee, was appointed to fill the vacancy.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SEWARD asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 37) authorizing the President of the United States to give to the Government of Hanover the notice required by the treaty of the 10th June, 1846, for the termination of the eleventh article of said treaty; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HAMLIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 364) to improve the channel of the Potomac river in the District of Columbia; which was read twice, and ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. RICE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 365) authorizing the judges of the late Territory of Minnesota to discharge certain trusts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 366) authorizing the establishment of a northern Pacific mail route; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

DE VISSER AND VILLARUBIA.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution and asked for its immediate consideration:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate what proceedings, if any, have been taken, to investigate and punish the complicity of custom house officers at New Orleans with a partner of the commercial house of Simon de Visser, and José Villarubia of New Orleans, in committing frauds on the revenue by false invoices and false computations of quantities and values.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have no sort of objection to make to any resolution of inquiry couched in the ordinary form, but this resolution if I heard it correctly, conveys by direct implication, the assertion that some of the officers of the customs in New Orleans have been guilty of complicity in this fraud. I say that there is no shadow of foundation for that assertion, but it is assumed here as a fact. I am perfectly willing that any inquiry should be made into the conduct of the officers, but they must not be condemned before they are heard. I am sure the Senator from New York must see that that is improper.

Mr. KING. I have no desire to prejudice this case, but surely all who recollect the debate of yesterday, will remember that the assertion was made most clearly and distinctly by Senators, that these officers were implicated in frauds, and that was made a ground for excusing the merchants from the payment of duties, and excusing them from the forfeitures and penalties.

Mr. SLIDELL. But that assertion was as distinctly repudiated. This resolution makes the charge, and asserts it as a fact.

Mr. KING. It asks whether any proceedings have been taken to investigate them.

Mr. SLIDELL. It goes further, and assumes complicity on their part.

Mr. BIGLER. What is the question under consideration?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first question is, is there any objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SLIDELL. I will not object to its consideration, if it is put in proper terms.

Mr. KING. I will strike out the words, "to punish."

Mr. SLIDELL. Say, "any alleged complicity."

Mr. KING. Very well. The object is to procure information whether any proceedings have been taken in the case. I understood from both the Senators from Louisiana yesterday that there was a probability of that complicity.

Mr. SLIDELL. I did not say so.

Mr. BIGLER. I object to the consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution being objected to, lies over.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 38) for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge;

A bill (No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell;

A bill (No. 232) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead;

A bill (No. 250) for the relief of Pierre Gagnon, of Natchitoches, Louisiana;

A bill (No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchinson;

A bill (No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey;

A bill (No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes;

A bill (No. 260) for the relief of Isaac Carpenter;

A bill (No. 261) for the relief of Leonard Loomis;

A bill (No. 264) granting a pension to Thomas Alcock, of Rochester, New York;

A bill (No. 272) for the relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick;

A bill (No. 273) for the relief of John F. Cannon;

A bill (No. 327) for the relief of the legal representatives of Marie Malines;

A bill (No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander;

A bill (No. 334) for the relief of Simcon Stedman;

A bill (No. 335) for the relief of Susannah edman, widow of Lloyd Redman;

A bill (No. 577) for the relief of Rebecca M. Bowden, of Prince George county, Virginia;

A bill (No. 578) for the relief of Isaac Drew, and other settlers upon the public lands in the State of Wisconsin; and

A joint resolution (No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. It is now within a few minutes of the time for the consideration of the special order, and I move to take up the general appropriation bill. I think we can dispose of it very soon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind the Senate that, by a special order, to-day was set apart for the consideration of business relating to the District of Columbia. The Chair calls the attention of Senators to the fact, and the bill which comes up first in order, is—

Mr. HUNTER. I understood, when we adjourned on Thursday, that the appropriation bill would come up at twelve o'clock to-day.

Mr. BROWN. That might have been the Senator's understanding, but it certainly was not mine.

Mr. HUNTER. Then I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bill. It will not take long; we can dispose of it in twenty or thirty minutes. We understand very well what the majority wish to do; they can accomplish their purpose. We can close up the bill and send it to the House of Representatives in a short time.

Mr. BROWN. I must protest against that. This day was set apart for the business of the District of Columbia. Congress has exclusive jurisdiction over the District, and yet it has not had a day in six months for the consideration of its business. I know very well if this motion to take up the appropriation bill is agreed to, to-day will be gone, utterly gone. We shall go into a long discussion about the reporters again, and you will not see the end of it for hours. I hope the Senate will stand by their order, and give this day to the business of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bill.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I think the hour of taking up the special order is fixed too early in the day. It requires a whole half hour to get through the petitions; and there is scarcely any opportunity to do business before the special order is taken up. If the hour was fixed at half past twelve o'clock, we might accomplish a good deal of business every morning, and I suggest that the special order be postponed simply for the half hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind the Senator of the exact state of the question before the Senate. By special resolution, the Senate determined to set apart this day for the business of the District of Columbia. The Chair will call up that business, and was going to announce a bill before the Senate, when the Senator from Virginia moved to postpone.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the Senate will determine this question without debate. Let us not waste the day in talking about the priority of business.

Mr. SHIELDS. I wish to ask the Senator from Virginia whether this day has not been set apart for District business, by a special order of the Senate? If so, I think it is much better to adhere to that special order.

Mr. HUNTER. The Senate will determine the question. It seems to me it can require no argument. I hope we shall vote on it without debate, and then go on with whatever business we determine to take up.

Mr. FOSTER. I suggest to the Senator from Virginia that he modify his motion by proposing to postpone the special order until one o'clock. I think we can get through with the appropriation bill by one o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. I have submitted the motion. The Senate will determine it according to their good pleasure.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am satisfied by my experience here that it is of very little use to undertake to resist the Senator from Virginia. I think we had better let him have his bill up, and get it out of the way. We shall never be permitted to do anything so long as he is in the way. I hope therefore that we shall let him take it up.

Mr. BROWN. I hope no such thing will be done. I protest against it in the name of justice to this District. Everybody knows the Senator will get his appropriation bills through. Who does not know it?

Mr. WILSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I move to amend the motion of the Senator from Virginia, so as to postpone the special order until one o'clock.

Mr. HUNTER. My motion is not amendable. The Senator had better let the vote be taken on the motion. Vote it down, or take up the bill; let us decide the question.

Mr. IVERSON. I rise to a point of order. After the yeas and nays have been called, is it competent to move an amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair was considering that question.

Mr. STUART. Certainly it is.

Mr. SEWARD. I wish to make an inquiry. The effect of this motion will be to vacate or annul, for the present, the special order by which this day was assigned for the consideration of District business, will it not?

Mr. BROWN. The effect of it is to deprive the District of any chance at all during this session of Congress.

Mr. SEWARD. I shall vote against the motion for that reason.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not so understand it. I am willing to give them another day. I hope the appropriation bill will not take more than half an hour.

Mr. BROWN. It will last all day.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. If my motion is in order, it seems to me it accomplishes all that is desired on all sides. It gives the Senator from Virginia an hour for his bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair doubts whether the Senator's motion is in order, as the yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to postpone the prior orders.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 31, nays 22; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Douglas, Fitzpatrick, Green, Gwin, Hammond, Harlan, Henderson, Houston, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Mason, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Thomson of New Jersey, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wright—31.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Bright, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Font, Foster, Hamlin, Johnson of Tennessee, King, Mallory, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Wade, Wilson, and Yulee—22.

So the motion to postpone all prior orders and take up the legislative appropriation bill, was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I hope, sir, that the proposition I am about to make will not be considered in any spirit of retaliation. I prepare bill after bill with great labor, and bring them to the Senate and have days set for their consideration, and then have them taken away from us in this manner. I do not think it is exactly right. My labor amounts to nothing. I do not see that I am laboring to any purpose. This proceeding, of course, makes the District business utterly null and void. Therefore, without meaning to be understood by any one as doing what I am about to do in any spirit of retaliation, I beg leave to tender my resignation as chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any motion?

Mr. BROWN. I move that I be excused from service as chairman of the committee.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move that the consideration of that motion be postponed until to-morrow.

Several Senators. Let it lie on the table.

Mr. SLIDELL. I make that motion. Let it lie on the table.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Mississippi asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia. The Senator from Louisiana moves that that question lie on the table.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not think that would be respectful to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask for a division of the question.

Mr. SLIDELL. I will state to the Senator from New York that I moved, in the first instance, that the consideration of the motion be postponed until to-morrow, which, I was inclined to think, was the most courteous course towards the Senator from Mississippi; but I was advised by gentlemen about me to make the other motion to lay on the table, it being more in conformity to usage. I suppose there is really no material difference.

Mr. SEWARD. I hope I may be pardoned for saying that I am not prepared to vote for excusing the honorable Senator from his post. I think he has performed his duties well, and I think he ought to be allowed to bring his business before the Senate. He is the judge himself whether this is the right way to manifest the spirit which he feels on the subject. I shall go with him, whatever his purpose may be. I think this District is entitled to this day, and that the Senator is entitled to it, because the Senate has previously agreed to give it.

Mr. HAMLIN. Mr. President—

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1858.

NEW SERIES...No. 136.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind gentlemen that the question is not debatable.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to say a word in relation to the chairman of the committee under whom I have served during the session; but if the question is not debatable I yield.

Mr. COLLAMER. I am comparatively a young member of the Senate, though an old man; but a short time since a gentleman who was a very acceptable member of a committee to which I belong, the honorable Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Toombs,] was excused at his own request, very much against my feelings, on the ground that he was entitled to have his own request granted. Now, if the gentleman from Mississippi persists in his motion, though I hope he will not, I shall feel bound to vote for it.

Mr. HUNTER. I was not aware, when I made my motion, that the Senator from Mississippi could by possibility take it as any personal discourtesy to him; or certainly, however anxious I was to get up the appropriation bill, (and I was only actuated by a desire to facilitate the public business,) I should not have pressed it; but as he takes that view, I am willing to reconsider the motion, so as to let him have the day. I certainly would be very unwilling to put upon him any discourtesy. There is no Senator for whom I feel more respect than I do for that gentleman. I move to reconsider the vote by which the District business was postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. By general consent of the Senate, the motion of the Senator from Mississippi and the motion of the Senator from Louisiana will lie on the table, and may be considered as withdrawn, if there be no objection. The question then arises on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to reconsider the vote by which the prior orders were postponed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on postponing the prior orders.

The motion was not agreed to.

CRIMINAL COURT JUDGE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The business before the Senate now is the business relating to the District of Columbia. The Chair supposes the first bill in order to be the bill (S. No. 64) to equalize the salaries of certain judges of the courts for the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SLIDELL. I suggest that that is not one of the bills which the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia wished to have considered to-day.

Mr. BROWN. That bill did not come from the District Committee at all.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a bill on the Calendar relating to the business of the District, and is first in order.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to its consideration.

Mr. PEARCE. I move that that bill be postponed for the present.

The motion was agreed to.

ROADS BEYOND ROCK CREEK.

Mr. BROWN. I indicate the bill No. 168 as the first one to be taken up.

The bill (S. No. 168) to relieve the corporation of Georgetown from the expense of making and repairing roads west of Rock creek, was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It proposes to repeal all acts and parts of acts, heretofore passed, which impose on the corporation of Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, an obligation to pay any part of the expenses of opening and repairing roads in the county of Washington, west of Rock creek; and excludes Georgetown from any representation in the levy court of the county of Washington hereafter.

Mr. BROWN. There is a very short report, (No. 90,) which I will ask the Clerk to read. If it takes any time to find it, I can state the substance of it, sooner, perhaps, than the Clerk can get it.

Several SENATORS. State it.

Mr. BROWN. There are two sides to this question. The committee reported the bill under an appeal from Georgetown. After they had reported it, there came in a remonstrance from the county portion of the District against it, as being unfair. The report shows that Georgetown asked to be excused from taxation to keep up the roads of the county, for the reason that they had to pay taxes to keep up the streets in the town, and the people in the county did not help them to do that. The people of the county remonstrated on the ground that they have to keep up the roads for the benefit of the people of Maryland, who come to town to trade with the people of Georgetown. They say that the roads in the county are of no great consequence to them, but are of great consequence to Georgetown, and that therefore Georgetown ought to pay the expense of keeping them up. These are briefly the two sides of the case, and I leave the Senate to pass the bill or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report has been found.

Mr. BROWN. I do not know that it is necessary to read it.

Mr. CLAY. I should like to hear it.

Mr. BROWN. Very well; let it be read.

The Secretary read the following report, made by Mr. Brown, February 25, from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The memorialists set forth their case briefly and pointedly. The committee append the memorial and make it a part of their report.

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, a committee appointed by the corporation of Georgetown to represent its interests before Congress, would respectfully represent:

That by the act of Congress of July 1, 1812, the levy court of Washington county was authorized to lay a tax not exceeding twenty five cents on all property in said county, except Washington city, for general county purposes.

That by the same act the general county charges, other than for roads out of Washington city and Georgetown, were to be borne one half by Washington city and one half by other parts of said county.

That by the act of May 20, 1826, the power to tax in Georgetown by levy court was taken away, and said corporation of Georgetown was made not obliged to contribute in any manner towards the expenses of the levy court except for "one fourth of the expenses incurred on account of the orphan's court, the office of coroner, the jail of the county, and one half of the expenses for the opening and repairing of roads in the county of Washington, west of Rock creek, and leading to Georgetown." By the same act the levy court was relieved of taking care of the Georgetown poor.

The undersigned would respectfully represent that the tax upon Georgetown of paying for one half of the roads of Washington county, west of Rock creek, is onerous and unjust. The tax upon the real and personal property in Georgetown is eighty-five cents in the hundred dollars. The tax upon the real and personal property in the county is twelve and a half cents in the hundred dollars. Property in Georgetown is assessed at least at one hundred and twenty per cent.; that in the county is notoriously assessed at not more than sixty per cent. It is undoubted that the rate of taxation in Georgetown is at least ten times greater than in the county. The county pays no portion of the expenses of our streets, and there is no reason why our town should pay for the county roads. It is not in the power of our town to say what roads should be made or repaired. The levy court may run our town into any amount of debt that it pleases.

It is not fair or just that a people heavily taxed, and considerably in debt, should be compelled to pay the expenses of another people but little taxed, and not at all in debt. There is no sort of equity in any such arrangement. The expense of county roads is a fair and proper charge upon the county, as our streets are a fair charge upon us. We do not call upon the county for any contribution, and the county should not call upon us. If the county roads are a fair charge upon us, our streets are as fair a charge upon the county.

The undersigned respectfully pray that the corporation of Georgetown may be relieved from the payment of one half of the expenses of opening and repairing the roads in Washington county, west of Rock creek, leading to Georgetown.

HENRY ADDISON,
ROBERT OULD.

Your committee believe the facts to be correctly set forth, and concurring with the memorialists as to the justice of the case, they report a bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MECHANICS' LIENS.

Mr. BROWN. Now I ask the Senate to take up bill (S. No. 182) for the enforcement of mechanics' liens.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 182) for the enforcement of mechanics' liens on buildings, &c., in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. I suppose Senators will recollect when we had this bill up before; there was no objection raised to the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth, ninth, and tenth sections, they being exclusively for mechanics' liens on buildings. There was some objection made to other parts of the bill to which I call attention, and I shall give them up.

Mr. CLARK. I objected to the bill when it was before the Senate previously, and lest the Senator should misunderstand me, I desire to say to him that I have objections to the first, second, and third sections.

Mr. BROWN. I suppose that if the Senator will indicate his objections to the bill without reading the whole of it, as it is very long, we shall save time.

Mr. CLARK. I certainly shall do so in a very short way; and I may as well do it now as at any time; and I will do it now, because some amendments may be made that will obviate my objections to it. By the provisions of this bill, a man who does any work, or furnishes materials for a building, may have a lien on that building for three months after the building is completed by filing a certain notice in court—that is, if the building takes two years for its completion, and at any time within three months after it is completed he files a notice in the court, he thereby acquires a lien on the building; and by section seven of the bill, that lien takes precedence of all prior incumbrances upon the property. To that I am opposed. I do not think it is just; I do not think it is right; I do not think it is fair to those who have acquired prior incumbrances. For instance: while the building is in progress, a mortgage may be made upon the property for money hired and used for erecting the building; yet, after the building is completed, the laborer, or the man who has furnished the materials, may go and file his notice in the court, and acquire a lien which vacates the mortgage which has been put upon the property, and was for money used in erecting the very building. It seems to me that if a lien is to be given to the laborer, or to the man who furnishes the materials, it should attach from the time he files his notice. If, when he makes his contract for erecting the building or furnishing the materials, he puts his claim on record in court, thus giving notice of it to the world, I have no objection to allowing him a lien from that time. Then everybody will understand that he has a lien; and if a man takes a mortgage, he takes it subject to that lien; but it is not quite right to permit the man to stand back and allow incumbrances to be made on this property, and then afterwards come in and vacate those incumbrances. That I understand to be the effect of the bill; and to that I object.

Now, if a provision can be introduced into the bill, that the man, when he makes the contract for the building or furnishes the materials, may put his notice upon the record so that everybody can understand it and act accordingly, I shall not object. I am entirely willing that the mechanic, the laborer, or the man who furnishes materials, shall have a lien; but I do not wish him to stand behind for months or years and let other people acquire incumbrances on liens upon that property and then come in and take the preference without giving any notice. I do not think that is right. I do not see any reason why he should have that preference.

There is another objection which I have to the bill, in regard to the tenth and eleventh sections, and that is, as to the notice which is to be given by a sub-contractor. By this bill, a sub-contractor or laborer—

Mr. BROWN. To save the Senator the trouble of commenting on that section, I beg leave to say that I shall move to strike it out.

Mr. CLARK. Then I have no objection further to make on that point. I have stated the objection I have to the bill as it stands, and I think the Senator will see its force.

Mr. BROWN. In reference to the first objection I desire to say, briefly, because I do not want to consume any time in discussing these matters, that I am very unfamiliar with all laws in reference to liens, never having been a builder, never having lived in a city where these liens are necessary, and never having practiced law in that department. I know that the bill, in all the particulars pointed out by the Senator, is entirely acceptable to the people of this District—the capitalist who want to invest money and persons who want to contract for buildings. It has been on the Calendar now since the 1st of March. It was discussed here at some length, and that discussion closed with an appeal by me to anybody in Washington, who had objections to it, to come forward and make them. No such objection has been pointed out by any one here as that presented by the Senator from New Hampshire. I hope, therefore, unless he has reduced his proposition to writing in some particular form, we shall take the vote.

Mr. CLARK. I am not prepared now to move an amendment; but, if the Senator desires, I will reduce my ideas into the shape of an amendment at some convenient time.

Mr. BROWN. Then let us go on with the other parts of the bill.

Mr. CLARK. We have in the State of New Hampshire, a law for mechanics' liens somewhat in substance such as I have indicated, providing that where a man makes a contract for performing labor or furnishing materials upon a building, he may put his contract in writing with the city clerk or town clerk, and give notice to the world, and thus acquire his lien, but he cannot be permitted by doing work or furnishing timber, lumber, or other materials without the knowledge of other parties, to acquire a lien, and then come forward months, and even years afterwards, and enforce that lien as against everybody who have acquired prior liens. That does not seem to be quite right. I will reduce my proposition to writing at the earliest moment.

Mr. STUART. I would suggest that half a dozen words would execute the Senator's purpose. If he will just say that the lien shall take effect from the time the man commences his proceedings, the object will be accomplished.

Mr. CLARK. That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will reduce his amendment to writing, I will go on with the bill. I move to strike out the word "chapter," in line two of the second section, and insert the word, "act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In line four, same section, I move to strike out the words, "of the United States" after "court," so that it will read, "the clerk of the circuit court for the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. In line two of section ten, I move to strike out the word "chapter," and insert "act."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move to strike out sections eleven and twelve. They are the sections commented on a moment ago by the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to sub-contractors and journeymen.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move to insert at the end of section fourteen, the words, "but if possession passes from such person by his consent, the lien shall cease." This section gives liens to those who bestow labor upon articles which are personal property.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move to strike out sections fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen. They are the sections of the bill which gave liens upon the pasturage of cattle and sheep.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I move, in section eighteen, line two, to strike out the words "fifteen, sixteen, and seventeen." They relate to the sections just stricken out. The section will then read: "that the provisions of the fourteenth section of this act," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. I have left in the word "fourteen" now. I do not know what section that will be under the amendment. I hope, by unanimous consent, the Clerk, when he makes up the bill, will be allowed to change that so as to make it suit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER in the chair.) It will be changed to section twelve. That is the proper one.

Mr. BROWN. I have now offered all the amendments the District Committee propose.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

Mr. CLARK. I propose to amend the bill further, by inserting in the fifth line of the second section, after the word "time," the words "after the commencement of said building, and"—so that, if the bill be amended, it will read in this way:

"Shall file in the office of the clerk of the circuit court of the United States for the District of Columbia, at any time after the commencement of said building, and within three months after the completion of said building."

The object is that he may have the opportunity of filing his claim immediately on furnishing the labor or materials.

Mr. BROWN. I can see no objection to that. I think it is but proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK. I propose to amend the seventh section, by striking out, in the fourth and fifth lines, the words "the building was commenced or the materials were furnished," and inserting, "which said notice was given;" so that, if amended as I propose, it will read:

"That the liens created in pursuance of the provisions of the act shall have precedence over all other liens or incumbrances which attached upon the premises subsequent to the time at which said notice was given."

Then his lien will take effect from the time he files the notice. If he files it on the day he furnishes his labor or materials, then he has it, but if he lays by, he cannot have it until he does file it.

Mr. BROWN. Very well; let it be so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The Senate next proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 191) for the benefit of public schools in the city of Washington, which, after an extended discussion, was passed. [This debate will be published in the Appendix.]

EXECUTIVE BUSINESS.

Mr. PUGH. It is important that there should be one or two nominations considered this afternoon, and I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. ["Oh, no."]

Mr. BROWN. I hope not.

Mr. PUGH. I think the public interests require it, and I will make that motion.

Mr. BROWN. There are two or three little bills which, I think, by possibility, can give rise to no debate, and one of them is very vital to the District. It is in reference to the fire companies here, which the Mayor and the whole City Council have come to the committee time and time again, and told us is necessary to keep down riots here. It asks for no favor from the Government, no appropriation, but simply for power that is necessary to keep order in the city, inasmuch as the House of Representatives refused to pass the police bill.

Mr. PUGH. I do not wish to disturb my friend from Mississippi if it is understood by the Senate that we may have this executive session. There are only one or two nominations left in my charge by the Committee on the Judiciary. I have no objection to waiting for half an hour.

Mr. BROWN. They will be confirmed before the Senate adjourns. Everybody knows that.

Mr. PUGH. I waive my motion for the present.

Mr. BROWN. Then I propose to take up the bill (S. No. 227) to authorize the organization of a fire department in the District of Columbia.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. No. 227) authorizing the organization of a fire department in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senate will indulge me, I will say this—being perfectly familiar, I think, with the whole subject—that the Government owns some three or four fire-engines, and hose attached to them; and the only thing which the Government is asked to do in this connection is, to turn them over to the city. They actually belong to the city, anyhow, whether you say so in terms or not; for the Government takes no sort of cognizance of them, though it bought them and paid for them. The provisions of the bill put the fire department so completely under the control of the city government that they can manage the whole matter. Without going into a discussion, I say this: that the Mayor, and I believe every member of the Council, and everybody connected with the city government, think that, with the passage of this bill, a great deal of the riot and disturbance which occur here will be put an end to.

In the houses where they keep their engines and hose people secrete themselves, because the houses belong to the Government; and they make forays into the streets, and create disturbances. The proposition, in the main, is this: to turn over the whole fire department of Washington to the city government. They believe that they can manage it in such a manner as to keep down a great deal of this riot. If the Senate is ready to receive the bill on this statement, very well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Do the buildings belong to the General Government?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Are they situated on the public square?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Then I am adverse to ceding them; I want to have the bill read.

Mr. BROWN. I feel bound to state that this is the truth.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I want to hear the bill.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. STUART. I should like to hear the third section of that bill read again. It is the one which disposes of this property.

The Secretary read it as follows:

"SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That all the fire apparatus or other property, including engines, sections, hose, hose-carriages, reels, hook and ladder fixtures and carriages, engine-houses, and all other property or implements appertaining to a fire department, which may be used by any fire company within the limits of either of the said cities, shall be vested in, belong to, and be under the exclusive control and direction of, the corporate authorities of the city within whose limits such company exists."

Mr. BROWN. That is precisely the section we propose to amend.

Mr. STUART. It seems to me a simple word will do. Put before the word "property" the words "the use of"—just give them the use of it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I propose to add this proviso, if it will meet the case:

Provided, That no right or title to any land belonging to the United States on which any building occupied as an engine-house or other building may stand, is or shall be hereby conveyed, but the right hereby given to occupy the same may be terminated at the pleasure of Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I think that is right.

Mr. STUART. I think it will be better to simply insert the words "the use of" after the first word of the section—"that."

Mr. FESSENDEN. Say "the use of during the pleasure of Congress."

Mr. BROWN. I think if we put in the words "the use of during the pleasure of Congress," it will answer.

Mr. STUART. Very well.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I agree to that, or anything that will answer the purpose.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I ask for the reading of the section as amended.

The Secretary read it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Strike out the words "vested in and belong to."

Mr. SIMMONS. The use only is vested.

Mr. BROWN. I see, when this section comes to be severely criticised, that we have no right to transfer anything that does not belong to us, and therefore, after the word "department" I propose to insert, "belonging to the United States," so as simply to transfer the use of property which belongs to us; but language of the section is very broad. Of course we did not mean, in drawing the bill, to exclude anybody's property but our own. We might appear absurd in including other people's property, and I propose to insert these words.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in. The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; read the third time, and passed.

CHURCH PROPERTY.

Mr. BROWN. I now move to take up the bill (S. No. 241) relating to the manner of holding and transmitting the title to certain church property therein mentioned.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was read a second time by its title, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BROWN. Unless some Senator desires the bill to be read at length, I think I can explain it in a single word. This is a literal transcript from the law of Maryland in reference to the transfer of property belonging to the Roman Catholic Church. In accordance with the general rules of the Church, the absolute title, the fee, is vested in the bishop of the diocese. This proposes to vest in him a limited jurisdiction, a sort of trustee jurisdiction. That is all there is of it. The archbishop of Baltimore, within whose diocese this city is, agrees to have it done in this way, and the whole Church are for it.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

Mr. HUNTER. There appears to be no limitation as to the quantity or value of property in this bill.

Mr. BROWN. It has nothing to do with that. It does not affect the title. It only relates to property they now own. The simple question is, whether the bishop shall hold an absolute title, or whether it shall be a limited title. That is all there is of it.

The bill was passed.

WASHINGTON CEMETERY.

Mr. BROWN. The next District bill on the Calendar is the bill (S. No. 316) to alter and amend an act entitled "An act conferring certain powers on the levy court for the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved July 1, 1812. That bill will, on account of the passage of another bill to-day, require certain amendments, which the committee have not yet considered. I shall not call up that. The last bill which I ask for the Senate to consider is the bill (H. R. No. 542;) and I am sure impatient Senators will be glad to hear that it is the last.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 542) to authorize the vestry of Washington parish to take and inclose certain parts of streets in Washington city for the purpose of extending the Washington cemetery, and for other purposes.

Mr. BROWN. The title of the bill is a little unfortunate; but the vestry of Washington parish really have the jurisdiction of the congressional burying-ground. We call it the congressional burying-ground, but the control over it is in the vestry of Washington parish. There are certain little short streets lying back of it, running down to the water, on which nobody travels, or ever will travel, if they remain a thousand years. I do not suppose they would ever be opened up; and the vestry propose to turn them into the congressional burying-ground. They never have been opened, and never will be, and never can be, on account of the situation of the grounds. They have no right to inclose them without our consent. What they ask, is to run the congressional burying-ground down to the water. There is a little neck between the congressional burying-ground and the east branch of the Potomac, which they propose to take; and they reserve to you the exclusive right to bury members of Congress, or any officials who may happen to die. They will bury any of you there. [Laughter.]

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HON. HENRY M. RICE.

Mr. GREEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HARLAN. I hope not. The Senator from Minnesota yesterday agreed that the consideration of a resolution introduced by him should be deferred, in consequence of my temporary absence from my seat. I see the Senator from Minnesota in his seat; and I hope the Senator from Missouri will withdraw his motion, and allow that resolution to be taken up.

Mr. GREEN. If it will consume but little time, I shall give way; but it is important that we should have an executive session.

Mr. HARLAN. I think it will take but little time.

Mr. GREEN. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

Mr. HARLAN. I now move to take up that resolution.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. Rice:

Resolved, That a select committee, to consist of five members, be appointed to investigate the charges preferred by certain citizens of Iowa, settlers upon the Fort Crawford reserve, as to the conduct of HENRY M. RICE, special agent appointed by the Secretary of War to superintend the sale of that reserve. That said committee have power to send for persons and papers, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. GWIN. I move to amend the resolution by fixing the number at three; and providing that the committee be appointed by the Chair.

Mr. BELL. I learn that it will be agreeable to the honorable Senator from Iowa—and I suppose it will not be inconsistent with the disposition and feelings of the honorable Senator from Minnesota—to refer the matter to a standing committee. Believing that all the purposes of the investigation will be answered by that course, I renew the motion which was made yesterday by the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Toombs,] that the inquiry be intrusted to the Committee on Military Affairs. That would seem to be appropriate, as the lands which have been the subject of these allegations belonged to the Fort Crawford reservation, under the jurisdiction of the War Department. I hope there will be no objection to this amendment.

Mr. DAVIS. As this matter was brought before the Senate on the representation of constituents of the Senator from Iowa, and he has moved for a select committee, I think it proper that there should be one.

Mr. BELL. I understand he has no objection to a reference to the Military Committee.

Mr. MASON. I understand that this resolution was presented by the Senator from Minnesota himself; but it would seem to me that the proper course would be to refer the subject to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a decided preference for a select committee, as I am, I suppose, like every other member, very reluctant to enter into the investigation.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understand that the Chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs being in feeble health, the next member on the committee suggested the other day that that committee would not have time to attend to it this session.

Mr. HARLAN. I will remark to the Senator from Virginia that I did introduce originally a resolution on this subject. The Senator from Minnesota afterwards introduced this resolution, and I suppose it may be regarded as a substitute for mine, to which I have no objection. I was not aware, at the time I introduced my resolution, that the fact of its having been presented by me would probably require me to act as chairman of the committee. I would not consent to do so. If a select committee were appointed by the Senate, it would place me in an attitude which I would not be willing to occupy. I am not willing to be regarded as a prosecuting witness in this case; nor will I, by any act or word of mine, commence a personal controversy between the Senator from Minnesota and myself. I have carefully, as I supposed, avoided anything of that kind from the beginning. I have no objection whatever to the reference of the whole subject to a standing committee; nor have I to the committee named by the Senator from Tennessee. I hope, therefore, that the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee will be adopted, and that the subject will take that reference.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I do not see why this is particularly referable to the Committee on Military Affairs, from the fact that it relates to the sale of a military reservation. There are no questions of title involved; and it seems to me that if it goes to any standing committee, it should be the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BELL. I should not hesitate as to the selection of a committee. The only idea was, that by referring it to a standing committee, we select one in whom all have confidence. I selected the Military Committee on account of the matter being connected with a military reservation. I have no particular choice, but I thought that was a committee in which the Senate generally have confidence, and it would answer all the purposes any gentleman here can possibly have, to have a fair and impartial investigation, so that if there were anything in this charge, it might come out; and if there were nothing, it might be frankly developed in the investigation. To have a select committee, we may attach to the matter more importance than perhaps it may demand. If there is anything in the charge, let us have it presented to the Senate fairly and impartially and fully; but as to the choice of committees, it is no great matter.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I made the suggestion from no disinclination on my part to avoid the duties; but the Senator from Georgia, [Mr. Iverson,] who made this objection the other day, is not in his seat, and he is more conversant with the business before the Committee on Military Affairs than perhaps any other Senator.

Mr. BELL. I wish my friend from Alabama would waive his objection.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am not tenacious about it, but simply wanted to say that the Senator from Georgia objected to the reference on the ground that the Military Committee have a great deal of business.

Mr. BELL. So the members of a select committee are on committees having a great deal of business, and want to attend to that business. So it is as short as it is long.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. Not seeing the Senator from Georgia in his seat, I wished to remind the Senate of what he had said yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FOSTER.) The question is on the amendment to strike out the words in regard to a select committee, and insert "the Committee on Military Affairs."

The amendment was agreed to; and the resolution, as amended, was adopted.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills and resolution from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 232) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 335) for the relief of Susannah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 426) for the relief of Monroe D. Downs—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 577) for the relief of Rebecca M. Bowden, of Prince George county, Virginia—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 578) for the relief of Isaac Drew, and other settlers upon the public lands in the State of Wisconsin—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A joint resolution (No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announcing that the House had passed the following bills, in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (No. 56) making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory;

A bill (C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky;

A bill (No. 222) for the relief of Elizabeth E. V. Field;

A bill (No. 231) for the relief of Nancy Serena;

A bill (No. 251) to authorize the claimants in right of John Huertas to enter certain lands in Florida;

A bill (No. 318) recognizing the assignment on land warrant No. 35,956, issued to John Davis, as valid; and

A bill (No. 336) for the relief of B. W. Palmer and others.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. GREEN. I renew my motion for an executive session.

Mr. HUNTER. Before that is done, allow me to call up the appropriation bill, so that it may have its place in the proper orders. I do not propose to act on it.

Mr. GREEN. I object. We must now have an executive session. That will come up in time. The motion of Mr. GREEN was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, May 15, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m. Prayer by Rev. Mr. NADAL.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I do not think there is a quorum here, and I believe some of the gentlemen who were so zealous yesterday are absent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain if there is a quorum present.

The SPEAKER then proceeded to count the House, and ascertained that only eighty members were present.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I move that there be a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Clerk then called the roll.

Mr. MORGAN. There is evidently a quorum here now, and I move to dispense with all further proceedings under the call.

Mr. MILLSON. I hope the absentees will first be called.

Mr. GILMAN. I will state that my colleague, Mr. MORSE, is confined to his room by indisposition.

Mr. MORGAN. I will waive my motion.

The names of the absentees were then called.

The following are the names of the members who failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Adam, Ahl, Avery, Barksdale, Bishop, Bocoek, Bonham, Brayton, Bryan, Bardingame, Burnett, Burroughs, Campbell, Caruthers, Caske, Horace F. Clark, Clark B. Cochran, Conning, Cox, Cragin, Burton, Craige, Danrell, Dewart, Dick, Dimmick, Durfee, Elliott, English, Eustis, Florence, Garrett, Giddings, Gilmer, Gooch, Lawrence W. Hall, Robert B. Hall, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hatch, Hawkins, Hickman, Hill, Horton, Houston, Huyler, Jenkins, Kent, John C. Kinkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, McKibbin, McQueen, Miles, Montgomery, Moore, Freeman H. Morse, Murray, Nichols, Peyton, Powell, Purviance, Ready, Reilly, Ricard, Roberts, Savage, Seaman, Sewall, Shorter, Sickles, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, George Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Trippe, Ward, Warren, Watkins, Whiteley, Wood, Augustus R. Wright, and John V. Wright.

A quorum (one hundred and forty-five members) having appeared,

Mr. MORGAN moved that all further proceedings be suspended.

Mr. ENGLISH. I desire to report myself as present.

Mr. READY. I was here just after my name was called.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. I was absent by the leave of the House, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, and I desire to have my name recorded.

Mr. SAVAGE. I should like to be reported as present.

The SPEAKER. Was the gentleman present when his name was called?

Mr. SAVAGE. I was not.

The SPEAKER. Then the Chair does not see how the gentleman can be recorded as present.

Mr. HOUSTON. I was absent by the leave of the House, and, of course, was constructively present, as I was last night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama has the benefit of his leave of absence on record.

Mr. WALBRIDGE. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. LEACH] is too much indisposed to attend the sitting of the House to-day.

The question was taken on Mr. MORGAN's motion; and it was agreed to.

So all further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

The Journal of yesterday was then read and approved.

APPORTIONMENT OF CLERKS, ETC.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a bill from a select committee, for the purpose of having the bill and report printed and referred. It is a bill to apportion the clerks and messengers in the several Departments of the United States Government in the city of Washington among the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the regular order of business.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported as truly enrolled, an act (S. No. 245) to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Luther Jewett, late collector of the district of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine; and a resolution (S. No. 2) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco, California; when the Speaker signed the same.

CONTUMACIOUS WITNESS.

The Sergeant-at-Arms appeared at the bar of the House, and made the following return to the warrant directing him to arrest Robert W. Latham:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, May 14, 1858.

The within-named Robert W. Latham appeared this morning voluntarily at the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms, and avows himself ready to answer.

A. J. GLOSSBRENNER,

Sergeant-at-Arms of House of Reps. U. S.

To the Hon. JAMES L. ORR, Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Robert W. Latham, you have been arrested and brought to the bar of the House for disregarding the summons of the House in failing to appear before one of its committees. What reason have you to assign for thus disregarding the summons of the House?

Mr. Latham submitted the following answer in writing:

WASHINGTON, May 14, 1858.

SIR: As I was about leaving this city for the West, to be absent some two weeks, on business of such importance that I could not neglect it, I received a summons to appear before a committee, on the 3d of May, of which the Hon. Mr. HASEIN was chairman.

Finding that if I did so, it would occasion me serious injury, and cause me to break important engagements, I addressed a polite note to the chairman of the committee, requesting the favor that my examination might be postponed two weeks from the 3d of May, upon the ground that no possible injury could occur by the delay. I stated that I felt assured that not one gentleman on his committee would hesitate to grant me the favor asked. That time expires on Monday next, and I stated in my letter that I would return sooner, if I could, but did not wish to make a promise, and not comply with it. I returned this morning, and was much surprised, when I arrived at the Relay House, on my way to fulfill my promise and to obey the summons of the committee, to learn that I had refused to obey its summons, and that the Sergeant-at-Arms had been sent after me, and that I was to be arraigned at the bar of the House of Representatives to answer a charge of contempt. I am now here, ready to answer all interrogatories that may be addressed to me.

I hope that this brief statement will be satisfactory to you, and will acquit me of any willful purpose of disobeying the mandates of your honorable body.

I am very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. W. LATHAM.

Hon. JAMES L. ORR,

Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. HASKIN. Reference being made in the answer of the witness just read to a letter which he wrote to me as chairman of the select committee, I desire to say that I did receive from the witness on the 30th of April, a letter informing me, as chairman of the committee, that he could not attend before us on the following Monday, inasmuch as he had business of pressing importance in Kentucky. As soon as I received that letter, which came to me through the post office, I laid the matter before the committee, and on that day (April 30) I addressed to Mr. Latham this reply:

April 30, 1858.

SIR: Your letter is received, and in reply I have to say that the near approach of the close of the session, and the anxiety of the committee to close their labors, renders it impossible to grant your request that your examination shall be postponed two weeks. Although sorry to interfere with your private business, the committee are still under the necessity of requiring you to obey the summons served upon you by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Very respectfully, JOHN B. HASKIN,

Chairman Wilkins's Point Committee, H. R.

R. W. LATHAM, Esq.

Before I received the letter of Mr. Latham, and, as I understand, before it had been sent to me, on the 30th of April, he had left the city and gone to Kentucky. I was informed by the gentleman who served the summons—Mr. Cole, I think—that, when he served the summons, on the 28th of April, he requested Mr. Latham to appear before the committee, or to see, in person, some one of its members; and stated that some arrangement would be made by which his testimony would be taken before the following Monday. Mr. Latham then promised to attend the committee on the following Monday; but, notwithstanding, left, and did not attend before the committee, as has been stated. As our only object, however, was to have him examined before the committee, and as that object will be attained by his voluntary appearance and surrender to the Sergeant-at-Arms, I move the following resolution:

Resolved, That Robert W. Latham be discharged from the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms upon his appearing to testify before the committee appointed to investigate the sale and purchase of the property at Wilkins's Point for fortification purposes.

The resolution was adopted.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by ASBURY DICKINS, their Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 193) for the relief of Simon de Visser and José Villarubia, of New Orleans;

An act (No. 30) for the relief of Elizabeth Montgomery, heir of Hugh Montgomery; and

An act (No. 46) to grant the right of preemption in certain lands to the Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends.

COLLECTION OF THE REVENUE.

Mr. J. GLANCY JONES. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to report a resolution in reference to the collection of the revenue, for the purpose of reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Several MEMBERS. Regular order.

Mr. MOORE. I ask the consent to make a report from the Committee of Claims. I was not present when the call was made yesterday.

The SPEAKER. The probability is that the gentleman's committee will be again called in the course of the day.

QUESTION OF ORDER.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the appeal from the decision of the Chair, receiving the report made by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

Mr. WINSLOW. I move to lay the appeal on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. If the Speaker is of the opinion that there was a quorum present when the report of the committee was made, I will withdraw my appeal.

The SPEAKER. The decision of the Chair was that the fact that no quorum was present had not been ascertained when the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar made his report.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I have this to say, that upon a count by tellers, just before the committee rose, there was no quorum present, and upon a vote taken directly after the committee rose no quorum was present. I do not wish to obstruct the business of the House. If it is the wish of the House, I have no objection to their discharging the Committee of the Whole House from the bills which were laid aside to be reported to the House, with the recommendation that they do pass. I will not object to that.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will withdraw his appeal, and not have the action of the House upon it now. I regard the appeal as involving a principle which is important. I do not believe the appeal is well taken, because there is no knowledge upon the part of the House that a quorum was not present.

Mr. SEWARD. Is this debate in order?

Mr. WINSLOW. I moved some time ago to lay the appeal upon the table, which motion is certainly not debatable.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to lay on the table.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The appeal was laid on the table.

BILLS PASSED.

The following bills and resolutions, reported yesterday to the House from the Committee of the Whole House, without amendment, and to which no objection was made, were then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly severally read the third time and passed:

A bill (H. R. No. 221) for the relief of Mary Bainbridge;

A bill (H. R. No. 224) for the relief of Stephen Bunnell;

A bill (H. R. No. 232) for the relief of Margaret Whitehead;

A bill (H. R. No. 250) for the relief of Pierre Gagnon, of Natchitoches, Louisiana;

A bill (H. R. No. 254) for the relief of William Hutchinson;

A bill (H. R. No. 257) to increase the pension of Henry E. Read, a citizen of Kentucky, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. No. 256) for the relief of Oliver P. Hovey;

A bill (H. R. No. 260) for the relief of Isaac Carpenter;

A bill (H. R. No. 261) for the relief of Leonard Loomis;

A bill (H. R. No. 264) granting a pension to Thomas Alcock, of Rochester, New York;

A bill (H. R. No. 272) for the relief of Brevet Major H. L. Kendrick;

A bill (H. R. No. 273) for the relief of John F. Cannon;

Joint resolution (H. R. No. 10) for the relief of General Sylvester Churchill;

A bill (H. R. No. 327) for the relief of the legal representatives of Marie Malines;

A bill (H. R. No. 332) for the relief of Richard B. Alexander;

A bill (H. R. No. 334) for the relief of Simeon Stedman;

A bill (H. R. No. 335) for the relief of Susanah Redman, widow of Lloyd Redman;

A bill (S. No. 38) for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana, was also ordered to a third reading; and was accordingly read a third time; and passed.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to reconsider the vote by which those bills and joint resolution were passed; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

CITY OF CARONDELET.

The following bill, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, on which Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, had asked a separate vote, was reported:

A bill (H. R. No. 131) for the relief of the city of Carondelet.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This bill was passed over yesterday without objection, and reported to the House. I have asked for a separate vote on it that we may have some explanation of it. I do not understand what amount is appropriated if it be passed. The bill is for the relief of the city of Carondelet. I presume that Carondelet is somewhere in the neighborhood of the city of St. Louis; and I also presume that the one hundred acres of land specified in this act are a part of the one thousand seven hundred and two acres which have been heretofore a portion of the Jefferson barracks tract. Am I right?

Mr. BLAIR. The Jefferson barracks tract contains seventeen hundred and two acres. The whole tract was conveyed by the city of Carondelet to the Government of the United States for military purposes; and the condition of the conveyance was, that it should belong to the Government so long as it was used for military purposes. The Government still uses the greater portion of that tract, but it has sold some one hundred acres of that tract. This bill simply proposes to compensate Carondelet for the one hundred acres which have been sold by the Government out of the seventeen hundred and two acres given to it by that city.

The donation from Carondelet was without consideration, conditional that the seventeen hundred and two acres of land should be used for military purposes. The Government has ceased to use that small portion for those purposes, sold it, and put the money into its coffers. Otherwise, the land would revert to the city of Carondelet. The one hundred acres for which the bill provides compensation to Carondelet, lies fifteen miles south of the city of St. Louis, being the southern extremity of the Jefferson barracks tract.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What is the probable value of the land for which compensation is proposed to be made to the city of Carondelet?

Mr. BLAIR. In my judgment the land would be worth about five thousand dollars.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. That is an insignificant sum, it is true. I do not propose to throw any obstacles in the way of action on the bill. I only wish to have it understood. It is proposed now to make payment for these one hundred acres which the Government ceased to use for military purposes, on the ground that the whole of the seventeen hundred acres was conveyed to the Government for military purposes, so that if the Government shall cease to use the whole tract the precedent is established that, if sold, the Government shall repay its value to Carondelet either in money or other lands. This act will then be brought up as a precedent, and as an acknowledgment of the principle that the Government ought to refund. It will, perhaps, be demanded as a right, that the Government should refund to Carondelet.

Mr. BLAIR. The Government, when it ceases to use this tract for military purposes, can surrender it to the city of Carondelet, and need not pay its value in other lands or in money. I think it is only reasonable that, if the Government sells the land, she should refund to Carondelet, because the donation was made on the condition that it should be used for military purposes. When it ceases to use it for military purposes, it should either return it or repay the city of Carondelet its value.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not recognize that principle as a correct one. The Government wanted a military station there, and if Carondelet, to aid it in that purpose, conveyed these lands to it, then the lands belong to the Government in fee. On the principle avowed by the gentleman, that we must either pay the city of Carondelet for the reservation or surrender it when the Government ceases to use it as a military reservation, I must vote against the bill.

Mr. BLAIR. It is expressed in the deed that this land shall be used for military purposes; and I say, that under that conveyance, when the Government ceases to use it for those purposes, it reverts, as a matter of course, to the city of Carondelet.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Is the condition of revertitur in the deed?

Mr. BLAIR. The condition is as I have stated it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. Then if we give these one hundred acres back, the remaining acres will follow in time.

Mr. BLAIR. I demand the previous question.

Mr. GREENWOOD. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the previous question, to enable me to offer an amendment. The gentleman has given an opinion as to the value of this hundred acres of land. I ask him to allow me to amend it by inserting a proviso that the amount to be paid by the Government under the provisions of this bill shall not exceed the sum of $5,000.

Mr. BLAIR. The valuation of the tract is left with the Secretary of the Treasury. He is to ascertain its value; and I think the Government will take no damage from leaving the matter to rest with the Government officers.

Mr. GREENWOOD. The gentleman has given his opinion as to the value of the tract, and I hope he will at least allow the amendment to be offered; and then I will vote for the previous question.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will withdraw the call for the previous question, and hear a suggestion from me.

Mr. BLAIR. Certainly. I withdraw it.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not like to interfere in this matter, but I understand that the ground belonging to the Jefferson barracks is exceeding valuable—that the whole of it taken together is probably worth a million of dollars; and it occurs to my mind that the best disposition which the House could make of the subject would be to authorize suit to be brought by the city of Carondelet against the United States, or against the tenants in possession, before the United States court at St. Louis, for a just interpretation of the reading of this deed. If the deed carries the revertitur—as the gentleman contends that it does—the court will settle the principle on which the United States should act in the matter. That is preferable to our disposing of so large a grant, or hampering ourselves with conditions which we do not perfectly understand. It occurs to my mind that the gentleman would secure the success of his bill by accepting this suggestion. If he is right in his legal interpretation of the case, why, then, he would carry a judgment for the whole.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think it much of a boon to the city of Carondelet, or any one else, to bequeath them a lawsuit with the Government. I think that after the city of Carondelet has made this magnificent donation to the Government of the United States, to be used for military purposes, it is the least the Government can do, when it ceases to use a portion of that land—and that but a small and the least valuable portion of it—to give it back to the city of Carondelet. Therefore, I cannot take the suggestion of the gentleman from Kentucky. As to the great value set upon this land—a million of dollars—there is a great mistake about that: it is not worth anything like it. I renew the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky, called for the yeas and nays on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Take the yeas and nays on the passage.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I do not want to take the yeas and nays on the passage for the simple reason that if the bill be not ordered to a third reading, I will offer an amendment to it.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and it was decided in the negative—yeas 76, nays 91; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Anderson, Andrews, Bennett, Bingham, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bufington, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, John C. Cochrane, Coffey, Conins, Covode, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Danrell, Davis of Massachusetts, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Edie, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foster, Gillis, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Hatch, Howard, Kellough, Kelsey, Kigore, Knapp, Lovejoy, Matteson, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Pendleton, Pettit, Phelps, Pike, Potter, Royce, Sandidge, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Robert Smith, Spinner, William Stewart, Tappan, Trippie, Wade, Walbridge, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburn, Israel Washburn, Wilson, Winslow, and Woodson—76.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bocoek, Bowie, Boyce, Branch, Bryan, Chapman, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Cockerill, Cox, Burton Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dowdell, Edmundson, English, Faulkner, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Greenwood, Gregg, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leiter, Letcher, Maclay, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Millson, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Niblack, Peyton, Phillips, Pottle, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ritchie, Roberts, Ruffin, Russell, Seales, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Stanton, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Underwood, Waldron, Watkins, Wood, Worladyke, John V. Wright, and Zollicoffer—91.

So the bill was not ordered to a third reading.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I desire to move an amendment; but first I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. The previous question has exhausted itself, and I wish now to get back to the time when it can be amended.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire, before the question be put on the motion to reconsider, to hear the amendment read, so as to know whether I will vote to reconsider for that amendment.

The proposed amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the city of Carondelet, Missouri, or its corporate authorities, is hereby authorized to institute suit, in the United States circuit court in Missouri, against the United States or their tenants in possession, to try and determine the title of the United States to the real estate tract on which Jefferson barracks are situated; that the effect and legal tenor of the conveyance from Carondelet to the United States may be judicially ascertained, and also any title which the United States may have to said tract independently of the conveyance from Carondelet. And it shall be the duty of the attorney for the United States for the district of Missouri to prepare and to attend to such cause on behalf of the United States, or for the tenant in possession, who may be impleaded in said suit: Provided, That either party shall have the right to appeal from the judgment of the said court, in said cause, to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee, called for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Messrs. DAVIS of Maryland, and SEALES were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 70.

So the motion to reconsider was laid upon the table.

B. W. PALMER AND OTHERS.

A bill (H. R. No. 336) for the relief of B. W. Palmer and others, on which Mr. MILLSON had asked a separate vote, was then taken up.

Mr. MILLSON. Mr. Speaker, this bill was reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, upon a petition presented by myself, at an early period of the session. The bill does not, in its present form, accomplish the purpose designed by the committee. Of course, I do not desire to enter into any extended discussion of the bill. I only wish to state its object, which I will do very briefly.

Pursers' clerks at the several navy-yards are by law entitled to receive only $500 a year, but the duties performed by pursers' clerks in the navy-yards are so laborious, that four or five years ago the Department estimated their salaries at $750, and Congress allowed the estimate. They have, therefore, been receiving from the Treasury Department the sum of $750 a year. But, sir, recently one of the accounting officers of the Treasury has refused to allow a larger payment than $500, upon the ground that no specific law has increased the salaries of these clerks, although the appropriations made by Congress were made with the understanding that the pursers' clerks at certain navy-yards were to receive $750, and they have heretofore constantly received from the Government $750. Now, however, the accounting officer says to these men that they shall be called upon to refund the excess of payment made to them out of the Treasury.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as these gentlemen who are pursers' clerks in navy-yards, have been employed by the Government under a promise of a compensation of $750, and have actually received $750, it would be a very great oppression upon them, after a service of three or four years, to tell them that they shall be obliged to refund the excess. This bill was designed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to provide for legalizing the payments already made, and to exempt these parties from the obligation to return what the Government has paid them. But under some momentary misconception, the bill reported by the Naval Committee provides only for a year, under the idea that this state of things only happened in regard to the appropriation of one year. My object is to make the bill apply to similar payments made in other years.

Mr. BOCOCK. If my colleague will yield to me for a moment, I desire to say that the bill which has been reported to the House is not precisely the one which the Committee on Naval Affairs ordered to be reported. A mistake occurred in the drawing up or printing of the bill.

My colleague has stated, very correctly, that, about the time the pay of officers in the Departments here was raised, the Secretary of the Navy came to the conclusion that the clerks of pursers in the several navy-yards were not paid enough, and he estimated for their pay at $750 a year. That allowance was made by Congress, although it was not expressed in the appropriation bill that the clerks should have $750. Seeing, however, the estimate made by the Department for paying these clerks $750 per annum, the pursers paid that amount from 1854 up to the present time. But recently, finding that a law stood upon the statute-book fixing their pay at $500 per annum, the accounting officers of the Treasury not only ordered the pursers to pay only $500 salary, instead of $750, in future, but they actually refused to allow them credit for the difference between $750 and $500 for the time it has been paid. The Committee on Naval Affairs were unanimous in the opinion, so far as they were present when the matter was considered, that it would be doing very great injustice to call upon these pursers to refund, and compel them to call upon the clerks to refund, the money which has been paid, and, for aught I know, long ago expended.

And the Committee on Naval Affairs were of that opinion for the further reason that they thought $750 was not an unreasonable salary for these different clerks in the navy-yards. They intended to legalize the payment since 1853 up to the present time; but this bill only legalizes the payment for one year. The very same reasons applicable to the legalization of this payment for one year, will apply with equal force to every year since 1853.

My colleague [Mr. MILLSON] states the facts correctly, that the bill as now presented was not the bill which met our approbation; and, if he will permit an amendment extending the provisions of the bill back to 1854, it will meet my cordial approbation, and I believe the approbation of every member of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MILLSON. I am very glad to hear this explanation from my colleague, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I was satisfied there had been some mistake, and I am very glad to hear that mistake accounted for. The object I have in view is to put the matter in the same position in which the Committee on Naval Affairs intended to put it. And I will say further, as a reason for it, that these pursers' clerks are perhaps the hardest worked and poorest paid officers of the Government employed in our navy-yards. They have the accounts often of more than two thousand men to make out, sometimes for fractional parts of the week, and fractional parts of the month. Their compensation, even at $750 a year, is, it appears to me, absurdly small. The object I have in view is to enable the pursers to pay their clerks as they have been paid, under the decision of the Department. I move the following as a substitute for the bill as reported from committee:

"That the excess of salary paid to B. W. Palmer and others, as pursers' clerks at certain navy-yards, under the estimates made in the naval appropriation bills since the year 1853, is hereby confirmed and made legal: Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed into a repeal of the existing laws regulating the pay of pursers' clerks; but the clerks herein provided for shall hereafter receive a salary of $750, as provided in the estimates aforesaid."

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana, demanded the previous question upon the engrossment of the bill.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I understand the effect of this amendment to be to raise the salaries of these clerks from $500 to $750.

Mr. MILLSON. The effect is to continue their salaries as they have received them since 1854.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. But which they have received in violation of law. I am willing that they should not be compelled to refund what they have received. I understand that the Department decided that this $250 should be paid them; and I am not willing that they should suffer from the mistakes of the Department; but I want the salary to remain for the future at $500, and I am opposed, therefore, to the substitute of the gentleman.

Mr. LETCHER. I call for tellers on the substitute.

Tellers were not ordered.

The substitute was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time; and being taken, it was decided in the negative.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. MILLSON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time. I make the motion for the purpose of enabling the gentleman from Ohio to submit his amendment to make the compensation for the future the same that it has been in the past.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I hope that "$750" will be stricken out, and "$500" inserted, so that we will remit the excess of payment made heretofore, and then leave the salary at $500.

Mr. MILLSON. That is what I wanted to do, because the bill as reported provides only for a single year, while everybody admits the propriety of allowing them to retain the excess which has been paid them since 1853. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House refused to order the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The question was taken; and the motion to lay on the table was disagreed to.

The question was taken on the motion to reconsider; and it was agreed to.

Mr. MILLSON. I now move to strike out so much of the substitute for the bill as authorizes their salaries to continue at $750, thus leaving the salary as fixed by law.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. I move that there be added the words, "and their salaries shall remain at $500 per annum."

Mr. MILLSON. That is provided for by the law already.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio. The Department has overlooked that provision of the law for four years, and I want to provide against the same thing occurring again.

Mr. FLORENCE. And I move to add "other clerks at navy-yards." There are commandants' clerks in the same situation as the clerks to which reference has been made, and if the amendment I propose be adopted, it will relieve the Fourth Auditor from other difficulties under which he has labored.

Mr. MILLSON. I do not think that the amendment is germane.

Mr. FLORENCE. I only desire that justice may be done to these parties. They have petitioned Congress for action. They have received, like the pursers' clerks, an excess of salary by mistake. Their accounts were approved by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and it has been only of late that the Fourth Auditor has refused to audit their accounts, because he did not consider that they have been paid under existing law, although appropriation was made here to pay them. This action will cost the Government nothing, and will be only an act of justice to these clerks. It will relieve these clerks, and end the matter.

Mr. MILLSON. I am aware that there are one or two clerks at the Pennsylvania navy-yard who have, under the same wrong interpretation of the law, received an excess of salary. I have no objection to the provision being made for them, if the House think proper.

Mr. FLORENCE. It provides, also, for one or two clerks at the New Hampshire navy-yard.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered.

The question first recurred on Mr. FLORENCE's amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 50, noes 48.

Mr. MORGAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The House was divided; and there were—ayes seventeen—

Mr. MORGAN demanded tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were not ordered.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. MORGAN demanded tellers on the amendment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. MAYNARD and WINSLOW were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes not counted.

So the amendment was rejected.

The question recurred on Mr. SHERMAN'S amendment, as follows:

Provided, That the pay of pursers' clerks at the navy-yards aforesaid shall not hereafter exceed $500 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

JEREMIAH Y. DASHIEL.

A bill (H. R. No. 333) for the relief of Major Jeremiah Y. Dashiell, paymaster in the United States Army, reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that it do not pass.

The bill was ordered to be laid on the table.

JOHN DAVIS.

A bill (H. R. No. 318) recognizing the assignment on land warrant No. 35,956, issued to John Davis, as valid; reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with the following amendment:

Insert after the word "Davis," the words, "under the act of September 28, 1850."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

ELIZABETH E. V. FIELD.

A bill (H. R. No. 222) for the relief of Elizabeth E. V. Field; reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with the following amendment:

Strike out the word "five," and insert the word "one," so that the pension shall be twenty-one dollars per month instead of twenty-five dollars; and strike out the word "one," and insert the word "seven," so that the pension shall commence in 1857.

The amendments were agreed to.

NANCY SERENA.

A bill (H. R. No. 231) for the relief of Nancy Serena, reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with the following amendment:

In line six, insert the word "eight," so as to make the pension eight dollars per month.

The amendment was agreed to.

JOHN HUERTAS.

A bill (H. R. No. 251) to authorize the claimants in right of John Huertas to enter certain lands in Florida, reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with the following amendment:

Provided, Said lands shall not be located on any land within six miles of any railroad.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

BENJAMIN L. McATEE AND I. N. EASTHAM.

A bill (C. C. H. R. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and J. N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky, reported back from the Committee of the Whole House, with the following amendment:

Instead of the letter "J," insert the letter "I," so that the bill will read I. N. Eastham.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended, so as to read,

"A bill for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky."

CHARLES D. ARFEVEDSON.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 154) upon the petition of Charles D. Arfevedson, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that the report of the Court of Claims be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

N. AND B. GODDARD.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 155) upon the petition of N. and B. Goddard, executors of Nathaniel Goddard, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that the report of the court be concurred in.

Mr. COMINS. There has been a mistake in this case. The petition of Nathaniel and Benjamin Goddard was sent to the Court of Claims with a mass of papers, under a general resolution of the House. It should never have been referred to that tribunal. The petitioners themselves do not make their claim as a legal one, but as an equitable one. They make it as one which addresses itself to the discretion of Congress. The court itself, at the close of its opinion, says that the case does address itself to the discretion of Congress. I will read the opinion of the court, as delivered by Judge Blackford:

"This cause was referred to this Court by the House of Representatives.

"The petition, so far as it need be stated, is as follows: That in September, 1812, (war then existing between the United States and Great Britain,) the ship Ariadne sailed from Alexandria, then in the District of Columbia, for Cadiz, a neutral port, in Spain, with a cargo of flour; that on the 15th of October, 1812, the ship was captured by the United States brig-of-war Argus, and taken into the district of Pennsylvania, and there libeled in the district court of the United States; that the vessel and cargo were ordered to be restored by said court, but the circuit court in said district reversed the decree, and the vessel and cargo were condemned; that the decree of the circuit court was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States; that in consequence of said decree of condemnation, certain bonds, which had previously been given by the claimants upon the delivery to them of the vessel and cargo, were paid, to the end that distribution might be made by the United States and the captors according to law. The petition also states that the sole cause of the capture and condemnation was, that the ship had on board, at the time of her capture, a British license.

"The prayer of the petition is for a judgment for the portion of the proceeds of said ship and cargo, which were paid into the Treasury of the United States.

"It is very clear, upon the face of the petition, that the claimants have no remedy in this court. The said decree of condemnation of the ship and cargo was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, on the ground that the ship, at the time of her capture, was sailing under a license of the enemy. (The Ariadne, 3 Whenton, 143.)

"The money paid into the Treasury of the United States, in consequence of said decree of condemnation, must be considered as legally belonging to the United States.

"We cannot go behind the decree of a court of competent jurisdiction.

"This case is, therefore, reported to Congress as one in which, on the face of the petition, the claimants have no legal demand against the United States. The case is one that addresses itself entirely to the discretion of Congress."

I therefore, Mr. Speaker, to carry out the recommendation of the Court of Claims, move that the report and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee of Claims.

It was so ordered.

TRUSTEE OF BENJAMIN COZZENS.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 156) upon the petition of Benjamin Cozzens's trustee was reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that the report be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

JACOB BIGELOW.

An adverse report (C. C. No. 157) upon the petition of Jacob Bigelow, administrator of Francis Cazeau, was reported from the Committee of the Whole House, with a recommendation that the report of the court be concurred in.

The report was concurred in.

CASE OF JUDGE WATROUS.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to bring to the notice of the House the matter of the investigation pending against the Hon. John C. Watrous, judge of the district court for Texas, and to ask, as I now do, that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of one of the memorials presented to the House asking for his impeachment.

In the early part of the session two memorials containing charges of official misconduct against Judge Watrous were referred to the Judiciary Committee. One was the memorial of Jacob Mussina, and the other the memorial of Eliphas Spencer. Each of those memorials contained serious charges; and the committee entered upon the investigation of them, have been for some time almost constantly employed in the investigation of them, and are endeavoring to complete their labors, in order that they may report during the present session. These memorials of Mussina and Spencer were presented to the Thirty-Fourth Congress, and referred to the Judiciary Committee; who reported, I believe, with unanimity, that articles of impeachment ought to be preferred against Judge Watrous. Your committee, not being satisfied with the rules which the Judiciary Committee of the Thirty-Fourth Congress adopted for their guidance, took up the matter of the charges de novo, and have, as I have stated, proceeded to the examination of witnesses, as if the case had been now for the first time presented for the consideration of Congress. On the 23d of February last there came to the Judiciary Committee a memorial of William Alexander, also praying for the impeachment of Judge Watrous, upon grounds perhaps sufficient to justify an impeachment if they should be substantiated upon an investigation. It is in respect of this last application of William Alexander that I call the attention of the House to the matter, and ask that the committee be discharged from its consideration.

The grounds upon which we make the suggestion are these: This memorial came to the committee under the standing rule of the House. It was presented by my honorable friend from Texas, [Mr. REAGAN,] who sits near me. Before entering upon the consideration of the testimony offered to be adduced in respect of this memorial, the attention of the committee was called to the fact that the same memorial was presented before the Thirty-Second Congress, and that the Judiciary Committee of the House of that Congress reported a resolution in respect of that memorial.

Mr. CHAFFEE. Is this a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I hope my friend from Massachusetts will indulge me. My object is to save time and facilitate the business of the committee.

The resolution reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Thirty-Second Congress in relation to this memorial of William Alexander, is as follows:

"Mr. VENABLE submitted the following report:

"The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred a memorial containing charges against John C. Watrous, judge of the district court of the United States for the district of Texas, report that, after the examination of much documentary evidence, as well as of witnesses summoned from Texas, the committee do not recommend that articles of impeachment be directed by the House against said John C. Watrous."

It does not appear, from the record in the Congressional Globe, that the House took any action upon the report of the committee. The Judiciary Committee do not, therefore, consider that this report of the committee of the Thirty-Second Congress is necessarily final, but it has been urged upon them that there is a seeming injustice in dragging the judge of a Federal court from his duties, Congress after Congress, where a report exonerating him has been once made. Had this report of the Judiciary Committee of the Thirty-Second Congress charged the judge with the misconduct of which he is accused, we should not have hesitated to enter upon the investigation. The point we desire that the House should decide is this: whether, in view of this report of the Judiciary Committee of the Thirty-Second Congress, and of the reference of the same memorial to the committee without any special order of the House, your committee shall, at this late period of the session, and in view of the very great amount of labor still to be performed by the committee in respect of the other charges, enter upon the investigation. The Representatives on this floor from the State of Texas have appeared before us, and strongly urged that a state of public feeling exists in Texas, requiring that we should enter into the investigation; while, on the other hand, it is suggested that the charge is stale, having once been brought before a former Congress, whose Judiciary Committee have reported a resolution in exoneration of the judge. Upon the ground, therefore, that this memorial has once been the subject of investigation, I move that the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from the consideration of the memorial of William Alexander, praying the impeachment of Judge John C. Watrous.

Mr. REAGAN obtained the floor.

Mr. READY. One word just here before the gentleman from Texas proceeds. In addition to what my colleague has stated, I wish to say, in reference to this Alexander memorial, that it was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary in the Thirty-Fourth Congress, to whom the two other memorials now before the Judiciary Committee of the present Congress were also referred. In their report in reference to the charges against Judge Watrous, they took no notice whatever of the Alexander memorial. They founded their action entirely upon the memorial of Mussina and Spencer.

This memorial was printed, and a report made in favor of Judge Watrous in the Thirty-Second Congress. But there seems to have been no action whatever taken in reference to it by the Thirty-Third Congress. The memorial was referred by the Thirty-Fourth Congress to the Judiciary Committee, and they seem to have ignored it in their report, and to have founded their action exclusively upon the other two memorials. The question now is, whether, some seven years having elapsed since the charges by Mr. Alexander were preferred, and steps having been taken by a committee to exonerate Judge Watrous from the charges then made, the Judiciary Committee of the present Congress should further investigate that subject; and whether they should not, in fact, exonerate Judge Watrous from the necessity of going into the investigation?

Mr. LETCHER. I should like to make an inquiry of my friend upon that point. I understand that the resolution which has just been read did not exonerate Judge Watrous. I understand that the committee declined to present articles of impeachment against him. An exoneration, according to my view, would have been to have found him not guilty of the charges. I think there is a very material difference between that and the resolution.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. The language is peculiar, and may, if taken literally, be taken as a Scotch verdict, "not proven." But nevertheless, as the committee, after full investigation, recommended that articles of impeachment be not preferred, we supposed the peculiar form of expression used was from inadvertence rather than from design.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Do I understand this to be a privileged question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it is not a privileged question.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. Then, as it seems likely to give rise to some discussion, and perhaps consume the whole day, I must object.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of the opinion that the objection comes too late.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CHAFFEE] raised the question when it was first presented.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Massachusetts waived his objection.

Mr. REAGAN. I have but very few words to say upon the question now presented in reference to Judge Watrous. I have the fullest confidence in the discretion of the committee. I know their labors have been onerous, and that they have faithfully discharged the onerous duties devolved upon them by this investigation. But the question which comes up to my mind is this: if the House prefers articles of impeachment under the charges which have been investigated by the committee, while I should feel bound to respect the motives which actuated the committee, in that point of view I should regret that they should be discharged from the consideration of the Alexander memorial; and for this reason: the memorial of Mr. Alexander makes very grave charges against the district judge of our State. One of these charges involves the fact that he had been acting with others in attempting to establish against the State of Texas fraudulent certificates to the amount of more than twenty-four million acres of land. This is one of several charges embraced in the memorial. Of the truth or falsity of these charges I have nothing to say. But if the committee should determine to recommend articles of impeachment upon the charges presented in the other memorials of Mussina and Spencer, I think the articles of impeachment ought to embrace the charges contained in Alexander's memorial; and then I would have no objection to the action asked for by the committee.

I desire to state this in reference to the motion now before the House: the Committee on the Judiciary of the Thirty-Second Congress investigated the charges contained in this memorial, and they recommended that articles of impeachment be not preferred against Judge Watrous. If the House had acted upon that recommendation, that would, in my judgment, have concluded the question; but the House not acting upon that recommendation did not, in my judgment, legally conclude the question.

It is also true, as has been stated, that these charges may now be regarded as stale. It is also true that subsequent efforts have been made to impeach this same judge. It is also true that the Judiciary Committee of the last Congress recommended the impeachment of Judge Watrous. The House, however, did not act upon that recommendation, and it remains in the same condition with the report made to the Thirty-Second Congress. If the House had acted upon that recommendation, a reinvestigation of the charges would have been unnecessary; and their failure to act, I take it for granted, is the ground upon which the House now reinvestigates the charges.

I have this further to say in reference to the charges contained in the Alexander memorial: the Legislature of Texas passed joint resolutions asking Judge Watrous to resign. I will not take up the time of the House by reading those resolutions. But the Legislature of 1848, in view of a portion of the charges contained in Mr. Alexander's memorial, passed such joint resolutions. The last session of the Legislature of Texas had the subject again before it, and again passed joint resolutions directing the Representatives of Texas in Congress to urge upon the House the investigations of all the charges against Judge Watrous. I take it for granted that the charges contained in Mr. Alexander's memorial were embraced with those contained in the memorials of Mr. Spencer and Mr. Mussina. And last winter, when the subject was before the Legislature, Judge Watrous wrote a letter asking them to appoint some persons to prosecute the charges against him, and have them fully investigated.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. It is but justice to Judge Watrous to say that he declares himself ready to meet the investigation, and that the suggestion that the committee be discharged from the consideration originates with the committee, and not with him.

Mr. REAGAN. I was going to say that Judge Watrous, in his letter to the Legislature at its last session, evidently—if I have not forgotten the tenor of his letter—contemplated the very charges preferred in Alexander's memorial. It was the fact that these charges seemed to be contemplated in his own recommendation to the Legislature, as well as by the action of the Legislature in instructing the Representatives of Texas here to insist on an investigation of all the charges made, that I thought it important to urge on the Committee on the Judiciary the fullest investigation.

I desire to say this on a point which has been discussed in this as well as in preceding Congresses. I understand one of the difficulties in the way of the committee is in the fact that they have adopted a rule for their government in the investigation of this case, which involves the necessity of hearing the answers of the accused, and evidence for and against, and going through all the formalities of a strict trial before them. That, I admit, is a matter addressed to the sound discretion of the committee. The difficulty, then, is, that if they are required to go into Alexander's memorial, acting on the principle of receiving an answer from the accused, and hearing all the testimony which can be adduced for and against the charges, they will not have time to investigate the charges involved. I have no disposition to interfere with the committee; but I will say that that memorial has been before that committee for some time. Witnesses have been summoned from Texas to sustain the charges contained in that memorial.

They are now here; and what I desire is, that the committee shall at least hear their testimony, which will not occupy much time. If they believe then that it is necessary for other witnesses to be had, they can send for them. The committee can determine whether the witnesses make a prima facie case.

In reference to the latter point, I will say that I understand the rule, in cases like this, to be that the House stands in the position of a jury of inquest, and not as triers. I understand the Constitution of the United States to vest in the Senate alone the power of finally trying the case. The committee are to inquire from whom they please, and in what manner they please—I mean the House acting through the committee—and then, if facts present themselves which warrant them in preferring articles of impeachment, charges are subsequently to be preferred before the Senate. I do not understand, and I wish to so state now, that the committee are bound by the strict rules which would govern in a trial in a court of justice. So far as I have investigated this subject, I have found that, in the British Parliament, it has never been the practice to go into formal trials in the House which prefers the charge. Warren Hastings, it is true, was permitted to go before a committee of the House of Commons; but he was permitted to do so by special favor in that extraordinary case.

In the cases here of Judge Pickering and Judge Chase, those judges had nothing to do with the charges until they were summoned to the bar of the Senate. In the case of Judge Peck, who was impeached, he was permitted to go before the committee of the House; but that was not as a matter of right, but with the understanding that it was an act of grace and favor alone. I say that the precedents are that the House occupies the position of a jury of inquest, and can summon as many or as few witnesses as it pleases, to satisfy the consciences of members, whether an impeachment shall be preferred to the Senate. It is not expected that a formal trial of the facts can be gone through with in the privacy of a committee room, when the judgment and feelings of the people of a sovereign State demand of Congress an impeachment and a full trial before the Senate, which is the constitutional trier of such causes.

It is in view of these facts, Mr. Speaker, that I have felt that it may not be out of place to ask that the committee examine the witnesses already here. I have no disposition to impose unnecessary duties upon the committee; I only wish that if charges shall be preferred against this judge, that the House shall be at liberty to embrace in its specifications the serious charges which have been preferred against him for years past, if in its judgment they should be preferred. I desire to say that from the time Judge Watrous went upon the bench in Texas, because of opinions he was understood to hold, and interests which he was believed to possess, the most serious alarm has rested upon the public mind in Texas. That alarm has not been diminished by time, but has become more aggravated, so that the Legislature of that State has taken the matter into consideration, and three memorials from citizens of Texas have been presented on the subject, asking his impeachment. It would perhaps be better for him and for the country if such a trial as is contemplated by the Constitution, could be had on all the charges preferred against him.

Hence it is that I feel some desire that the charges preferred by Alexander may, if consistent with a sense of duty on the part of the committee and the House, be also considered; so that if there be a report in favor of preferring to the Senate articles of impeachment, they may be based upon the charges made by Alexander, as well as those made by Mussina and Spencer. If the judge is acquitted, then his honor is vindicated; and with the fair verdict of the Senate of the United States acquitting him, the people of Texas ought to be, and I think will be, satisfied. If, on the contrary, that memorial contains charges which can be proven, and which will impeach Judge Watrous, and dismiss him from the bench, then it is the duty of this House to see that investigation of them be had, and the people of Texas be relieved of a judge who, some at least think, has been a great injury to the people of Texas.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I call for the previous question.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I want to say a word, inasmuch as the course of the committee has been called in question.

Mr. DAVIS, of Maryland. This is too serious a matter to pass over hastily, and I hope the call for the previous question will be withdrawn.

Mr. BRYAN. Judge Watrous is a constituent of mine, and I hope I may have a chance to say a word. I will renew the call for the previous question.

Mr. SICKLES. I move that the matter be postponed until Monday.

Mr. CLARK, of New York. I am willing that it should go over.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I dislike that the remarks of the gentleman from Texas should go out to the country without reply. As I think, unjust aspersions have been cast upon the committee, and I desire to reply to them.

Mr. REAGAN. I trust that if the gentleman thinks I have cast any reflection on the committee, he will be permitted to speak; but I am not conscious of it.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. The gentleman from Texas speaks of the committee having adopted a rule unprecedented in the annals of judicial investigation.

Mr. CHAFFEE. If there be a general understanding that the matter goes over till Monday, I will withdraw the objection. Otherwise I will not; and I move that the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. SEWARD. I object to its going over till Monday.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Will the gentleman yield till I offer a resolution to close debate on the fire bill?

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That all debate in the Committee of the Whole House on House bill (No. 304) to refund to Barclay & Livingston, and others, duties on certain goods destroyed by fire in the city of New York on the 19th day of May, 1845, shall cease in two hours after its consideration shall be resumed in committee; and the committee shall thereupon proceed to vote upon such amendments as may be offered thereto, the member reporting said bill having the right to close the debate, shall report it to the House, with such amendments as may have been agreed to in committee, together with such recommendation as the committee shall direct.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I would inquire whether that cuts off the five-minute debate?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. MAYNARD. If in order, I move to amend that resolution by striking out two hours, and inserting one hour.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I move to amend that by inserting ten minutes instead of an hour. This bill is understood by every member of the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. I accept that amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to lay the resolution as amended on the table.

The motion was not agreed to.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. DAVIS, of Indiana. I desire to inquire what will be the regular order of business, if the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House be voted down?

The SPEAKER. The consideration of the resolution of the Judiciary Committee, unless that shall be postponed.

Mr. HOUSTON. If the resolution offered by my friend from New York embarrasses the business of the House, I hope the House will accept his suggestion, and postpone it till Monday, so that it may not embarrass the consideration of such business as the House may now desire to transact. The Committee on the Judiciary, while they desire early action on it, because witnesses are here waiting the action of the House upon it, are not disposed to press it, to the annoyance of the House, or to the interruption of its ordinary business.

The question was taken on the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole House; and on a division there were—ayes 90, noes 41.

The House accordingly resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, (Mr. Grow in the chair.)

NEW YORK FIRE BILL.

The CHAIRMAN stated the business first in order was the consideration of a bill (H. R. No. 204) to refund to Barclay & Livingston, and others, duties on certain goods destroyed by fire in the city of New York, on the 19th day of July, 1845.

Mr. FLORENCE. I would suggest that the bill reported from the Committee of Elections in Mr. Ingersoll's case was passed over informally, in consequence of the absence of my colleague, [Mr. PHILLIPS,] and I suppose it comes up to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee was last in session—not upon objection day—they had this bill under consideration.

Mr. FLORENCE. Ah! That is true.

Mr. HASKIN. Mr. Chairman, when this bill was last discussed in Committee of the Whole House, I proposed to have occupied the attention of the committee in support of the motion, then made by the gentleman from North Carolina, [Mr. CRAIGE,] that the bill be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and also to have replied briefly to the arguments presented by my colleague, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE,] the chairman of the Committee on Commerce. What I then desired to do, I shall now essay to perform, and I regret exceedingly that my time has been limited to ten minutes; but I think that in that period I can show that the bill should not be passed. I shall endeavor to show, first, that this is a public bill, and as a public bill should go to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; secondly, that on no legal or equitable principle should the bill be passed; and third, that this bill contains unconstitutional provisions. From my examination of it, I am satisfied from its peculiar provisions that it is the most extraordinary bill that has been presented to Congress, for its consideration, at this session. Its passage would be the establishment of a precedent by which the Treasury would be bankrupt for a quarter of a century to come. I object that it is a public bill, and the fact stated by my colleague, that it has been sweated through the House, session after session, proves that it is a public bill. Sir, at the last session of Congress the bill was reported from the Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. PHELPS. No, sir.

Mr. HASKIN. Yes, sir, it was mysteriously reported from the Committee of Ways and Means, and it mysteriously passed this body. The last section of the bill which then passed contained a provision that the certificates which were contemplated to be issued should be issued and paid at the Treasury, within one year after their issue, out of any fund which might be appropriated for that purpose.

Mr. PHELPS. Will the gentleman permit me to make an explanation?

Mr. HASKIN. No, sir, I cannot, for I have only ten minutes. Now, this bill, instead of asking an appropriation from the Treasury, as did the bill of last session, contains this extraordinary provision—that the certificates, when issued by a commission composed of the collector, the naval officer, and the district attorney of New York, shall be received by the collector of New York in lieu of gold or Treasury notes; making these certificates, to all intents and purposes, money receivable in the payment of debts in the city and county of New York.

That bill also contained a provision that these duties should not be refunded to any one, save and except the owners of the goods destroyed; but this bill provides that they shall be refunded to the owners or their legal representatives.

Mr. LETCHER. Does that cover insurance companies?

Mr. HASKIN. Yes, sir, it does. It also provides that, where the goods were insured and the owners have received part of the insurance, the insurance companies may step in and receive the duties on the goods on which the insurance has been paid.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I beg to correct my colleague. He is mistaken.

Mr. HASKIN. Now, sir, I desire to say that the memorial published in the speech of my colleague shows; that of the forty-one importing merchants of New York who memorialized Congress in favor of this bill, about ten appear in this memorial by their attorneys. They are foreign importers in the city of New York, and I am authorized to say that those claims have been purchased up, and this bill is to be passed simply as a gratuity. I shall endeavor to prove to the House, that upon no principle of law or equity ought it to be passed. My colleague stated that duties to the amount of $400,000 had been paid upon these goods just prior to the conflagration of the 19th of July, 1845, and that of that sum $109,000 had been returned by the Treasury Department to the parties, because it had been paid on goods in bond—on liquors within the jurisdiction and under the control of the revenue officers, and that this claim covered the balance of $291,000. He also stated that, under the general law in relation to the warehousing system, the Treasury Department could not go back to what occurred in 1845, inasmuch as that law did not reach back to that period. In saying this, he admitted away his whole case. He proved that this bill, if now passed, would be an ex post facto law, simply to award to these rich merchants this gratuity at the hands of the Government. I say, sir, that considering the bankrupt condition of the Treasury, it would be infamous to pass the act. These goods were insured, and the insurance should have protected these parties. And if they were not protected by the insurance, they have no right to come and ask the Government to refund the duties on these goods, which, according to the statement of my colleague, were in the private warehouses, cellars, and stores of the importers or owners, and ready for consumption. Suppose my colleague's friend, John Wheeler, had purchased ten casks of brandy of Barclay & Livingston, and had suffered them to remain in the warehouse of that firm, and they had been consumed, surely John Wheeler would have had as much claim to be refunded the duties that he had paid second-hand as Barclay & Livingston have.

Now, sir, we have established a Court of Claims for examination of claims of this character, and this claim should have come before Congress through the medium of that court. I say, sir, that in this case the surroundings prove that the matter should not come up in Congress at all. If the House is to make any disposition of it, it should be sent to the Court of Claims, and when we have the report of the Court of Claims before us, it may then come up for adjudication here.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HASKIN. I hope the House will give me ten minutes longer.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I object.

Mr. HASKIN. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I suppose I am entitled to my hour to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is entitled to his hour if he claims it.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I shall not occupy the time of the committee for that length of time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman from New York has already spoken once upon this bill, and I submit that he is not entitled to speak again until every other gentleman who desires to speak shall have spoken.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that the gentleman reporting a bill shall be entitled to one hour to open and close debate. The Chair decides that the gentleman from New York is entitled to one hour to close debate, if he insists upon his right. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order raised by the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York that it is not usual for a member reporting a bill to close debate until after the close of the five-minute debate.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I will avail myself of the gentleman's suggestion, and reserve my right until that time.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I would suggest that there are others who wish to participate in this debate, and the gentleman having spoken once upon the subject, is not entitled to speak again until others who desire to speak shall have spoken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, for the rule expressly provides that a member reporting a bill shall have one hour to close debate. Does the gentleman take an appeal?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The gentleman from Virginia is perhaps not aware that debate has been closed upon this bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Debate has not been closed upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been closed. The gentleman from New York is entitled to one hour.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. Have I the right to my hour after the five-minute debate shall have been closed?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks not, unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I desire to inquire if the gentleman from New York, who reports this bill, has not, under the rules of the House, the right to occupy an hour after the bill shall have been brought before the House, even after the previous question shall have been seconded?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I can give the Chair twenty instances where the member reporting a bill has been permitted to occupy his hour in the House, even after the previous question has been ordered.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I will proceed with my privilege at this time.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I rise to a question of order. I desire to know if the Chair has decided that it is not in order for the member of a committee reporting a bill to make his closing speech in the House after the bill shall have been reported to the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question which cannot arise in committee. The gentleman desires to go on.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I only asked for information; for I understood the Chair to decide that the gentleman must go on now; and he wants to go on only in subordination to the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I ask that the resolution be again read, as it was not correctly read before.

Mr. LETCHER. Does it come out of the gentleman's time?

The CHAIRMAN. It does.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I will say now that I refer what rights I have of reply under the resolution and rules of the House, to the House, when the committee goes into the House with the bill. In the mean time gentlemen can take what order they please.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot decide what will be the decision in the House; but he is of the opinion, after reading the rule, that the gentleman can elect whether to make his speech here or in the House.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I will take it in the House.

The first section of the bill was read for amendments, as follows:

"That the collector of the customs of the port of New York, the naval officer of the said port, and the district attorney for the southern district of New York, be, and they are hereby, constituted a commission, without compensation, to ascertain the amount of duties paid upon all goods, wares, and merchandise destroyed by fire in the city of New York, in unbroken and original packages, as imported on the 19th day of July, 1845, and the name or names and place or places of residence of the several parties entitled, as owners, or their legal representatives, to receive or have refunded to them the amount of the duties so paid upon the several parcels and packages of goods so destroyed, pursuant to the provisions of this act."

Mr. HASKIN. I move to strike out the words "naval officer" and insert in lieu thereof "the surveyor of the port of New York, the Mayor, and the recorder of that city." The surveyor is a very proper officer. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce occupied that position, and, when occupying it, he was more familiar with the duties of collector than the collector himself; and I hope that my friend, the present surveyor of New York will be included.

I say that this law is unconstitutional because, in my judgment, it is an ex post facto law, and because, by this third section, judicial power is conferred upon a commission, composed of ministerial officers of the Government, to examine witnesses under oath, and adjudicate on these claims, while we have a Court of Claims here, a United States court, and United States commissioners for New York city. The judicial power conferred upon this commission is in contravention, I allege, of that provision of the Constitution which says that the judicial power of the United States shall be vested in one Supreme Court of the United States, and such inferior courts as may be established. I say, too, that the last section of this bill, providing for the issue of certificates, and their circulation instead of gold and Treasury notes, is in contravention of that part of the Constitution which provides that the power to coin money shall be vested in Congress. The provision that they shall be received by the collector of the port of New York in lieu of gold and silver, is in contravention of that section of the Constitution which provides that no preference shall be given in the regulation of commerce or revenue of the ports of one State over those of another. Why should not the port of Philadelphia, or the port of San Francisco, have the same privilege?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. What are the gentleman's reasons for his amendment?

Mr. HASKIN. I am opposed to the proposed personnel of the commission. It seems that, as no compensation is fixed by the bill to be paid the collector and naval officer and the United States district attorney, they are expected to make it up out of the extraordinary power to go as high as $300,000 in these returns of duties.

This bill, if passed, must be passed as a gratuity. I defy the chairman of the Committee on Commerce to show a single case where the principles involved in this bill have been adjudicated. The gentleman, I take leave to say, was under an entire misapprehension in regard to the cases to which he referred. The duties have only been remitted where the goods were in transitu, or in the hands of the revenue officers. I will refer to some. One hundred and sixty-seven dollars and fifty cents were remitted on goods destroyed by fire while on the passage, and before delivery. The duties were remitted on one thousand three hundred and twenty-five bushels of salt, casually destroyed by a flood on the night of the same day said salt was landed and stored in Annapolis, when in the jurisdiction of the revenue officers. Duties were remitted on eleven hogsheads of coffee, shipped by French citizens to the ports of Norfolk and Portsmouth, duties secured to be paid by Elliott & Purviance, after shipped on account of same importer, to the port of Baltimore, and there destroyed by fire. Then there is "an act authorizing the remission of duties on certain teas destroyed by fire, while under the care of the officers of the customs, in Providence, Rhode Island." The duties remitted on such part as was destroyed by fire while in charge of the revenue officers. The act of 1838 was for the remission of duties paid upon goods destroyed at the great fire in the city of New York, in 1835, and applied to owners, not to assignees, representatives, or holders.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, as I am opposed to the whole scheme. It is class legislation of the worst kind.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I call my friend to order. I insist that he confines his remarks to the pending amendment.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I intend to do so; and to show that while this thing is wrong in itself, it is more wrong to do it by the officers to whom it is proposed to intrust it.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman, in proposing to show that the scheme is wrong in itself, is not in order in this: that he is not addressing himself to the question before the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania has not proceeded far enough for the Chair to determine whether he is in order or not.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I propose to show that these officers are not to be trusted with the settlement of this matter. It is not my fault that only ten minutes have been allowed to discuss the bill on one side, while two hours have been allowed on the other.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. It certainly is not my fault.

Mr. PHILLIPS. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKIN] is to intrust the examination of this matter to certain city and Federal officers. It is a matter which, if the bill be passed at all, should be submitted to the accounting officers of the Treasury. The officers proposed in the amendment are as objectionable as those named in the bill. If the bill is to be passed at all, let not the Mayor of New York, and those other officers of New York, be the persons to pass upon the claims of New York citizens; but extend the bill, as has been suggested, to the whole United States—to San Francisco, Boston, Charleston, Philadelphia, and everywhere else; and let those who represent the United States, and have responsible duties to perform in that connection—the accounting officers of the Treasury—pass upon it. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HASKIN] will not, of course, answer. I do not know that he contemplated its passing when he proposed it. While we are considering this bill, let us consider what are the duties proposed to be imposed upon the executive officers of the city. The bill orders certain duties to be recognized and refunded; and allows the issuance of shipplasters for the amount. If the Government owes this money, let it pay it—let no certificates be issued. Do not conceal from us and the public that this whole sum is to be taken from the Treasury, and that the Treasury is to be reduced by that amount. If these duties are to be refunded, let it be under a general law. I am prepared to offer a substitute, at the proper time, by which all the cities will be put upon an equal footing. I would say, with great respect to the gentleman who reported the bill, that this is a species of class legislation against which, during all the time I may be here, short or long, I will war.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I propose to amend the amendment offered by my colleague, by striking out the words "Mayor of the city," leaving the words "surveyor of the port" to stand.

Mr. HASKIN. I accept the amendment, provided that, instead of the Mayor, the United States district judge be inserted. I want some judicial officer to be on the board.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. If the name of United States district judge were in the amendment, I would also move to strike it out. The officer designated in the bill is "the naval officer of the said port." If the amendment be amended as I propose, the officer will be "the surveyor of the said port." I concede, sir, for the reasons that have been suggested by my colleague, that it is better the surveyor should act in that capacity than the naval officer. He is the acting officer of the port; he is the adjutant, in fact, of the collector; he more thoroughly understands these matters, which this commission is obliged to pass upon, than the naval officer; and I may say, also, that much of the information to be allowed before these commissioners is to be derived from the archives of the surveyor's office.

It is my judgment, therefore, that it is better the surveyor should be one of these commissioners than that the naval officer should be. I object to the other officers mentioned in my colleague's amendment, and for the simple reason that the commission proposed by this bill is thorough in its composition—namely, the collector, the chief Federal officer of the port; the surveyor, the adjutant of the collector; and the district attorney, the law officer of the Government there. You can compose no commission of better elements than that. That conveys the whole of the answer to the remarks made by my colleague. In reply to the remarks made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in favor of this matter being left to the accounting officers of the Treasury, I have but this to say: that the bill provides for the submission of the finding of the commissioners to the Secretary of the Treasury, and it must be approved by him before it is binding on the Government. It therefore submits all these things eventually to the accounting officers of the Treasury.

Mr. LETCHER. I am opposed to this proposition, because I take it, from all I can hear in regard to these officers, in the city of New York and elsewhere, that they have about as much public business to discharge as they can very well perform. Now, sir, if this be so, why is it that this matter is not referred to the accounting officers of the Treasury, who are constituted here the proper parties to decide on the claims of these persons? Why is it that everybody else, who has a claim against this Government, is to run the ordal, at the Treasury Department, of the Comptroller and the other officers of the Government; and that this claim, of a far greater magnitude than ninety-nine out of every hundred that have to go before the Treasury Department, is to be referred to the local officers residing in that city, which is directly and immediately interested in the award of the Department?

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Virginia allow me to say to him that the commissioners in this case are precisely the same as were appointed by the law to refund duties in the case of the great fire in New York in 1835, and in other cases?

Mr. LETCHER. But that does not alter the matter. If you have departed from the rule once, that is no reason why you should depart from it in a case of the magnitude of this—no reason at all. It is unnecessary that this tribunal should be constituted, or that the usual rule should not be observed in respect to this claim. Is it at all unreasonable that this bill, which proposes to refund the duties on goods destroyed by fire, should be subjected to the operation of the same principle which has been found to work well in practice in regard to other claims of less magnitude and importance? If there is any reason why an exception should be made in this case, then it is for gentlemen to demonstrate the necessity for it.

But how is it that this bill proposes to impose this duty upon the district attorney, when it is notorious that not ten days since a proposition was introduced here to divide the judicial district of New York, because of the magnitude of the labor imposed upon the judge and district attorney? With a proposition of that kind pending before the House, gentlemen come in here and propose to impose other duties, altogether foreign to his legitimate business, on the district attorney of the United States. Does not this require some explanation?

Mr. HASKIN. That is in the bill reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir; I refer to that. Then, sir, has not the surveyor of the port of New York enough to do? Is he unemployed part of his time? Has he days, or weeks, or months, to give to an investigation of this sort, while the other duties committed to his hands can be discharged at the same time?

Mr. HASKIN. Without compensation, too.

Mr. LETCHER. Yes, sir; I understand that. It strikes me that you are referring this matter to a tribunal that cannot investigate it, and taking it away from the one which the Government has created for the investigation of matters of this kind. Now, I am for leaving it to the tribunal which the law provides for the investigation of such cases—the Court of Claims. Let it go there, where it can and will be investigated; but do not refer it to officers who are now overburdened with work, and are actually asking relief at the hands of Congress.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. The gentleman remarked that there was a proposition to divide the southern district of New York. The proposition refers to the northern district.

Mr. LETCHER. The proposition is to divide the State of New York into three judicial districts; and I imagine that if it be divided, that the third district will be constituted of parts of the two existing districts.

Mr. SICKLES. That is so.

The question was taken on Mr. JOHN COCHRANE's amendment to the amendment of his colleague, Mr. HASKIN, and the Chair announced that it was disagreed to.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I ask for a division.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. SICKLES. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. CLEMENS. I desire to declare to the committee the reasons which induce me to take this course. During my temporary absence from the Hall, in attendance upon a constituent who had business at the Departments, I find that a motion was made and carried to restrict the debate upon this bill to ten minutes. I am prepared to discuss the question fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman that his motion is not debatable.

Mr. CLEMENS. I make the motion, then.

Mr. SICKLES. I rise to a question of order.

I understand that an amendment was offered by the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE,] to the amendment of my colleague, Mr. HASKIN.

The CHAIRMAN. That amendment has been voted down.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I called for a division on my amendment in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not sure whether the gentleman called for a division or not; he did not rise from his seat, and it is too late now.

Mr. SICKLES. The division was called for in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not understand that a division was called for, although he looked around to see if it was before he passed on to other business, and gave the floor to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SICKLES. The call for the division was heard all about this part of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Virginia, who has moved to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I am informed by those about me that the call for a division was made in time, and I ask unanimous consent that a division may be had.

Mr. CLEMENS. I will withdraw my motion until this question is settled.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I now ask for a division.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object.

Mr. SEWARD. Well, I insist that the gentleman from New York, who called for a division, shall have his rights.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that a motion has been made to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. CLEMENS. I withdraw it.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It cannot be withdrawn, except by unanimous consent. I object, and call for tellers on the motion.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rules of the committee an amendment cannot be withdrawn except by unanimous consent. If objection be made, the gentleman cannot withdraw his motion.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I object, and ask for a vote upon the motion by tellers.

Mr. CLEMENS. I would suggest to the Chair that there was a pending question undecided when I made my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided that it is too late to raise that question. Before recognizing the gentleman from Virginia, the Chair looked round to see if a division was insisted on on the amendment of the gentleman from New York. If it was, the Chair was not aware of it, and decides that it is too late to go back now. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. SICKLES. I make the question of order that the motion to strike out the enacting clause has been withdrawn, and that the objection of the gentleman from Ohio came too late. The gentleman from Virginia stated that he would withdraw his motion to enable my colleague to call for a division on his amendment, and it was withdrawn. My colleague then called for a division on his amendment, and after that the gentleman from Ohio objected to the withdrawal of the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the question of order, for the reason that the committee had proceeded to no other business, and the Chair had entertained no other motion.

Mr. SICKLES. The Chair had entertained the demand for a division.

Mr. LETCHER. If the gentleman from New York is not satisfied with the decision of the Chair, let him take an appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to state that unless an appeal is taken, he must put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MILLSON. I should like to know according to what rule the Chair decides that the motion to strike out is an amendment, while, at the same time, he decides that it is not debatable, when all amendments are debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion to strike out the enacting clause be in order, the rule provides that it shall take precedence of all other motions, and it cannot be withdrawn except by unanimous consent. The Chair may have decided hastily in saying that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. HOARD. Then the gentleman from Virginia has a right to debate it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. CLEMENS. Mr. Chairman, I have taken some pains to investigate the principles as well as the details of this bill, and I regret that I have not time to go into a full consideration of it, and to show that there is neither precedent, nor law, nor justice, for its passage.

I have taken pains to examine the speech made by Mr. Pelton, of New York, in the last Congress, and the speech made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE,] in the present Congress. I have examined critically all the cases referred to in those speeches, and I can show by the law and the testimony, that there is not in those cases a single principle which will justify the House in passing this bill. There is not a single instance of an act passed from the time of the First Congress down to the present moment, of duties being refunded on goods destroyed by fire, which were not, at the time of their destruction, either in the custody of the custom-house officers, or on their way from a port of entry to a port of delivery. I challenge any gentleman from New York to produce a single special act in which this principle has been violated. The gentleman from New York [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE] refers to certain cases in which he said it had been done. I have not time now to take up the cases to which he made reference, and which I have now before me; but they sustain no such principle as that involved in this bill.

I have referred to the case in 5th Howard and in 12th Wheaton, showing the time when goods imported and remaining in unbroken packages shall be considered as entering into the consumption of the country. There is not a single case decided by the Supreme Court, there is not a special act passed by Congress, nor is there even a semblance of justice to sustain the principle which it is now sought to establish.

The gentleman from New York has referred to the law of 1854 as affording a precedent for passing this special law for refunding duties to Barclay, Livingston, and others. Sir, there was a principle in that act. Under it $109,967 52 have been refunded to sufferers by fire in New York city. For what reason? Because the liquors and wines were in bond. How was it in regard to those goods upon which duties are now asked to be refunded? The goods had been delivered over to the importing merchants. The duties had been paid in cash to the Government, and the Government was discharged from all liability. The goods had actually gone into the consumption of the country; because it is a notorious fact that the large importing merchants not only sell, but frequently send their goods into the interior in the original unbroken packages; and according to the principle decided in 12th Wheaton, goods under such circumstances (the unbroken packages) are to be considered as having gone into the consumption of the country. Admitting the theory contended for, it cannot therefore be adopted as a rule.

By the warehousing act of the 20th of March, 1854, a principle is acknowledged, that duties already paid ought to be refunded in all cases where goods have been destroyed by fire or other casualty while remaining in the custody of the officers of the custom-house, under bond, or in public store-houses, or in the appraiser's stores, or in transitu. That is but the great fundamental principle, in specific substance, settled by Congress in every special act passed from 1789 down to the present time. This law, in truth, is in affirmation of the principle decided by the Supreme Court in the cases in Howard and Wheaton; and I call upon the gentleman from New York to show me upon what foundation of justice, law, or equity these parties can call upon Congress to act upon any other principle than that which Congress has embodied in the act of 1854.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I am opposed to the motion of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CLEMENS] to strike out the enacting clause, for the reason that I believe the bill ought to be reported to the House with a recommendation that it do pass. This is not a bill asking Congress for a gratuity to these men, but asking Congress to give them relief, in accordance with the principles of equal and exact justice.

This bill provides for refunding the duties to the original importers on goods destroyed by fire while in the original unbroken packages in which they were imported, and which never went into the consumption of the country. These men paid the duties on their goods, and afterwards they were compelled to import a like quantity of the same goods to go into the consumption of the country. The Government has, then, substantially received duties upon the same goods twice; and it seems to me wrong and unjust that the Government should demand of these individuals, who have imported goods into the country, and which goods have been destroyed by fire while in their possession in original and unbroken packages, that they should pay duties upon them. I assert, that in every instance of this kind, where duties have been paid, for which no consideration has been received, which has been brought before Congress, the duties have been refunded. There are some twenty cases of private bills to be found upon your statute-books, exactly like this bill, no better or more carefully guarded than this, and the duties in every case have been refunded.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. PHILLIPS] asks why not have a general law? There is a general law. The law of 1854 provides that the duties on goods destroyed by fire when in the original unbroken packages shall be refunded when the goods are in the hands of the importer. I understand there is not, at most, but a single case existing, (if, indeed, there is that,) in which duties have not been refunded where goods have been destroyed by fire, while in original packages. The gentleman from Ohio asked, the other day, why refunding duties should be confined to importers; why should it not be extended to the retailer? There is the argument of inconvenience against it. It cannot be done. It would be opening the door to frauds innumerable.

But there is a principle, clear and fixed, which has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 12 Wheaton. I will read from the decision of the court, delivered by Justice Marshall, (Brown vs. the State of Maryland, 12 Wheaton, 441-2):

"It is sufficient for the present to say, generally, that when the importer has so acted upon the thing imported that it has become incorporated and mixed up with the mass of property in the country, it has, perhaps, lost its distinctive character as an import, and has become subject to the taxing power of the State; but while retaining the property of the importer, in his warehouse, in the original form or package in which it was imported, a tax upon it is too plainly a duty on imports to escape the prohibition in the Constitution."

Well, sir, that rule is a rule which can be executed. It is a plain and distinct rule. It is a rule which leaves no door open for frauds. There is no difficulty. There is no danger likely to arise, or that can possibly arise to the Government.

In this case the question is, had the goods gone into the consumption of the country? If the goods were in the original unbroken packages, then they had not gone into the consumption of the country. If those goods had been reexported, the law provides for the repayment of the duties; but when they have been destroyed by fire, will you retain the duties?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question occurred on the motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. LETCHER. I rise to a question of order. I submit that under the resolution adopted by the House, closing debate, the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would have held that the point would have been well taken if it had been raised in time; but the Chair thinks the question of order comes too late.

Mr. LETCHER. Then the Chair decides that the resolution of the House is not binding upon the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it is binding like the rules of the House. It must be enforced in order, and at the proper time.

Mr. LETCHER. Does the Chair hold that the committee is not required to execute the orders of the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia knows that when a motion has been entertained without objection, and the committee has proceeded to other business, it is too late to go back to it. The Chair overrules the question of order.

Mr. CLEMENS. Have I not the right to withdraw my motion?

The CHAIR. Only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I object.

Mr. SICKLES. Is the motion debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not. The debate has already taken place.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois, demanded tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. SICKLES and CLEMENS were appointed.

The House was divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, nays 19.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting, the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I rise to a question of order. My question of order is that the gentleman from Virginia has a right to withdraw his motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule provides that if the committee finds itself without a quorum, the roll shall be called, and the names of the absent members reported to the House.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I am talking of the motion to strike out the enacting clause. The rule says that that motion, when made, shall take precedence of a motion to amend, and therefore it is not an amendment.

Mr. SICKLES. I insist on the call.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Messrs. Bishop, Bonham, Butcher, Branch, Brayton, Bryan, Burnett, Burroughs, Cady, Caskie, Chapin, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clark B. Cochrane, John Cochrane, Comins, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Burton Craige, Dean, Dewart, Dick, Dimmick, Edie, English, Eastis, Florence, Giddings, Grow, Harlan, J. Morrison Harris, Hickman, Horton, Hughes, Keitt, Kellogg, Jacob M. Kunkel, John C. Kunkel, Lamar, Landy, Lawrence, Leach, Leidy, Montgomery, Freeman H. Morse, Murray, Niblack, Olin, Reagan, Reilly, Ricard, Savage, Seasing, Aaron Shaw, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, Spigner, William Stewart, George Taylor, Thayer, Thompson, Walton, Ward, Warren, Wilson, and Augustus R. Wright.

The committee rose, and reported the names of the absentees to the House. A quorum having answered to their names, the committee again resumed its session.

Mr. HOUSTON stated that the members of the Committee on the Judiciary were in session by the permission of the House, and that for that reason some of them did not get up in time to answer to their names.

Mr. CHAPMAN and Mr. CRAIG, of North Carolina, were in attendance on the Committee on the Judiciary, and came into the Hall too late to have their names recorded.

Mr. CLEMENS. I wish to withdraw my motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. It is too late.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. The rule is, that the gentleman can withdraw the motion any time before the decision of the House upon it. He can withdraw it even after the announcement of the tellers, but before the announcement of the result by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The 119th rule provides that the motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend, and, if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection. The Chair, on consideration, is of the opinion that the motion to strike out can be withdrawn, like any other independent motion, before action of the committee upon it.

Mr. CLEMENS. Then I withdraw the motion.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I move to strike out the officers named in the first section and to insert the accounting officers of the Treasury.

I have but a word to say. I do not see any reason why this claim should be exempt from the usual routine. Why shall it be adjudicated where these gentlemen living in New York insist on leaving it? Why shall it be left to New York officers? Why shall it be where these importing merchants insist that it shall be? Why leave it with the officers of their own custom-house? Why shall they not, as every citizen, be required to present their vouchers to the accounting officers of the Treasury? Let them be, as I propose, subject to all the checks that every other claimant is. I do not say a word against the claim. I confine myself to my amendment, and want to know what reasonable objection there can be to it? If I am told that there is difficulty of proof, I ask the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE,] who, I am sure, wants nothing in this bill but what is just and fair, why they should not present their claims for adjudication by the accounting officers of the Treasury? The amount of duties paid, with a statement of the package on which it was paid, is on file in New York. The invoice shows the goods which were imported; and all they have to do is to show by depositions the amount of property which was destroyed, with the numbers and marks of the packages which were destroyed.

Mr. LEITER. I rise to a point of order. It is out of order for a Philadelphian to shake his fist at a New Yorker. [Laughter.]

Mr. PHILLIPS. I will state that nearly all the proof to make out an honest claim is in the Treasury. We have not destroyed them, though we have authorized the destruction of postmasters' returns. The invoices are on record, and the amount of duties paid can be ascertained. There is no proof that cannot be had in the city of Washington as well as in New York, with the exception merely as to the actual goods destroyed by fire; and that can be ascertained by depositions to be taken in the city of New York, just as depositions are taken in other claims. Now I want, Mr. Chairman, to ask that this claim shall take the usual course of other claims.

Mr. LEITER. I move to strike out the enacting clause of the bill.

Mr. LETCHER. I now rise to the point of order I made before—that this motion is not in order under the resolution closing debate on this bill, which provides that it shall be subject to amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order; and rules the motion out of order.

Mr. WINSLOW. I ask for the reading of the 119th rule.

The rule was read, as follows:

"A motion to strike out the enacting words of a bill shall have precedence of a motion to amend; and if carried, shall be considered equivalent to its rejection."

Mr. WINSLOW. I now ask for the reading of the note to the 119th rule.

The note was read, as follows:

"The Manual states that if a committee be opposed to the paper or bill, and think that it cannot be made good by amendment, the committee cannot reject it, but must report it back to the House without amendment, and there make their opposition. The Manual provides that a paragraph or section may be first amended by its friends, so as to make it as perfect as they can before the question is put for striking it out. By this rule it is expressly established that a motion to strike out, for the purpose of destroying, shall be paramount to a motion to amend. Rule 139 provides that the Manual shall govern in cases in which it is applicable, where it is not inconsistent with established rules. In the case, then, of giving precedence to motions to insert or to amend, over motions to strike out or reject, it is clearly inconsistent with an established rule; and, consequently, the practice of the House for the last few years has been in violation of the 119th rule."

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. This committee has no power to reject this, or any other bill; and your rule declares that a motion to strike out the enacting words of the bill, if carried, shall be equivalent to its rejection.

Mr. BOGCK. It is not to be supposed that I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair by not taking an appeal at this time. I believe it is wrong.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Virginia if he has not several times, during his service in Congress, voted to sustain the Chair in direct contradiction to this ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GREENWOOD demanded tellers on the appeal.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. DOWDELL and WALDRON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 44, nays 90.

So the decision of the Chair was overruled.

The question occurred on Mr. LEITER's motion to strike out the enacting clause.

Mr. SANDIDGE demanded tellers.

Mr. LETCHER. Is the motion to strike out the enacting clause debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state to the gentleman from Virginia, that the Chair first decided on the point of order that the motion was not debatable; but the Chair afterwards allowed debate on the question. The Chair decides that the motion is not debatable.

Mr. LETCHER. I appeal from the decision of the Chair deciding that the question is not debatable.

[Cries of "Too late!"]

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I wish to present a question of order to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair cannot entertain another point of order while an appeal is pending: The Chair decides that the motion to strike out the enacting clause is not debatable, and from that decision the gentleman from Virginia appeals.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I submit that that appeal was not taken in time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that it was taken in time.

Mr. BOOCK. I desire to make a suggestion in support of the decision of the Chair. We are acting under an order of the House closing debate; and no debate is allowed, except five minutes to explain an amendment and five minutes to oppose it. This is not an amendment. It takes precedence of all amendments. It is a motion to strike out the enacting clause of the bill and does not come under the rule which allows five minutes' speeches.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I submit to the Chair that, if the five-minute rule is in force to make this not a debatable question, it is in force securing the right to offer amendments and debate them for five minutes.

Mr. STANTON. The rule expressly says that the question shall be taken without debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the motion is not debatable, because it is, like a motion to lay upon the table, an independent motion, and takes precedence of motions to amend. The House, too, has closed debate upon all questions except the five minutes' debate upon amendments, and this, not being an amendment, is not debatable. From this decision the gentleman from Virginia appeals; and the question is: "Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?"

The question was taken; and the decision of the Chair was sustained.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would ask the Chair one question. If the motion was made in the House would it not be debatable?

The CHAIRMAN. That is a question with which the Chair has nothing to do; it would be a question for the Speaker to decide. The Chair declines, therefore, to answer the question.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes one hundred and eleven, noes not counted.

So the motion to strike out the enacting clause was agreed to.

Mr. LETCHER. I now move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

So the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Grow reported that the Committee of the Whole House had had the Private Calendar generally under consideration, and particularly a bill (H. R. No. 104) to refund to Barclay & Livingston, and others, duties on certain goods destroyed by fire in the city of New York, on the 19th day of July, 1845, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with a recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. What is the question now?

The SPEAKER. Upon concurring in the report of the Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I move the previous question upon it.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. STANTON. I call for the yeas and nays upon that motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would ask if it is not competent for the gentleman from New York, [Mr. JOHN COCHRANE,] the chairman of the Committee on Commerce, to address the House before the question is taken on the motion to lay upon the table?

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I do not desire to do it. I have more regard for the time of the House than to do it. Let us have the vote.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 88, nays 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bockoc, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Caskey, Chapman, Horace F. Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Curry, Darnell, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Edmundson, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Foley, Garnett, Garrett, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Houston, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Leidy, Leiter, Letcher, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miller, Millson, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ritchie, Royce, Rutin, Sandidge, Seales, Henry M. Shaw, Sickles, Singleton, William Smith, Stallworth, Stanton, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Miles Taylor, Tompkins, Underwood, Watkins, White, Winslow, Woodson, and Zollicoffer—88.

NAYS—Messrs. Ahl, Andrews, Arnold, Bennett, Billinghurst, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Burns, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, John Cochrane, Comins, Covode, Cragin, James Craig, Curtis, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Dick, Dodd, Duffee, Fenton, Florence, Foster, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Hatch, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Knapp, Lovejoy, Maclay, McKibbin, Matteson, Morgan, Morrill, Oliver A. Morse, Olin, Palmer, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Robbins, Russell, Scott, Seward, Judson W. Sherman, Shorter, Spinner, Tappan, George Taylor, Trippe, Wade, Walbridge, Waldron, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Wood—70.

So the bill was laid upon the table.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. McQUEEN stated that his colleague, Mr. BONHAM, had been called home by sickness in his family.

Mr. CRAWFORD stated that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, was indisposed, and had left the House, and had paired off with him upon this bill. He (Mr. CRAWFORD) was opposed to the bill, and Mr. STEPHENS was in favor of it.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi, stated that he had paired off with Mr. BURROUGHS upon this bill; he being opposed to it, and Mr. BURROUGHS in favor of it.

Mr. McQUEEN stated that Messrs. MILES and MOORE, intending to vote upon different sides of this question, had paired off.

Mr. WRIGHT, of Tennessee, stated that he had paired off upon this bill with Mr. BISHOP, who had gone home in consequence of indisposition; he (Mr. WRIGHT) being opposed to the bill, and Mr. BISHOP in favor of it.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. LETCHER moved to reconsider the vote by which the House laid the bill on the table, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. MORGAN. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I ask for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BUFFINTON, and CRAIG of North Carolina, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported twenty-five in the affirmative, (not one fifth of those present.)

So the yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. BLISS demanded tellers upon the adjournment.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLAIR and SEWARD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 65, noes 84.

So the House refused to adjourn.

The question recurred upon the motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. MORGAN demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only twenty-three members having voted therefor.

The motion to lay on the table the motion to reconsider was then agreed to—ayes 95, noes 54.

And then, on motion of Mr. ZOLLICOFFER, (at a quarter past four o'clock,) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

MONDAY, May 17, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. B. H. NADAL, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday was read and approved.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received from the House of Representatives on Saturday, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred as indicated below:

A bill (No. 56) making an appropriation for the completion of the military road from Astoria to Salem, in Oregon Territory—to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

A bill (C. C. No. 65) for the relief of Benjamin L. McAtee and Isaac N. Eastham, of Louisville, Kentucky—to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (No. 222) for the relief of Elizabeth E. V. Field—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 231) for the relief of Nancy Serena—to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (No. 251) to authorize the claimants in right of John Huertas to enter certain lands in Florida—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

A bill (No. 318) recognizing the assignment of land warrant No. 35,956, issued to John Davis, as valid—to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (No. 336) for the relief of B. W. Palmer and others—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SEWARD presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of a law granting pensions to the soldiers of the Indian wars, from 1791 to 1795, and to the widows of those deceased; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, against any further special appropriations of public lands to the new States, until the old States shall have received their equitable proportion; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also presented resolutions of the Legislature of New York, in favor of a donation of public land for the construction of a ship canal around the falls of Niagara; which were ordered to lie on the table, and be printed.

He also presented resolutions adopted at a meeting of the Board of Trade at Oswego, New York, in favor of an appropriation for the repair of the pier in the vicinity of the light-house at that point; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. BRODERICK presented a memorial of citizens of California, remonstrating against the repeal of the law establishing the Light-House Board; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SHIELDS presented a memorial of the Legislature of Minnesota, praying the establishment of a mail route from La Crosse to Winnebago City, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Minnesota, praying the establishment of a mail route from St. Peter to Pajutazec, in that State; which were referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

Mr. POLK presented a petition of citizens of Missouri, praying that certain land offices in that State, about to be closed in pursuance of law, may be consolidated at St. Louis; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CLAY presented the petition of R. F. Blocker, E. J. Gurley, and J. F. Davis, licensed practitioners of law, in Texas, praying compensation for defending Captain Anderson, his officers and men, who were arrested and tried for an alleged violation of the laws of Texas, in executing an order of their superior officer; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and Militia.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That William Moss have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

On motion of Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas, it was Ordered, That leave be granted to withdraw from the files of the Senate, the petition and papers relative to the claim of Peay and Ayfille, to additional compensation for carrying the mail from Little Rock to Washington, Arkansas.

On motion of Mr. GWIN, it was Ordered, That Captain John Brown have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of California, relative to the Sebastian reservation, reported that no legislation is necessary, and that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 323) to confirm the sale of the reservation held by the Christian Indians, and to provide a permanent home for said Indians, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred sundry papers relating to Indian superintendencies in Oregon and Washington Territories, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MALLORY, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Santiago E. Arguello, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 370) for the relief of Guadalupe Estudillo de Arguello, widow of Santiago E. Arguello. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Virginia Waldron, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Pensions; which was agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the petition of Joseph Morrow, the memorial of Ebenezer Watson, the memorial of Lydia Weeks, and the petition of John Drout, reported adversely thereon, and that the committee be discharged from their further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the petition of Anna Addison and the memorial of Sarah A. Watson, reported that the committee be discharged from their further consideration, and that they lie on the table, inasmuch as the committee have already reported a general bill covering these cases.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Anthony W. Bayard, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 371) for the relief of Anthony W. Bayard. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. IVERSON, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of George J. Knight, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 374) for the relief of George J. Knight. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLARK, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred a report of the Court of Claims in the case of Robert Harrison; a report of the Court of Claims in the case of Letitia Humphreys; and a memorial of Letitia Humphreys, administratrix of Andrew Atkinson, deceased, Robert Harrison and others, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 373) declaratory of the acts for carrying into effect the ninth article of the treaty of 1819, between the United States and Spain. The bill was read, and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, their Clerk, announced that the Speaker had signed an enrolled bill (H. R. No. 642) to authorize the vestry of Washington parish to take and inclose certain parts of streets in Washington city, for the purpose of extending the Washington cemetery, and for other purposes; also a bill for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana; which thereupon received the signature of the Vice President.

BRITISH AGGRESSIONS.

Mr. SEWARD. I ask leave to offer the following resolution of instruction, and ask for its present consideration:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire whether any legislation is necessary to enable the President of the United States to protect American vessels against British aggression in the Gulf of Mexico or elsewhere, and to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. MASON. I observe that a call for information has been made on this subject by some Senator, I do not remember who, a day or two since, which has not yet been answered.

Mr. SEWARD. It was the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. BRIGHT.]

Mr. MASON. I have had no communication from the Department, and I think this resolution might as well go over.

Mr. SEWARD. It is merely an instruction to the committee to inquire whether anything is to be done. These aggressions are intolerable. Already eleven vessels have been fired upon in the Gulf of Mexico. The resolution is merely an instruction to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as the session is wearing away, to inquire if any legislation is necessary. We shall have an answer to-morrow, I understand, to the resolution of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MASON. We have no information on this subject; at least I have none except that which comes from the newspapers—not of a character, of course, for the Senate to act upon; and a call upon the committee to inquire whether any further legislation is necessary would seem to take it for granted, by implication at least, that a foundation had been laid. I agree with the Senator that, if the facts be true, they involve matters of very grave inquiry between the two countries; but I should be reluctant to assume any fact on a matter of such serious importance. I think the resolution had better lie over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the resolution will lie over.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLINGMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 369) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian department," approved July 30, 1854; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLINGMAN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 40) in favor of certain Cherokees; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. STUART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 375) to create two additional land districts in the Territory of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOOLITTLE asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 372) to settle the titles to certain lands belonging to the half-breed Kansas Indians in Kansas Territory; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. This bill is based on a printed copy of a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Interior to Colonel ORR, Speaker of the House of Representatives; and without committing myself to the provisions of the bill, I merely introduce it for the purpose of reference.

The bill was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN PHILADELPHIA.

Mr. BIGLER. The Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the joint resolution (No. 26) from the House of Representatives, authorizing the arrangement and disposal of public buildings in the city of Philadelphia, have instructed me to report a substitute for the whole resolution. As this proposition is entirely satisfactory, I hope the Senate will indulge me in its consideration and passage at this time. I hope there will be no objection to it. It will occupy but a moment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider at this time an amendment to a bill reported from the Post Office Committee. Is there objection?

Mr. BIGLER. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. YULEE. I hope my friend will excuse me for objecting until I get a little matter disposed of.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the report lies over.

PATENT OFFICE.

Mr. YULEE. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (No. 180) to which I invited the attention of the Senate last week. I think it can be disposed of before the hour of twelve, or very nearly so. It relates entirely to the internal administration of the Patent Office, and is essential to enable it to preserve its character as a self-sustaining department. I think there will be no objection whatever to the bill.

Mr. HUNTER. I shall not object if the Senator will promise to lay it down at twelve o'clock.

Mr. YULEE. Certainly.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 180) to amend the several acts now in force in relation to the Patent Office, was read a second time and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. YULEE. This bill was reported by the late Senator Evans from the Committee on Patents and the Patent Office, and there is great anxiety on the part of the Interior Department and the Commissioner of Patents that it should receive the action of Congress at this session. Unless it is disposed of during this week, it is not likely that the House of Representatives will be able to reach it. It is therefore very desirable that it should pass this week. The sections, I think, will explain themselves. I shall say nothing in respect to the bill, unless upon any particular point explanation may be desired.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill by sections. When he read the following clause of the fourth section:

"The salary of each examiner in chief shall be $2,750"—

Mr. YULEE said: I am directed by the committee to move to change that to $3,000, it being their opinion that officers of the character required by the duties imposed by this bill cannot be had at a salary of less than three thousand dollars. The House committee have reported $3,500, but the Senate committee think $3,000 sufficient.

Mr. HALE. I thought the bill was to be read through for information, and not for amendment.

Mr. YULEE. I was suggesting the amendments of the committee as the sections came up in their order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be more regular to read the bill through.

The Secretary continued and concluded the reading of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour has arrived to call up the special order, which it is the duty of the Chair to do.

Mr. YULEE. I think the bill can be disposed of in the next five minutes.

Mr. KING. No, sir.

Mr. HUNTER. We can take it up to-morrow.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first special order is the joint resolution for the presentation of a medal to Commodore Hiram Paulding.

Mr. HUNTER. I move to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the appropriation bill.

Mr. YULEE. As this bill is now in progress before the Senate, and has been read, and the attention of the Senate called to it, I think it probable that no objection can properly occur from Senators to any part of the bill, and I trust the Senate will permit it to pass.

Mr. COLLAMER. The bill which has just been read cannot be passed now.

Mr. YULEE. If that is the case, I have no objection to the postponement.

The bill was postponed until to-morrow.

DE VISSER AND VILLARUBIA.

The resolution offered by Mr. KING, on Saturday was taken up and amended, on his motion, so as to read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to communicate to the Senate what proceedings, if any, have been taken to investigate, by that Department, frauds upon the revenue by false invoices and false computations of quantities and values, by a partner of the commercial house of Simon De Visser & José Villarubia, of New Orleans; and whether there be any reason to impute complicity in the frauds to any officers of the customs.

The resolution, as modified, was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HUNTER. I renew my motion to postpone the prior orders.

Mr. YULEE. I desire to inquire if to-morrow morning, upon the expiration of the morning business, and during the morning hour, the bill in relation to the Patent Office will take precedence as a matter of course?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not, unless it be called up on motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. Is that a bargain? I should like to understand how it is.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I ask the Senator from Virginia to allow me to get rid of the little bill for the running of the Texas boundary. If there be one word of debate on it, I will agree to let it go over.

Mr. HUNTER. I would like to give way, but I must hold to my motion. I have got it before the Senate at last. We can take up the Senator's bill after disposing of the appropriation bill. I hope that will not take long.

Mr. DOUGLAS. If the bill which I want taken up gives rise to a word of debate, I shall not press it now.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia to postpone all prior orders and take up the appropriation bill.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 201) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government, for the year ending the 30th of June, 1859.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the amendment in relation to the reporters, offered by the Senator from Mississippi, [Mr. Brown,] upon which a point of order was raised.

Mr. BROWN. Since the question was up before, with a view of relieving the matter from any difficulty, I have had the concurrence of the Committee on the District of Columbia to offer the amendment. That gets clear of the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There can be no question then on the point of order, and the amendment is before the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have a suggestion to make on the point of order. I do not see how this proposition, in any shape or form, can come from the Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a very clear evasion of the rule of the Senate. They have not been charged with this business in any shape or form. I do not suppose any printing case or reporting case has ever been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. I take it, a committee cannot report an amendment to an appropriation bill unless they have been charged with the question by the Senate; otherwise, this rule operates exceedingly unjust to the public business; and all a man has to do, if he wants an appropriation, is to go around and hunt up some committee—I suppose the Committee on the Expenditures of some Department would do—and get them to say they are in favor of it.

I desire the judgment of the Chair and of the Senate whether or not this is a substantial compliance with the rule? I wish to put it to Senators: here is an appropriation concerning the increase of the pay of the Printer of the Senate, who is reporter and printer. Now, can any member of the Senate take any amendment he pleases, and run around to one and another member of a committee in this body and get them to present it, though they have never been charged with the business, and it is not germane to any business they have got? The Committee on the District of Columbia have been neither generally nor specially charged with this subject, it being a question of printing and reporting. I say this does not get over the rule; I submit that it does not. If so, the rule ought to be repealed. It is a naked, total violation of the principle, because the reason of the rule is that the Senate shall have some assurance from a committee, whose business it is to examine into the matter, that the appropriation proposed is a just and proper one. This is not within the general duties of the Committee on the District of Columbia, nor were they specially charged with it. If this can be entertained because a majority of that committee may be in favor of this appropriation, then whenever you can get a majority of any committee of this body in favor of any appropriation, it is a compliance with the rule. I want the Senate to determine the question, because if that is held to be the rule, there will be no longer any difficulty about anything; but if any three or four gentlemen of a committee are in favor of an appropriation, and say "yes, report it from our committee," any proposition may be entertained. I want it a general thing. I have here an amendment, which I could not get the Finance Committee to act upon; probably they are opposed to it. If they will not act upon it, can I go and get any other committee to do so? I believe we have twenty or thirty committees; and if we have a committee on the accounts of the Treasury Department, or any other, who will say,

"we are willing that you should report it from our committee," can they present it? I want the rule generally understood, so that all may know how to act in the Senate. I say this amendment is not in order, because this matter has not been submitted either by the general rules of the Senate, or by specific reference to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and is one for the Committee on Printing to examine into.

Mr. BROWN. I will ask the Secretary to read the first clause in the amendment in connection with the bill.

The Secretary read the amendment, which is after line one hundred and thirty-seven, to insert:

"To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress," &c.

Mr. BROWN. That will do. These are paid officers—at least Mr. Rives is a paid officer of the Government. This is but a proposition to increase his compensation, to increase his ability to discharge the duty for which he is employed. I held in the beginning that any member had the right upon his own motion, without consulting any committee, to propose to increase that compensation. It is not bringing a new subject before the Senate. The subject is here, and the proposition is simply to add to the compensation now paid. You might as well tell me if we were asked to vote the salary of any other officer of the Government, that it was not competent for me to move to increase the amount. I simply consulted the committee of which I am a member, to avoid the point that was raised the other day, not that I thought there was anything in it. The Senator from Virginia [Mr. Hunter] raised the question. I got the report of a committee in favor of the proposition, to avoid that difficulty. Notwithstanding that, I was satisfied as to my right. I did not press the matter further then. I do not think myself there is much in this matter of reporting from a committee; but if there be anything in it you have the report. I hold that I had the right to move the amendment, anyhow, of my own motion, without consulting anybody, and the Senate might vote it in or out as it chose.

Mr. BELL. I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that perhaps he would avoid any further discussion or difficulty by changing his motion, and moving to recommit the bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions to report this amendment.

Mr. BROWN. I think that will delay the bill unnecessarily. We might as well pass it as it is.

Mr. BELL. The object of this rule was decidedly to prevent surprise, and to prevent those abuses which sometimes occurred during the last days or nights of the session, when propositions were sprung on the body with no time to investigate them, and when there might be very few members attending to what was going on. The appropriation bills were overloaded, and occasionally, among the great number of items put on, were some which ought not to be presented. This rule was adopted for the purpose of securing some consideration, some attention to the object proposed to be provided for before such motions were allowed to be sprung on the body. Now, we have not only considered this matter, but we have debated it for half a day, at least; and the minds of the members are made up on the suggestions which have been presented on one side or the other, and we are prepared to vote. The rule requires a report from a standing or select committee, or an estimate from some Department of the Government. The estimates are sometimes made carelessly, and occasionally for objects the head of the Department does not approve. But here is a proposition that has been submitted to the body. There is no surprise in it; all the purposes of the rule are answered, and the Senate has a clear power to do it. They can recommit any bill, with instructions to report any amendment they think proper, if the majority agree to it. I suggest this alteration of the motion of the honorable Senator from Mississippi that we may avoid further discussion about the point; and if it is the will of the majority to vote in this amendment, the committee will report, if they are instructed to do so, forthwith. It will require no delay. That committee can assemble immediately, and report the bill back. That is done often so as to avoid technical objections under the regular rules of proceeding in Parliament or in Congress.

Mr. BROWN. I believe the Chair has not ruled yet whether the point of order taken by the Senator from Georgia was well taken or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has not decided the point of order.

Mr. BROWN. I want to hear the decision before I make any further motion.

Mr. HUNTER. In regard to this matter, I have to say that I hope the Senate will not recommit the appropriation bill to the Committee on Finance, with instructions. I have never known that to be done in the whole course of my experience here, which is not a short one. I hope they will not recommit and reopen the bill for the sake of the reporters here.

Mr. BELL. I ask the honorable Senator if it is not parliamentary, when the proposition is to limit it to a specific appropriation, and there is no delay?

Mr. HUNTER. I hope, if the bill be recommitment, it will be to some other committee, and not to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question immediately before the Senate is the point of order raised by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BELL. I only suggested a mode of avoiding the question of order, whether this is parliamentary and can be considered.

Mr. BROWN. Perhaps there is no question in it.

Mr. SHIELDS. I did not happen to be in my seat when this proposition was first presented to the Senate. If I understand it, however, there is an appropriation in the bill to compensate the reporters of this body to make up for some neglect in relation to their former compensation, to put them on a footing of equality with the reporters of the other branch. Now, what strikes me with astonishment, is that this body should have passed upon an appropriation for reporters in the other branch of the Capitol, and omitted their own reporters. I believe these reporters are the same who were here when I had the honor of a seat in this body formerly, and I must say that a more accurate and intelligent body of reporters I have never known or heard of. I agree with the honorable Senator from Mississippi, if he has stated the proposition correctly. I understand that there is an appropriation in the bill to compensate these gentlemen; that it comes from the proper committee; and here is a proposition to increase that appropriation so as to put them on a proper footing. If I am correct in this, the Senator from Mississippi is clearly right in his point.

Now, sir, I should like to know whether, when a committee reports in favor of an appropriation of any specific sum, any member in his place in the Senate cannot rise and move to diminish or increase that sum? Cannot he diminish the sum by a motion; can he not increase the sum by a motion? It is not necessary, in my opinion, that a committee should report upon that point. It would be a strange thing if a committee could bring forward here a recommendation for a certain sum, and no member in the body could be allowed to rise up and propose to diminish or increase that sum without having it referred back to the same committee. If I am correct about the case, I agree with the honorable Senator from Mississippi that he, in his place as a Senator, can by a mere motion either propose to increase or diminish this particular appropriation. I understand besides, that he has proposed an increase of this as the chairman of a committee; so that surely there can be no doubt about his right to move the amendment.

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator from Mississippi and the Senator from Minnesota both have argued a question not before the Senate. I understood the Senator from Mississippi to say that the question of order was relieved by the amendment being proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia. That is the point argued. It seems, though, that he has argued his original right, independent of any recommendation of a committee; and so has the Senator from Minnesota, who is under a mistake as to the facts. The facts are these: the House of Representatives made an appropriation to pay John C. Rives $4,000, to enable him to pay the House reporters $800 apiece. This amendment is to enable John C. Rives to pay the Senate reporters, not only, I believe, for this session, but for several years preceding.

Mr. BROWN. If the Senator will turn his attention to the clause I propose to amend, he will find it reads thus:

"For the usual additional compensation to the reporters of the Congressional Globe for the House."

Then we propose the usual additional compensation to the reporters of the Senate.

Mr. TOOMBS. I suppose that was done by their rules, as they have proposed the "usual additional compensation for the reporters of the House." They make none for the Senate; so that it is neither a question of increasing or diminishing the compensation of the reporters of the House, but it is to enable him to increase the compensation of the reporters of the Senate—not only for this present session and for the next session of Congress, but for some years past, if I correctly understand the amendment as proposed. I shall argue the question made, and not the one that the two gentlemen have argued. The rule of the Senate is, that—

"No amendment proposing additional appropriations shall be received to any appropriation bill, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law"

It is not that, because the law is simple. There are various laws—three or four in regard to the subject—which I have looked at, and they do not touch the matter.

—"or some act or resolution previously passed by the Senate during that session; or moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate; or in pursuance of an estimate from the head of some of the Departments; and no amendment shall be received whose object is to provide for a private claim, unless it be to carry out the provisions of an existing law or a treaty stipulation."

This is to carry out no law, for it is admitted that there is no law for this allowance. We have a contract with this person to pay him so much money for printing and reporting the debates of the Senate, which has been amended at various times. The appropriation in this bill is for that purpose; it is complete in itself. If it is proposed to raise the compensation, I submit it is not proper, unless it comes within one of the classes named in the rule. The Committee on the District of Columbia have nothing to do with the printing and reporting. No such question is referred to them by the rules; no such question has been submitted to them by the Senate; and I apprehend that no such question has been considered by them. I desire this body to determine, and for you, Mr. President, and the Senate, whether all that is necessary to make any increase of appropriation within this rule, is that a majority of any committee, without even having the question referred to them, without its being assigned as a portion of their duties by the standing orders and rules of the Senate, shall say they are in favor of it. I say it is a violation of the rule, a violation of the rights of every member here. All that is important about these rules is, that they shall be uniform, that they shall apply to all cases; and the only interest I feel in the matter is, that the rule of the Senate may be known in this case. I may have a use for it myself; and therefore I desire this body, through the Chair, to make a decision on it.

Mr. HUNTER. I agree with the Senator from Georgia that the objection is well taken; but, inasmuch as it is obvious the majority of the Senate wish the amendment to go on, I think it would be better, by general consent, to waive the point of order, and oppose it on its merits.

Mr. TOOMBS. We can decide it in a few moments; I do not wish to protract the discussion.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am obliged to the Senator from Georgia for giving me the facts; and I take the proposition as he states it. The rule prohibits an amendment proposing an additional appropriation. This is not an additional appropriation, as I understand. The money is to be paid by John C. Rives. The House of Representatives very properly confined themselves to their own reporters, leaving it to the Senate to take care of theirs. It is the same proposition, the same appropriation to the same individuals, for the same object—paying the reporters of Congress. I can see no difficulty whatever.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question of order raised involves the reception of the amendment upon two points. The Chair does not see how he can escape a decision on the two points; for, if on either point he thinks the amendment in order, it would have to come in. Any member of the Senate may move any amendment he chooses to any bill, except so far as he is prohibited by the limitations of this rule. The Chair does not think a motion by an individual member to amend a general appropriation bill, by proposing additional appropriations, is in order, unless it be made to carry out the provisions of some existing law, or some act or resolution of the Senate previously passed during that session. The Chair has seen no existing law to carry out the provisions of which this amendment is necessary; and, therefore, if moved by an individual member of the Senate, he is compelled to decide it out of order under this rule. But the Senator from Mississippi moves the amendment by the direction of one of the standing committees of the body. It is not a subject which has been referred to that committee; but it is an amendment "moved by a standing committee" of this body, and the Chair considers himself bound by the language of the rule; because, except for the limitation imposed by the rule, any member of any committee would have a right to move any amendment. The language is broad and comprehensive; and the Chair does not feel authorized to say that he can reject an amendment which is moved by order of a standing committee because the subject has not been referred to that committee.

Mr. MASON. I should be very reluctant to let the decision pass as part of the judgment of the Senate; but I do not well see how to get at it. If I understand correctly what fell from the Chair, this subject has not been committed to the Committee on the District of Columbia. Now, a committee, by its very derivation, its very nature, is a portion of the members of the Senate, who can act only upon subjects committed to them by the Senate. I do not see how they can act on a subject not committed to them. The constitution of the body renders it necessary, it seems to me, that any subject which comes from them as a committee, technically so called, and which brings with it any peculiar force or character because it comes from a committee, must be a subject committed to them as a committee. I understand the Chair to consider that, under the general terms of the rule, he regards an amendment in order, no matter from what committee it comes. I do not see how otherwise to test the sense of the Senate but by an appeal from the decision of the Chair. I propose to take the sense of the Senate on its being within the scope of the authority of a committee to report with any judgment, or to act upon any subject not previously committed to them.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope my colleague will not appeal. Let us pass this over. It is evidently the desire of the Senate to entertain the subject. I ask, sir, what would be the effect of a motion to lay the appeal on the table?

Mr. MASON. I withdraw the appeal. I only wanted the matter decided.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I shall detain the Senate but a single moment. The decision of the Chair is manifestly right under this rule—

Several SENATORS. The appeal is withdrawn.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am aware of that; but I wish to say a word in regard to it. I am astonished at the point which has been made. This is the first time I have ever risen in the Senate to say a word about a question of order; but since I have been here, I have known amendments to the appropriation bills to come, time and again, from the standing committees of the Senate just in this way; and if the rule does not mean that, it does not mean anything at all. Can it be possible that the meaning of the rule is, that no committee, except the one having the particular subject in charge, can offer an amendment? If it does, the majority of the Senate is tied up; and if the committee in charge do not think proper to report an amendment, it cannot be passed upon at all. Any individual Senator would have a right to offer an amendment at any time without this rule; but, in order to restrict that right upon the appropriation bills, the Senate has adopted a rule providing that an amendment proposing additional appropriations shall not be in order unless it comes from a standing committee. Now, they wish to interpolate into the rule "unless it comes from the standing committee to whom the subject has been referred." I do not wish to argue the point; but I was so utterly surprised at the objection which has been made that I could not help saying this much.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. TOOMBS. I hope that the amendment will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which is, after line one hundred and thirty-seven, to insert:

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the Senate, the usual extra compensation for the third session of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, $800 each—$3,200.

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the first session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, $800 each—$3,200.

To enable John C. Rives to pay to the reporters of the Senate the usual extra compensation for the second session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, $800 each—$3,200.

Mr. BROWN. I desire to say, in a word, that the first clause covers the appropriation to correspond with one paid to the reporters of the House for the last session of Congress, and to which we gave our assent. We did it under some sort of compulsion, it is true, but still we did it. Then this bill provides for paying the House reporters for the present session, and for the next session, and I propose simply to put ours on the same footing with those of the House. If the two Houses think it proper to strike it all out together, let it go; but I protest against any partiality in a matter of this sort. That is all I have to say in reference to it.

Mr. PUGH. I wish to suggest an amendment to this proposition. The House clause says nothing about Mr. Rives at all. They pay the money to their reporters directly, and if this money is to go to the reporters, let us pay it to them out of the Treasury at once. Why do we go round and pay it to Mr. Rives first? Why do you say he shall pay the reporters? I move to strike out the words "to enable John C. Rives."

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think the Senator is mistaken. I believe the amendment is in the same language as the original clause in the bill.

Mr. PUGH. Let the Secretary read the House section.

Mr. BROWN. The Senator will allow me to say a word before it is read. The language is thus placed because our contract is with Mr. Rives, and not with the reporters. We employ him to have the reporting done; and, therefore, to enable him to pay these men a larger sum, the amendment is offered as it is.

Mr. PUGH. Let the Secretary read that paragraph in the bill, and then I will reply to the Senator.

The Secretary read as follows:

"For the usual additional compensation to the reporters for the Congressional Globe for reporting the proceedings of the House of Representatives, for the next regular session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, $800 to each reporter, $4,000."

Mr. PUGH. It will be observed that the House of Representatives pay the money to the reporters themselves. We are not paying this money to the contractor, because we have no contract to pay it to him. It is an additional sum, and the argument in favor of it is, that it is to compensate the reporters for extra services. Then, pay it to them directly; do not have this form of carrying it through Mr. Rives's pocket—not that I doubt he will pay it to them, but the House of Representatives have made their appropriation directly, and I think it is our duty to appropriate money directly. If the object be to pay Mr. Rives, let him put it in his pocket, and do not put any conditions on him. If the object is to pay the reporters, pay them directly. I, therefore, move to amend the amendment by striking out the words "to enable John C. Rives" in each of the three clauses.

Mr. TOOMBS. The rule being founded on the supposition that, when a committee report a proposition authorizing additional appropriations of the public money, they are prepared to give the Senate the necessary information on the subject, I would respectfully ask the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to give us the data on which he supposes John C. Rives needs $4,000 more to enable him to pay these reporters. To get at that fact, I ask the Senator how much is now paid for reporting and publishing the debates of the Senate, and what is the evidence on which the committee supposed that that was insufficient to enable him to pay the reporters?

Mr. BROWN. I have made no calculation as to the precise amount Mr. Rives gets, and my only means of ascertaining his profits is what he says himself. I know that the cost of reporting, of printing, and of binding, must necessarily be very heavy; but while you pay a great deal of money, you get in return a great many books. How valuable they are, it is not for me to say. They contain what members of Congress think proper to say and do. This money is not intended for Mr. Rives. If he may have private fortune enough to pay these men $10,000 a year, he does not do it. He has a contract with them, it is true. Their compensation is, in my opinion, not sufficient, because we all know they are better reporters than those in the other House are. My reason for inserting the words, "to enable John C. Rives to pay," was to meet an objection made by the Senator from Georgia himself, that we had no contract with these people; that we had no contract with Mr. Sutton, the chief of the reporting corps, or with any of his subordinates, but that our contract was with Mr. Rives. Believing the compensation that they get to be too small, I propose to increase it in this way.

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

NEW SERIES.....No. 137.

Mr. MASON. Allow me to say to the Senator that there is no contract with Rives whatever—nothing but a mere resolution of the Senate providing for auditing and settling his accounts for printing in the Daily Globe the reports of our proceedings, at the rate of $7 50 a column.

Mr. TOOMBS. The answer of the Senator from Mississippi is just what I supposed it would be. I supposed the labors of his committee had been just such as he has stated. He says he knows nothing about it, except that he understands John C. Rives says the pay is insufficient. I do not know that Mr. Rives has said so. I do not think Mr. Rives has ever come to the Senate, saying so. I have never seen such a memorial from him. Though he is a ready, and rather profuse, writer, I have never seen anything in his newspaper, saying that he was unable, at his present compensation to pay his reporters. I do not think he pretends so. Has he sent a memorial to that committee?

Mr. BROWN. No, sir.

Mr. TOOMBS. How does the Senator get at it? How does he know that this is necessary? Does he undertake to declare that Mr. Rives says he does not get enough, under his contract, to pay them? Does the Senator tell the Senate that this is the representation of John C. Rives, verbal or written?

Mr. BROWN. I have said distinctly that John C. Rives has not said one word to me about it, and I do not believe he cares a sixpence about it, one way or the other. I put in the words, "to enable John C. Rives," for the precise reason that the Senator objected that our arrangement was with Mr. Rives, and therefore it was necessary to insert his name.

Mr. TOOMBS. The amount of it is, then, that the Senator introduces an evasion to meet an objection; a legal and valid objection is to be got around by an evasion. I propose to supply the deficiency in the labors of this committee. I am quite satisfied they paid no attention to the subject, and I will show how this thing has been done for a number of years. When this contract was first made, it was, I think, with three newspapers—I speak from memory only—the Union, Globe, and Intelligencer, at $7 50 a column for reporting and printing the proceedings of the Senate. They threw up because they said the pay was inadequate, and probably it was.

Mr. SEWARD. Two of them.

Mr. TOOMBS. Two of them threw up. Then that was a very good reason why you should "enable" Mr. Rives to pay his reporters; that was a very good reason for these "usual" votes. It being apparent that two of the large printing establishments here threw up the job on account of the inadequacy of the pay, there was a very good justification for any gentleman in the Senate voting an increased allowance. Congress remedied that. How? The members of the Senate were then allowed each twelve copies of the book, and the members of the House each got twenty-four copies. Mr. Rives then came forward with his petition asking us to take ninety-three copies instead of twelve. That was to enable him to carry out the contract for reporting and printing. We did it, and in that way added $70,000 to the amount of the contract. That was a pretty good enabling act—an addition of $70,000 to a $30,000 contract. Still that was not enough; he came forward again in a year or two more. From his representations it seems he was a very patriotic man, working for the honor of the public, and we gave him another addition.

Mr. MASON. Will the Senator please restate what he has just said about $70,000.

Mr. TOOMBS. At that time we were taking twelve copies of the Congressional Globe for each Senator; but it was represented to us that this was a very hard contract, and that he could not fulfill it unless the Senate would take a number equal to that taken by the House of Representatives, which, I think, ran it up to ninety-three copies for each Senator. At all events, that one increase involved an additional expense of $72,651.

Mr. MASON. Is that an annual appropriation?

Mr. TOOMBS. I am not certain whether it is an annual appropriation or for the Congress. Two years ago a proposition was put on the appropriation bill, on the motion of the Senator from Mississippi, who seems to have taken charge of these matters, to which I wish to call attention. It did not come through the Printing Committee; but, inasmuch as in 1856 we talked very much on Kansas—that interesting subject swelling out the book to a large size—the Senator from Mississippi offered a proposition which I will read. The provision was to give one cent upon every five pages in excess of three thousand pages for the long session, and one cent in excess of one thousand five hundred pages for the short session. That, it was thought, would "enable" him fully. That little proposition came in very quietly. It had been considered by the same committee, I presume—the Committee on the District of Columbia—and at the time I was under the impression that it would amount to a few hundred dollars. It was in these words:

"Sec. 16. And be it further enacted, That there shall be paid to John C. Rives, by the Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives, out of the contingent funds of the two Houses, according to the number of copies of the Congressional Globe and Appendix taken by each, one cent for every five pages of that work exceeding three thousand pages for a long session,"—

This was made perpetual, and we are acting under it now.

"or fifteen hundred for a short session, including the indexes and the laws of the United States, commencing with this session."

I felt some curiosity to know what was paid under that simple, modest proposition, and I went to the disbursing officer of this body and ascertained that under it he paid $10,263 48; and the House of Representatives, under the same clause, paid $11,174 69, for the last Congress—making above twenty thousand dollars on this one-cent business, when the original contract was $30,000. Here was an increase of eighty per cent. on the original arrangement, to say nothing of the increased number of volumes the Senate took.

Then I would ask Senators when are you ever going to "enable him"? What will be the point that will "enable" him? Mr. Rives is not complaining in this matter, that I know of. I have never heard of a single word from him on this point.

Now, sir, I hold in my hand a paper made out at the Treasury Department, showing the amounts appropriated for the Globe during the last Congress, and it reaches the large sum of $203,822 23 for reporting and printing and furnishing the Globe to members of Congress. Of this sum $199,073 43 has been paid out of the Treasury, to say nothing of the $10,000 paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate to which I have alluded, making altogether $210,000. What point will "enable" him to pay enough? Will $50,000 more? Will $100,000 more? Will half a million more be sufficient? We are asked to vote this money on the report of a committee who do not know anything about what he is paid, or how he is paid, or whether he is already sufficiently "enabled" or not. We are asked now to give ten or twelve thousand dollars on the face of these enabling acts, beginning with a small, modest appropriation of about thirty thousand dollars for both Houses—$10,000 for the Senate, and $20,000 for the House. We have gone on adding various items, and in the single item of one cent for five pages, we have given him $21,000. I suppose the labors of the Committee on the District of Columbia did not permit them to look into this matter; and having taken a little trouble to look into it, I will state the appropriations as I have them from the Treasury Department:

"For Congressional Globe, and binding the same, (Laws first session Thirty-Fourth Congress, page 103,) Senate, $73,651.

"Twenty-four copies of Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member of the Thirty-Fourth Congress, (page 104,) House, $31,704.

"Binding Congressional Globe, twenty-four copies, (same page,) $16,528 30."

I believe either my honorable friend from Mississippi or the Printing Committee brought in the binding job on the idea that we were to get the books better bound by having Mr. Rives to do it. That was another little enabling act. Whether that allows too much for binding or not, I really do not know, for I have not been charged with that subject.

"Twenty-four copies of Congressional Globe and Appendix for each member and Delegate of second session of Thirty-Fourth Congress, (same page,) House, $17,352.

"Binding ditto, $8,328 75.

"Reporting and publishing proceedings of House of Representatives, (page 104,) $18,706 87.

"Ditto Senate, (page 103,) $10,400."

The last two items are the amount of the original contract—$30,800—for the reporting for the two Houses. To that contract we have added, by this little one-cent business alone, over twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. COLLAMER. I would inquire how much Mr. Rives pays the reporters?

Mr. TOOMBS. I do not know. It is none of my business to know that, any more than it is to inquire what those persons who contract to build the Post Office extension here pay their laborers. If you mean to pay his reporters because he does not pay them enough, deduct it from what you give him; or employ the reporters yourselves, and give them enough. I do not like this adding of additional compensation to Mr. Rives every year on the ground that what he gets for reporting and printing is inadequate. You have added to the original contract by hundreds of thousands of dollars, and still you propose to "enable" him to-day. These votes might have been wise five years ago, or three years ago, or two years ago; but we have got to such a point now that I want to know where this "enabling" business is to stop.

"One hundred copies Congressional Globe and binding the same, for the House library, (page 104,) $1,941.

"Congressional Globe and binding the same, in act to supply deficiencies for the year ending 30th June, 1857, (page 240,) $3,326 62.

"To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay John C. Rives the additional compensation for the Congressional Globe and Appendix, provided in sixteenth section, act March 3, 1857, (page 241,) $11,174 69.

"To enable John C. Rives to pay reporters, (same page,) $4,000."

The aggregate, as I have said, is $203,822 23; and adding the $10,263 paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate for one cent for five pages, you have a total of $214,000. This is now paid on a contract that amounted originally to only $30,000. Is not $214,000 enough? If he is not able to pay the reporters let us refer the matter to the Printing Committee, and see how much further we shall be asked to go. In the beginning it was an experiment; and when it was an experiment I was willing enough to vote enough to go on with it. I think we have gone quite far enough. I believe I voted for the additional books, on the ground that the committee who had investigated the subject said it was necessary in order to have the work done. My impression is, that I voted for the amendment moved by the Senator from Mississippi, to give one cent on five pages, supposing that it would amount to some hundreds, or perhaps a few thousand dollars; but it turns out to be $21,000—seventy or eighty per cent. on the entire amount of the original contract.

I am tired of "enabling" him. Senators, do you not think it is time to get tired of enabling him to pay the reporters? Still we are told it takes $4,000. Is $4,000 necessary to enable him to do justice to these reporters, or does he persistently refuse to give them a fair compensation, no matter what you allow him? If so, the Senate ought to take $4 50 a column out of what they pay him, and pay the reporters out of what we now allow him. It is his duty, and his contract, to pay them; and I show, as a reason why these additional compensations ought to stop, that we have been adding to his pay, and gave him $21,000 under the sixteenth section of one appropriation bill, at the last Congress. No matter how much you give him, you have to listen to these complaints. I believe that he does not make them now; nobody does, that I know of, but the Senator from Mississippi. Rives does not even pretend that he has not got enough; he does not pretend that he is not able to pay his own workmen. He does not come here to you with any story of beggary. He does not present any memorial or petition, asking you for a dime to enable him to carry out his contract; and yet you propose to vote money to enable him to carry out the contract; and the Senator from Mississippi says this is done to meet my objection. It does not meet my objection.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. Will the Senator allow me one word here?

Mr. TOOMBS. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I have sat patiently here, listening to the Senator's remarks; but I think he is not correct in his argument at all. Mr. Rives himself, as the Senator has asserted, has not asked to be enabled to pay this money.

Mr. TOOMBS. I so affirmed.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. I understand that he has not asked, and does not ask, anything of the kind. The whole of the Senator's argument seems to be directed to the point that you are enabling him to do something, when he does not ask it. The truth is, that you are not proposing to pay him anything at all, but you are proposing to pay this money to the reporters here. It is their matter; it is not the matter of the publisher of the Globe.

Mr. TOOMBS. I have repeated that again and again. I have used the very words of the Senator himself.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. It is a matter entirely of the reporters.

Mr. TOOMBS. So I have repeated again and again. I say Rives does not ask you to pay him a dollar for this purpose. The mover of the proposition admits that he has not even told him so out of doors; and yet you still insist on putting on your statute-book that you intend to pay him this money to enable him to pay his reporters. That is what I object to. The motion of the Senator from Mississippi, not mine, is to "enable" him. I object to any such words, as Mr. Rives himself does not ask for any enabling act at all. That is one of my objections to the amendment, and I have repeated it again and again. I said Mr. Rives was not to blame in this matter; for he does not come here with any story of inability to discharge his contract to the fullest extent; but a Senator offers a proposition of this kind, without knowing anything of the subject, without knowing even how much he gets, or whether this appropriation is necessary or not to enable Rives to pay his reporters. It seems to me rather curious. You are buckling fortune on his back, and I suppose he will take it and bear it like a philosopher. Most people would do so, and he would be very wrong if he did not do it. But he has not asked you for it.

It is said that this is a question for the reporters. The argument I have made is, that we have nothing to do with Rives's reporters. They may be under paid or over paid, for aught I know. I do not know what is proper wages for them. Nor do I know what his foreman gets, what his printers get, what his paper man gets. I am not competent to judge whether or not he pays his reporters enough. I leave that question to be settled between him and his reporters. If they do not get enough, I suppose they will go where they will do better. That is the general law of labor in this country. If they do not get as much as their labor is worth, I suppose they will quit the business; or, if they do not, I think they are very foolish people.

I say, then, the amendment of the Senator from Ohio is a good one. If you mean to pay the workmen of your contractor whom you employ to do this work, do it directly. You pay him over two hundred and ten thousand dollars; and without any complaint on his part that he does not get enough money, without any investigation as to whether it is sufficient, you insist on standing between him and his employees, and saying he does not pay these people enough. I have not examined that question. We do not know whether he pays them enough. We are called upon to vote that Mr. Rives does not pay his men enough. I say that is not our business; we have nothing to do with it; I know nothing about it. I have given you the official account from the Treasury and our own officer. If it is not enough, let the matter be examined into by the Committee on Printing. If he has a hard contract, if he has one which cannot be carried on without loss, let the Senate, on being satisfied of that fact, increase the price. That is the proper way. I acknowledge that many propositions connected with this work I voted for in the beginning on the representations of my friends from Alabama and Arkansas on the Printing Committee; but now I have no evidence. This proposition comes from the Committee on the District of Columbia, who have not looked into it, and know nothing about it. I must be excused for not voting to expend public money in this way.

Mr. STUART. I was very much in hopes this morning that we should be able to dispose of this bill in a few minutes, but the discussion has run out to a great length. I am not prepared to say that I am better informed on this subject than any other Senator, but I will state in a very few words what I understand to be the facts. So far as the appropriations mentioned by the Senator from Georgia are concerned, I apprehend it will be found that they have nothing to do with the subject of reporting considered by itself. They are appropriations that are increased because we have increased the purchases of the Congressional Globe we have made of Mr. Rives. If we think the Senate and Congress are taking a greater number of those Globes than ought to be taken, we have only to stop it; it does not affect the compensation of the reporters at all, as I understand $7 50 per column is paid for reporting and publishing the debates; and of that sum $3 is retained for the expense of publishing, and that will barely pay—

Mr. TOOMBS. The Senator will allow me to ask what becomes of the one cent for five pages of excess over three thousand pages? Is not that for reporting and publishing?

Mr. STUART. I was going to say that $4 50 is paid to the reporters. I have taken some pains to inquire; and I understand that in the long session this will amount to about sixteen or eighteen hundred dollars pay to each of the reporters for the necessary number; and they have to live the entire year. During the short session of course it is less; they still have to remain here, and pay their expenses for the entire year. That is the amount of their pay, and the two Houses have voted this additional sum to the reporters for the purpose of giving them a fair compensation. Therefore, it reduces itself to this: whether the Senate is willing to pay a fair and reasonable compensation to the reporters. I am willing to have these words "to enable" stricken out. I suggested it to the honorable chairman of the committee when the bill came in from the House, which we had a controversy about here a few weeks ago. That bill contained this same language, and I suggested to the chairman that, in my opinion, that was a very awkward way, and that it was placing a responsibility upon Mr. Rives which, if I were in his place, I would not take. We ought to pay directly to the individuals; and we ought not to appoint an agent to make the payments.

But I would say to the Senator from Georgia that this is not the first time that language has been used. It has been the general language in both Houses, and it has been brought in as a custom—I think it is a bad one. I agree with him, and with the Senator from Ohio, that the payments should be made directly. It is an extra compensation to these reporters, and it does not concern Mr. Rives at all. If you refuse it, you take nothing from him; if you grant it, you add nothing to his estate. It is a simple payment to these reporters—nothing more nor less; and the language will be better with these words stricken out.

The question reduces itself to this: is the Senate prepared to retain the system that it has of reporting, and retain these reporters, or is it disposed to abandon them? I think the experience of the Senate and the country answers that question. We have tried various projects of reporting the debates of the Senate. They have all failed, until we tried this. It is agreed, I believe, by all Senators, that the system is very complete, that the reporters are very competent and exceedingly accurate, and that the system is satisfactory to the Senate. The amount of the printing, we all know, is increased by the amount of the talking. The Senator from Georgia said, the other day, that he did not consider the books worth anything. If that is true, then we talk nonsense, and the remedy is with ourselves.

Now, sir, a word or two in regard to what fell from the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. MASON] the other day. I am not going into an extended argument; I have been disposed for three or four days to vote, but some things have been said to which I cannot agree. I cannot agree that a single Senator, by himself, has any authority over this corps of reporters. I cannot agree with the arguments of the Senator from Virginia, that he or any other Senator has a right to change his remarks as he pleases, and that it is simply a question between him and the other Senators who are debating with him. The Senate pays for its reports—the language is for the reporting of its debates—and the Senate has a right, and the country has a right, to have the debates as they are made. It is a matter of comity and a matter of courtesy how far we shall be permitted to take away from the reporters the notes and correct them. My experience has been that they have been courteous indeed, and have extended every privilege that a Senator could desire. That has been my experience; I have seen the very evils that are complained of in the circular of Mr. Rives. I have seen in debates I have had myself with Senators upon this floor, that Senators corrected their own remarks so that I seemed to be talking at nothing. That has occurred to me, and it has occurred to other honorable Senators on this floor, so that you are made to appear, in the language of his circular, perfectly ridiculous, worse than Quixotic. There can be no such authority, no such right, on the part of an individual Senator.

This engagement is to print the debates. They are his when they fall from the Senator's lips, and his reporters put them on paper, and not ours. It is a simple matter of comity and courtesy how far we may change them, and how far we may have the manuscript in order to change them, but there has been no difficulty, and there will be no difficulty, I apprehend, on that subject. I believe—I am fully convinced—that the remedy for these excessive appropriations, if they be excessive, does not lie in this direction. The complaint is simply that we are taking too many of the Congressional Globes, if it is an objection at all, and not that we are paying anything more than a fair compensation for reporting, with this extra pay included. That is my belief about it.

I also believe that the system of publishing these reports in a daily paper is the only one that is of any especial immediate value. There is a historical value in them when carried into the Congressional Globe; but their current value depends upon their prompt publication in a daily paper; and, as was said the other day by the honorable Senator from Tennessee, [Mr. BELL,] it would be worse than useless to undertake to publish these debates in a political paper, and let the editor pervert your remarks every day in an editorial article. This is a daily paper, and it is strictly and almost exclusively a report of your debates. There is scarcely anything else in it. I think the honorable Senator from Georgia was somewhat mistaken in regard to its circulation and its value. The experience in the section of the country from which I come is the reverse of that. The paper is in great demand; it is largely subscribed for and extensively read; and if there is any object in the country's being informed generally of the proceedings in Congress, that is the most prompt and the most reliable mode in which to give it.

The question now is—and this is all I desire to say—will the Senate pay a fair compensation to the gentlemen now in their employ? The present compensation pays them about what I have stated, and that is all. I consider it entirely inadequate; and therefore I am perfectly willing to vote the additional compensation.

Mr. PUGH. In objecting to this amendment, I make no complaint of Mr. Rives, and none of the reporters. That is not my objection at all. I am under many obligations to the reporters, very many, which I shall always feel proud to express here and elsewhere. If it is the business of the Government to pay the reporters, let us either make them public officers by act of Congress, or make them officers of the Senate, give them salaries, and then they are ours; and then pay Mr. Rives for publishing the reports in his paper, if you choose. Then we know what we are about. But the question has been propounded four or five times, how much do they get? what is their compensation? This is a proposition for extra compensation. The Senator from Michigan tells us at last, after two days' debate, that he is of the impression that their pay amounts to sixteen or eighteen hundred dollars for the long session.

Mr. STUART. I did not say it was my impression. It is a fact I learned on an inquiry which I made a year ago, and made again a week ago. I did not state it here before, because I was disposed to have a vote on this question, and did not wish to consume time in speaking. I thought any other time would do to state it if it were necessary to be stated.

Mr. PUGH. Where did the Senator obtain his information?

Mr. STUART. From the reporters and Mr. Rives. Of course they are the only individuals who could tell me.

Mr. PUGH. Then the objection of my friend from Georgia still prevails; it is not information that is given to us through any committee or any officer of the Government. I say again, if this system of reporting is to be continued, I think it would be right for us to separate the reporting from the publishing. Make these gentlemen by act of Congress officers of the Government, or by resolution employes of the two Houses, and fix their compensation. Then we shall know what it is, and if it is too little they can raise it; if too large, reduce it.

What I object to is the indirection of the system. As long as the public expenditures are all expressed in plain language, so that we know what we are about, and based upon estimates, we know where we can retrench. Then, when our revenues shall fall short, as they have fallen short, we know where to apply the knife of retrenchment. But what do we know here? Here is an amendment, proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to enable John C. Rives to pay extra compensation; and yet Senators tell us that John C. Rives is a mere stalking horse in the business, a regular John Doe or Richard Roe, who has nothing to do with it. Then why not put it in plain language? What is it you mean to do? You mean to add to the salary of the reporters. Very good. Now, fix their salary by law in this bill, or in some shape; and if $1,600 is not enough, be it so. If $2,000 is required, or $3,000, or $4,000, put it in the bill, and let the country know what you are expending. Now the country knows nothing about it. It is this hiding of public expenditures under all the shifts and ingenuities of language, that I complain of. I do not complain of the payment of the money if it is necessary to carry on the system, and Congress desires to continue the system; but I do complain of hiding expenditures from the public by using all these phrases; and, as a step towards what I desire, I insist on my amendment, that this shall be a direct appropriation to pay the reporters, and leave Mr. Rives out of the business.

Mr. DAVIS. I concur in much that has been said by the Senator from Ohio. I greatly prefer that this matter should be done directly. I should have preferred to have the question of order, which was pending when this bill was last considered, decided this morning, as to the right of an individual Senator to offer the amendment on his own responsibility. I go further: I would much prefer that the reporters should be separated entirely from any printing establishment; that the Senate should have its own corps of reporters, responsible to the body. It is somewhat humiliating, I think, that we should contend that our debates are so poor that it is necessary to pay somebody to print them. If they are not worth printing, file them away in manuscript. If they cannot be printed and circulated for the private benefit of the printer, I prefer to have them filed away in manuscript. One case occurred to me, in the course of my experience in this body, where it was necessary, after the lapse of years, to refer to the notes taken by the reporter as the only means of ascertaining what was actually said. So great an evil did I find to result from the constant habit of Senators changing what they said in debate, that I at one time introduced a resolution here to prevent changes in the report until it should at least have been published in the morning Globe, and then a Senator might, if he pleased, change his remarks for the Congressional Globe; but he should at least stand first on the record as understood by others, and as he had been answered.

I will say, since I am up, that I do not think it fair to allow the question to pass from us with the unlimited commendation bestowed upon the reports of the Senate. I think the whole system wrong. I think there is an inherent defect in the attempt to report verbatim everything that is said on the most unimportant subjects; neither do I believe it to be possible, with the small corps of reporters you have here now, to report exactly what falls from Senators on the most important questions under debate. Very recently I was asked the question, what I had meant by one sentence? It was nonsense as it was published, and this arose simply from the fact that the word "nearly" had been substituted for "merely"—an error which the phonographic method would almost certainly introduce on many occasions. With a larger corps of men, as intelligent as I believe your reporters to be, they could revise their reports; they could make sense; and their own knowledge, their perception of what must have been said, would enable them to reduce those characters which represent sounds nearly alike to the words which ought to have been employed, and which probably were employed. But attempting, as we do, to send out a report of a vast amount of debate with so small a corps of reporters as are maintained here, it is impossible that it should be anything else than a mere transcript of the phonographic characters.

I had thought that I should vote for this amendment, but I am now inclined to think otherwise. I will first vote for the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to make it as direct as possible, and then vote to strike out the whole of the additional compensation, with a view to a change in the system entirely—to have the reporters for the House and the reporters for the Senate paid by appropriations made by the body, and then if you choose to encourage printing, very well; though I really believe that if the reports were reduced to those subjects which are of importance to posterity and important to the country to-day, any printer would gladly get possession of your reports if you would give them to him for nothing, and make money by printing them.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio to the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi. It is to strike out the words "to enable John C. Rives," at the commencement of each clause.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to; and the question recurred on the amendment of Mr. Brown.

Mr. TOOMBS. I will simply ask some member of the Senate to tell me what the present compensation is, and what evidence we have that it is not enough? I see that sometimes the debates amount to twenty-five, thirty, and even forty columns a day, and we are told the pay for reporting is $4 50 a column. The Senate has not a particle of official information on this point, whatever there may be in the shape of hearsay from parties outside. It seems to me the matter ought to be referred to our Printing Committee, who properly have charge of all these questions, if it is our business to inquire into it, and if the Senate once determine that they will inquire into what their contractor pays his laborers. If we are going to pay them additional compensation, I should suppose it would rather be an important piece of information to know what is paid them now, so as to see whether more is necessary.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The subject has never been referred to the Printing Committee.

Mr. TOOMBS. I know it has not been, and I want it referred.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. That committee have made no estimate on the subject, but it is very easy for gentlemen to obtain this information. The amount paid is $4 50 a column, and it is easy enough to ascertain the average number of columns published daily. I suppose the Globe containing the last day's proceedings will be laid on our tables presently, and we shall see how many columns it contains. All we have to do is to multiply the number of columns of each day's proceedings by $4 50, to ascertain the compensation. I do not know what it is. I understand there are sometimes fifteen, sometimes twenty-five, sometimes thirty columns a day; what the average is I have no idea. So far as I can see, it must come to upwards of a hundred dollars a day for both Houses. How much expenditure it takes upon the part of the reporters in order to complete their reports, I do not know. The subject has never been referred to the committee to investigate, and therefore I am unable to answer.

Mr. TOOMBS. I asked the question because I really desire information. I have but one piece of information on this point, and that has been laid on my table, as I suppose, by parties interested, since I made my first observations this morning. It is, "that there are now four of the principal reporters of the Union corps, who were employed from 1848 to 1854, who are ready, at twenty-four hours' notice, to engage to furnish full and accurate reports of the debates and proceedings of the Senate, at the present rate of compensation given by Mr. Rives, without expecting any gratuity from the Senate." This is signed by "William Henry Burr, first assistant of the Union corps from 1848 to 1854, on behalf of his associates." It seems that persons who have been engaged in this same business heretofore are willing to do it at the present compensation. I wanted to know whether the present compensation was too much or too little. Of course, I would not pay these reporters anyhow, because I have engaged John C. Rives to pay them. If I did pay any sum, I would deduct it from what is allowed him for reporting. I would give these men a fair compensation if I employed them. You employ Rives, and you not only give him $7 50 a column, but one cent for five pages, and additional compensations of various kinds; and now, without a particle of evidence that he is not able to do it, or does not do it, you propose to pay his reporters $800 a year additional. According to my judgment, this is a very loose and inconsiderate appropriation of the public money.

Mr. MASON. I understand that the proposition to appropriate this sum of $3,200 to the reporters of the Senate, is only the continuation of what once was, and perhaps has continuously been for aught I know, the usage of the two Houses. It has been the habit to give gratuities at the close of the session to the employes of the two Houses—a practice which I had hoped and thought would be discontinued as to the regular employes of the Senate, because a committee was raised for the purpose, amongst others, of getting rid of that very abuse, as many of us considered it, and that committee revised the organization of the officers of the Senate, and allowed, as they thought, most remunerative salaries. This comes in the form of a compensation, if that is a more acceptable term, to those who have been in the employment of the Senate, at the close of a session.

It was said in the original form of the amendment, that it was to enable Mr. Rives to pay the compensation. That language, it is said, was used by the honorable Senator who moved the amendment, in order to meet some verbal objection that had been made on the floor of the Senate. Be that as it may, the proposition is now in its true shape, to give the reporters of the Senate this sum of money which it is alleged has heretofore been usually paid. I am against it—reluctantly against it. I am against it only because it seems to me not the proper mode of compensating those who are, or who may be supposed to be, in the employment of the Senate. I find, in looking cursorily over the Journal of the Senate, that in 1852, the very year in which the resolution was passed authorizing payment to be made to the editor of the Globe for printing the reports, there was passed a resolution of this character amongst a series of others. The first of those resolutions was to pay "to the persons in the employment of the Senate the sums respectively which were allowed at the last session." The second was to authorize the Sergeant-at-Arms to employ folders during the recess; and the third, "that there shall be paid to each member of the respective corps of reporters of the Senate, $300." Now, this appropriation is one of like character, as I understand; but, as I have said, it is one that I shall be obliged to vote against, hoping and believing that we had got rid of the system of extra compensation.

I think, however, Mr. President, the debate that has taken place will have the good effect at least of bringing the minds of Senators to consider whether this system of reporting does not require some alteration. If the honorable Senator from Georgia is right in the information he has collected as to the amount paid, we are paying upwards of two hundred and ten thousand dollars a Congress for reporting the debates of the two Houses. It is said that the amount paid for the reporting of the Senate is about sixteen thousand dollars; all the rest, then, must be contributed towards the maintenance of the newspaper through the columns of which the reports are published. Now, I have no idea that that sum can be necessary to maintain the vehicle of giving the reports to the public, or that it is properly the duty of Congress to expend so large a portion of the public money for this object.

Nor am I at all satisfied, as I had occasion to say on a former day, with the relations which the editor of that paper conceives he stands in towards the Senate. I do not conceive that, under the resolution of the Senate, which is a simple resolution authorizing him to publish the reports, he has a right to prescribe to Senators what they shall do, and what they shall refrain from doing, in reference to these reports. I have no doubt in the world that if there are any abuses which require to be remedied, the Senate will prescribe the proper means of doing it; but that the gentleman who is authorized to print these reports should take upon himself to establish those relations he has done in the circular to which I called the attention of the Senate heretofore, I utterly deny.

My impression, and a very strong one, is that before the present session closes, if the reporting is to be continued, which, for one, I should advocate, it will be proper on the part of the Senate, either jointly with the other House or for itself, to regulate the system of reporting, and more especially the relations that should subsist between the reporter and the Senate; and with that view, at the proper time, I shall move to rescind the resolution of the Senate under which this reporting is done. It is done altogether, as I am informed, and I believe correctly informed, by a resolution of the Senate, passed in 1852, which would seem to import a contract—and unless there be a contract contained by implication in it, none exists—and that is simply,

"That the Secretary shall audit and settle, from time to time, the accounts of John C. Rives, for the reports of the Senate proceedings and debates, published in the Daily Globe, at $7 50 per column."

Under that, it seems this whole system has grown up, which has resulted in most inordinate appropriations to the Globe, and in the very great increase of compensation that has been given in the form noticed by the Senator from Georgia, by adding allowances for publishing at least. I should be exceedingly reluctant, from my experience of the reporters of the Senate, to part with them; but I am satisfied that some new arrangement should be made; and if no other Senator undertakes it, I shall, at a proper time, introduce into the Senate a resolution at least to stop the present system at the close of this session.

Mr. BAYARD. I do not rise for the purpose of continuing the debate; but I desire to state the view I take of this appropriation. I am opposed to this system of extra compensation to reporters or any other class of officers. The House of Representatives have introduced into the bill a provision for extra compensation for the reporters of that House, although, in fact, they are not employees of the House any more than the reporters here are strictly employees of the Senate. We have, however, chosen to consider them so. The House of Representatives have chosen to place on this bill a provision for the compensation of their reporters, who perform the same duties and have no greater labors than our own. I think the office is one of great importance; and if such compensation is to be made, I think it justice to our reporters to put them upon the same footing of equality. I shall therefore vote for the amendment proposed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, and I shall then vote to strike out the whole appropriation.

Mr. SHIELDS. I rise merely to correct an error into which I fell when I was up before. I find, by a communication that has been made to me since I spoke, that there has been some change in the corps of reporters since the period to which I alluded when I was up before. I agree with the Senator from Delaware that, if we are to reduce the compensation to the reporters, the reduction should be general, and should apply to the reporters in the House as well as to those in the Senate. I am unwilling, as a member of this body, to compensate our reporters at a less rate than that paid in the House of Representatives. I dare say the honorable Senator from Georgia may be right in part of what he has said; but this, as I understand it, is merely to put our reporters on an equality with the reporters of the House. The Senate itself has passed upon the compensation of the reporters of the House, has allowed them a certain sum, and is now objecting to allowing its own reporters a similar sum. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I rise simply to give a reason for my vote. I shall vote for this amendment, though I agree fully with everything that has fallen from the Senator from Georgia, that the reporters are not officers of the Senate, and ought to be paid by Mr. Rives; but there are certain personal relations which grow out of personal service towards gentlemen both in private and public life, which I think are not entirely undeserving of being yielded to. In private life, a merchant who contracts with his clerk for a certain sum for his year's service habitually gives him a gratuity at the close of the year, when his services have been faithful and satisfactory—adds something to the contract price; he reserves that right of adding something to the contract price that he may give a mark of approbation. I must say that the reports of the Senate, so far as I have been able to follow them out, appear to me as nearly perfect as a human thing can be; I hardly ever see a mistake; and therefore, as a mark of approbation for service almost personal to myself, I consider that I have the right, as a public man, to vote this testimonial of faithful service annually when the service is faithfully performed, reserving to myself the right to vote against it if the service ceases to be such as merits my approbation and entitles the parties to a testimonial satisfactory in its character.

I rose to give this reason for my vote, at the same time expressing the hope that some gentleman will make a motion by which this whole system of reporting will be remodeled and reformed. I do not like the system as it now stands, and would much prefer that our reporters were officers of the Senate.

The amendment of Mr. Brown, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. TOOMBS. I move now to strike out the whole section; and on that question I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. HUNTER. There is a motion pending to strike out the whole clause, which was made by me.

Mr. BROWN. I want to hear what is proposed to be stricken out.

The Secretary read:

"For the usual additional compensation to the reporters for the Congressional Globe for reporting the proceedings of the House of Representatives for the next regular session of the Thirty-Fifth Congress, $800 to each reporter, $4,000."

Mr. BROWN. I only want to see how much is to be stricken out.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I wish to hear the section read as amended.

The Secretary read the original clause of the House bill and the amendment added on Mr. Brown's motion.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The motion is to strike out all, I understand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I hear a number of Senators saying they will vote to strike this all out. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Finance if we have not already paid the reporters of the House of Representatives for this session and the last one, by appropriation bills formerly passed; and if you strike this out, you only strike from the House reporters what is already appropriated for the next session, leaving them already two sessions paid, and you take from the reporters of the Senate the whole three sessions.

Mr. HUNTER. I think that is the state of the case.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then it would be a very singular way of doing equal justice; it would be a very singular way of putting the reporters of the Senate on an equal footing with the reporters of the House, after we have paid the reporters of the House the extra pay for the two sessions, upon a bill to pay them for the next session, to strike out the pay for the reporters of the Senate for three sessions. That is a kind of justice and equality that I do not know anything about. The only way to do equal justice is to leave the two first branches of this amendment for the Senate reporters, paying them for the present and the last session of Congress, and then strike out the appropriation for the next session for both branches. That is the only way you can do justice and put them on an equality.

Mr. BROWN. When the deficiency bill was up, it contained an item to pay the reporters of the House of Representatives for the last session of Congress. It is suggested that it was done out of the contingent fund of the House; but it could not be done without the consent of the Senate. I moved the amendment then to put our reporters on the same footing, and consented to have the whole of it stricken out together. I asked the Senator from Virginia to take the amendment which we had made to the House proposition as a caveat that we expected our reporters to be protected in a committee of conference, but I believe the bill never came to a committee of conference on that point. At all events, our reporters were neglected; they did not get the compensation which was allowed to the reporters of the House. Now we have done the same thing over again. We meet the House reporters by a similar proposition for ours; we vote it on; then you propose to strike out all together. The House will insist upon retaining their proposition, and the end will be as it was before, that their reporters will be paid and yours not.

One word upon that point, and I think I shall not open my mouth about this subject again. I put this upon a point of honor. If the House was paying its reporters out of its contingent fund, by its own action, and by no other action, then I should not take much interest in it; but we consent—without our consent they could not do it—that their reporters shall receive this extra compensation. We have done it before. We did it by the passage of this bill; and it was only by a motion to reconsider that this amendment was allowed to come in. Let the motion now pass; strike all out together, and your amendment will not appear before a committee of conference if it comes to that—and that it will, nobody, I suppose, will question; there will be no urging of it; and the result will be that, by your consent, and only by your consent, the House reporters are paid for three sessions, and yours not paid at all this extra compensation. Is not that a consent on the part of the Senate that their reporters shall occupy a lower position than those in the House? If the House acted for itself alone, did not ask your concurrence, and you did not give it, then the question would be very different; but you consent, you have consented, you consented in the deficiency bill, you have again consented in this bill, that their reporters shall be paid this extra compensation; and now, if, by your consent, or rather by your refusal to ask this appropriation for your reporters, they do not get it, they must necessarily be degraded to that extent. They are put in a lower position, having certainly equal merits, being entitled to equal compensation—as I think, upon the point of merit, they are—if you who have them employed, to whom they render service, consent that others entitled to no higher compensation shall have it, and yet refuse to give it to them.

I hope that this motion to strike out will not prevail. If I felt quite certain that we could get clear of the whole thing, then I would agree to let it be stricken out; but I know that cannot be done and it will not be done. I never will record my vote to degrade our reporters—to give our consent that those in the other branch of the Legislature shall be paid $800 more than ours, for what all of us know is an inferior order of service.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not admit that we are disparaging our reporters by refusing to vote this gratuity—and a most anomalous shape of extra compensation it is. I do not believe we do them injustice by any such vote. For one, I am free to say, that I accord in most that has been said in praise of the fidelity with which they have discharged their duties. If it be put on another footing, if the Senate choose to assume upon itself the direction of these reporters and their payment, I am willing to pay them ample compensation for whatever they do; that is to say, I am willing to say at once what shall be their compensation, and not afterwards to increase it; for I believe that the whole system of extra allowances is improper and prejudicial.

Sir, this is carrying it a step further than anything we have ever done before, with the exception of the reporter's salary, for here we are not giving extra allowance to our own officers, to our own employes, but we are undertaking to go behind a contract and say that we will give an additional compensation to a man with whom we have made a contract to execute a certain service. We contract with a man to build the wings of this Capitol. If his laborers come forward and say they do not get enough, although he does not ask us to give him a dollar for the purpose of compensating him, are we to go behind the contract and give them extra compensation? Suppose the compositors and the printers who print these reports come here and say they do not get enough, that they are idle in the summer, that they have not proper compensation: are we to step behind this contract and to give them additional compensation?

Why, sir, it seems to me that there cannot be a worse precedent; and because the other House choose to do it, are we therefore bound to do it? If they commit what we believe to be wrong in point of policy, are we bound to follow their example, or else to consider ourselves as being placed in a position of doing injustice to our own officers? Surely not, sir. If we do what it is now proposed to do by this motion, strike out the whole, we leave them both upon an equal footing; we interpose to prevent the House of Representatives from introducing this false system of compensation, not to our own officers, but to the employes of those with whom we make contracts. It is not the fact that the House do not propose to pay them out of their own contingent fund, for they did in the deficiency bill—I do not recollect the terms of the appropriation—and the reason they asked our assent was because there was a law which prevented them from paying it, and they proposed to pass it in the shape of an appropriation bill that they might get over that law. We believed that that was wrong, and the Senate struck out that appropriation; but sooner than lose the deficiency bill, we receded from the amendment. I believe that this is wrong, and I think that the Senate owe it to sound policy to put an end to this system. Let us reorganize the system of reporting, if the reporters do not now get enough, and let us put it upon some plan, some method by which we may compensate them properly without setting this bad example.

Why, sir, we know that this system of extra compensation to our own employes produces discontent in the Departments. We know that those who are engaged in the Coast Survey, working not more than one hundred or two hundred yards from here, those who are engaged in the Executive Departments, and who are really performing much more onerous service, and much harder labor, than is performed here, think it is a disparagement and injustice to them. It will not do to carry this notion of personal association, not only to our employes, but even to those who are employed by persons with whom we contract to do a job for a certain price.

In giving this vote, I think it but justice to our reporters to say that I mean them no disparagement. I think they have discharged their duties well, and with fidelity; and I am willing to reorganize the system, and put it upon some footing, if they do not get enough, by which they may be compensated amply for whatever they do.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The Senator from Virginia seems to have a sort of periodical fit of economy, generally on very small matters. He does not strike at the very great expenses of the Government that I think he should strike at in the first place. That, however, is no reason why we should spend public money at all; and neither is it any reason why we should withhold what ought to be paid. My own reason for voting to retain this clause, as I shall do, is a very simple one. The system of making these allowances has existed ever since I have been in the Senate. They were made the first session after I came here, and at every session since, until the last session of the last Congress. Then the House reporters were allowed this money, but the Senate reporters were not, and I was not aware of the fact at that time. As we continued to go on in that way, it is to be presumed that it was done in the first place upon some consideration and some understanding. It is to be presumed at least, that the Senate and House of Representatives did not vote an extra compensation of $800 to each of their reporters without being satisfied at the time that for some reason or other connected with the system which Congress had adopted, they were not paid a sufficient remuneration, that the contract with Mr. Rives in relation to the publication of the debates was such that the reporters, whom he employs at a certain rate, did not receive sufficient remuneration. That must have been the original ground of the allowance, and we continued it year after year. To be sure we made other allowances to Mr. Rives from time to time, but they were not based at all upon the ground that he was obliged to pay his reporters a larger sum, but because of the expenses of his publication—the printing of the debates.

The reporters continued to receive this compensation for a number of years; they received it for several sessions continuously, until the last session of Congress, and then it was paid to the House reporters, but not to ours. When it was allowed, it was done, I may say, without objection; at least there was no objection to it which was ever feasible to be sustained. So far as I have observed since I have been here, it passed ordinarily without any comment at all. I say, then, it got to be a matter upon which the reporters could justly rely as compensation to be made to them according to general custom and habit.

Now, with regard to the system, I do not propose to say anything, because I have not investigated it. It may be right, or it may be wrong; but I disagree with the Senator from Virginia in the mode which he proposes to adopt. He objects to the present system, and he proposes to begin reform by striking off the pay of the reporters while the present system exists. That is not fair.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not acknowledge that this is the pay of the reporters. It is a mere gratuity.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose it to be a gratuity. A gratuity long continued, continued without objection from session to session and Congress to Congress, gets to be considered as part of the pay and comes to be relied upon, if the same reason for it exists which existed in the first place. You may call it a gratuity, or call it compensation, or call it what you please, the question is, have they not a right to expect it?

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Senator think we are bound to go on and pay twenty per cent. extra to our officers because they have had it heretofore?

Mr. FESSENDEN. No, sir, for we have given them notice fairly, from time to time, that we would not give extras to them; but no such notice has been given to the reporters.

Mr. HUNTER. We gave it in the deficiency bill at this session.

Mr. FESSENDEN. The matter was brought up in the deficiency bill, but the reason why this provision was not put on that bill was, that was the wrong place. That was the only objection which was made. It was said then that when we came to consider the regular bills that would be the time to provide for the reporters' compensation.

As I was saying, we have decided over and over again, session after session, Congress after Congress, that these gentlemen did not get enough, and that, therefore, this sum should be added to what they received. I never put it on the ground of gratuity; I never heard it placed on that ground; but if Senators choose to place it on that ground now, be it so. The statements which have been made as to their compensation are not contradicted. True, we have no legal evidence on the point. We do not go into a trial in legal form of every question that comes up here in reference to these matters; but we satisfy ourselves, in one mode or another, that the story told us is true, and we act upon our information, and continue to rely upon it, unless we find ourselves defrauded and cheated. These reporters receive how much? I am told, it has been said over and over again, and I suppose there is no dispute as to the fact, about one thousand six hundred dollars in a long session, and one thousand two hundred dollars in a short session, for their labors; and we know that, being here a large portion of the year, and subject to our control, they cannot take up new business elsewhere in the recess of Congress. They must depend on this for support during the whole year. It is most inadequate pay for their services—they are entitled to more. Say what you please of the faults of the system, the pay is inadequate; and, on the ground that the pay is inadequate, and that the system we have adopted, the contract we have made will not allow more, we have made these additional allowances, or gratuities, if you please so to term them; but whether one or the other, they amount to substantially the same thing. These reporters are capable men, educated men, and they ought to be paid a compensation proportionate to the character of the labor they perform, and the position which, from their personal qualities and standing, they are entitled to maintain in society. We know that a compensation of $1,600 one year, and $1,200 another, is by no means a reasonable remuneration for the services required of them—at least not such as educated, competent men ought to have for such labor; and we based the allowance on that ground originally.

Now, sir, if the system be wrong—and on that I give no opinion—it is our fault that we have not changed it. It is our business to change it, and change it as soon as possible, if it be liable to all the objections that have been made. Do not, while things remain in their present position, strike off that adequate compensation which is necessary to the reporters. Give them what they ought to have; then change the system if you please; but do not say that they shall starve or be subjected to injustice while you are making the change. That is beginning at the wrong end for the purpose of reform. Do justice in the first place to them; and then when you get a new system in operation, if they choose to work under it, very well; if they do not, we must look out for somebody else to supply their places. I do not stand here to praise the reporters or to blame them. Enough has been said as to their merits. They are, in one sense of the word, our servants. To be sure, they do not directly contract with us, but we have considered them ours, we have paid them as ours, we have treated them as ours, in a measure. I am really of opinion that the Senate has received an ample return in the services of these men for all the money we have ever given them. As I said before, if we have made a contract with Mr. Rives which does not allow him to do justice to them, it is our business to do it in another way; and as we have followed this mode of doing it for years, without objection, do not break it off now. If you want to change the system, do it in such a way, at any rate, that their just rights and interests will be cared for and properly treated in the mean time.

Mr. HUNTER. I think we did break off a year ago, if my memory serves me.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I acknowledge the general impropriety of paying extra compensation to our employes in addition to their usual salaries, but I do not think it becomes us, after having paid extra compensation to the employes of the House of Representatives for identically the same service, to turn round and refuse it to our own employes. I am astonished at the course of the Senator from Virginia, who voted for the deficiency bill at this session, which contained an appropriation "to enable John C. Rives to pay the reporters of the House for reporting the debates of the present session the usual additional compensation of $800 each, $4,000."

Mr. HUNTER. I will tell the Senator that I voted against it. The Committee on Finance moved to strike it out and it was stricken out, but it was given up in conference sooner than imperil the bill itself.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Senator voted for the bill containing that appropriation, to pay to the reporters of the House of Representatives the extra compensation of $4,000. It could not have been appropriated without the consent of the Senate. It was not money taken out of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives. It was money taken out of the Treasury to pay the reporters of the House for the present session of Congress. Having done that, shall we turn round now and declaim against paying extra compensation to the same class of employes, after having, by our own votes, established the precedent? If this principle is so vital, we should have stood upon it then. I am willing to go with Senators to reform this system of printing and go against extra compensation, but before we commence that, let us do justice.

I should like to have a division of the question. I am willing to strike out this clause in the bill of the House of Representatives:

"For the usual additional compensation to the reporters for the Congressional Globe, for reporting the proceedings of the House for the next regular session of the Thirty Fifth Congress, $800 to each reporter, $4,000."

I will vote to strike that out, and I will also, if it be in order, move to strike out the amendment which the Senate has made to pay the Senate reporters $3,200 for reporting the proceedings of the next session of Congress; but I desire to vote to pay the reporters of the Senate for reporting at the present and the last session of Congress the sum that we ourselves have already adopted to pay the reporters of the House for the same kind of service; then let us reform the reporting system, if we wish to do so. I call for a division of the question upon the motion to strike out, so that we may strike out the extra compensation for future service, and retain it for the past services of our own reporters. I wish to have a separate vote on each clause.

Mr. STUART. I would suggest to the honorable Senator that he cannot effect his purpose now in regard to the amendment the Senate has put in the bill. We cannot strike any portion of that out, and I suggest, therefore, whether he had not better let the matter stand. We cannot strike out any part of what the Senate has already put into the bill.

Mr. TRUMBULL. There is a motion to strike it all out.

Mr. STUART. That is another question; but what I mean to say to the Senator is that he cannot divide the amendment which the Senate has put in, so as to strike out that which is prospective.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I am not posted up on rules of order. What I have just read to the Senate was in the bill originally, and the motion pending is to strike that out, together with what the Senate has added to the bill since. If a motion is in order to strike it all out, and it is susceptible of division, may I not call for a division, and vote on striking out this clause which provides for future compensation?

Mr. STUART. The Senator does not understand me. The Senate has put in an amendment. It is not in order to strike out that amendment, or any part of it. If the Senator should succeed in getting a division, and striking out that portion in regard to the Senate reporters, it would leave the House proposition standing. He would thus produce the very inequality he seeks to avoid.

Mr. HUNTER. As I understand it, the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi was to the section giving the House reporters this money. I had moved, originally, to strike out that section; and it was proposed, before the vote was taken on striking out, to amend the words I proposed to strike out, by this addition. I now move, after the Senate have put in these words, as an amendment, to strike out the section as amended. It is true, the Senator from Illinois cannot divide the amendment, put in so as to strike out what was substantially inserted by the Senate; but we can strike out the whole section as amended.

Mr. STUART. Yes.

Mr. BELL. I wish merely to say one word in explanation of the vote I shall give. I do not mean to go over the grounds taken by other Senators, nor to notice those taken on the opposite side. When this question was first suggested, or brought to the notice of the Senate, at the present session, I took some pains to ascertain whether the reporters of this body were adequately paid. I had heard it said that it was probable they were not; and that, unless they got further compensation, they would not continue to report for the Senate. I wished to know whether there was any just foundation for the dissatisfaction or for the rumor which I had heard; and, upon inquiry, I got such information as satisfied me that they were already, probably, paid about as much as the publisher of the debates could afford; that the corps of reporters employed here considered they were not adequately paid, and had not been adequately paid heretofore. The services are very laborious indeed, during a considerable portion of the session, and towards the close the labor is almost unsupportable, occupying them sometimes sixteen and even twenty hours a day, and sometimes twenty-four consecutive hours have been occupied by the superintendent of the reports. I ascertained further that it was probable that this corps would leave the service in which they were employed if they were not paid a larger sum, or if they had no prospect of being so paid.

Thinking myself that it was a matter of great public importance that the debates of this body should be regularly reported and published, having very different views on that subject from some of the honorable Senators who have addressed the Senate, and without reference to the question whether there ought to be a reorganization of the plan of reporting, or a new organization, or a new system adopted, I looked to the actual point before us—the justice of making this additional compensation to the reporters. Sometimes I might be inclined to give a vote on considerations connected with the relations in which we stand, our social relations to a portion of the employes of the Senate; but I feel myself clear in giving this vote upon the ground that it is merely doing them justice, and that probably no such body of reporters could be obtained if they were to relinquish their present employment. It is not likely that they could be. We can get propositions to report, I dare say, for one half the amount; but they do not afford the security that the experience we have had of the skill and fidelity of this corps of reporters furnishes. It is upon the ground of justice, for the purpose of securing an object which I consider important, that I give my vote; believing that they have not been adequately compensated heretofore; believing that now it is just that this money should be given to enable them with cheerfulness to continue in the service in which they are now engaged, and to afford such reports as they have heretofore furnished to the country.

As I stated the other day, occasional mistakes occur in the best corps of reporters; and I alluded to a case in relation to some remarks I made on a very delicate and important question; but that is a contingency to which we must be subject at all times. Mistakes will be made; sometimes one that may be serious and to be regretted, and may be mortifying to the gentleman who makes remarks in this body. On the whole, I think this corps of reporters have been faithful, skillful, and able, and I wish to continue them. I vote on grounds of justice, according to my conception of their claims.

Mr. TRUMBULL. In order to avoid the question of order that is made by the Senator from Michigan, I will move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate adopted the amendment; and when that shall be reconsidered, if the Senate reconsider it, I will then ask for a separate vote upon the different clauses of the amendment; for I am opposed to making an appropriation to pay extra compensation for the future; though I am in favor of placing our own reporters upon an equality with the position in which the Senate has, by its own action, placed the House reporters. Therefore I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was adopted, with a view of asking a division upon it, so as to vote directly upon the third clause of it, which pays the extra compensation for the next session.

Mr. BROWN. Allow me to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to a fact. He speaks of reconsidering, with a view of striking out the provision which gives extra compensation for the coming session of Congress. If he will look at the original House bill, which we are amending, he will find that it provides for paying the House reporters for the next session.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I propose to strike that out.

Mr. BROWN. You cannot do it. It is amended now. If you strike out both together, be it so; but the result, let me say to my friend from Illinois, will be this: that the next session of Congress will come round, and your reporters are not provided for by this bill, and the House will not provide for theirs as a matter of course, when they pass the bill there. Why? Because they are already provided for, and then your reporters will stand pretty much where they do now—unprovided for. I think it is better to let them go along hand in hand.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to make a suggestion to my friend from Illinois. I shall vote against his motion to reconsider as well as against the motion to strike out. If you reconsider this amendment, and strike out the proposition of the bill to pay the House reporters for the next session, together with the payment of our reporters for the next session, you will leave no motion for the House of Representatives to concur in our amendment; and as there is no probability that we shall reorganize this system until the next session, I would rather provide now for the next session than hazard this appropriation for the payment of our reporters for the last session, and the present session. I want to get them that first; but I think that probably by the time you reorganize the system, the next session will have gone by, and the money will have been earned and spent. I hope, therefore, the Senator will not insist on his motion to reconsider. My fear is, that by reconsidering, we shall lose the whole proposition. I agree that it would be more proper; it is more in accordance with my notions of propriety to wait until the service is performed before giving this complimentary pay; but I want to leave the other House some motive to adopt our proposition, and I state it frankly.

Now, I wish to say a word in reply to the Senator from Virginia, about extra compensation. This certainly cannot be regarded as extra, because we do not pay them anything besides. This is all our payment to the reporters. I wish to call his attention to another fact. I am informed, upon inquiry among the committees I have been on, that in order to get rid of annual appropriations for extras, we have raised the permanent price of committee clerks, and other employes here, to the extent of the twenty per cent. formerly given as extra. That is a very economical way of voting extra payments. [Laughter.] You avoid the term and pay the money. That is what we do in regard to our officers.

As has been suggested by the Senator from Maine, this payment has been going on for years; but we are in arrears two sessions to our reporters, and I think we ought to pay them that. The Senator from Virginia says, now that we have put this in the bill, that he goes for striking out the provision for the reporters of both Houses, and then they will be on an equality. He cannot avoid so glaring a fact as this: that our reporters are now behind the reporters of the House two sessions of Congress in the appropriations already made for this compensation. That stands out clearly, and cannot be overlooked, and cannot be put out of sight by any ingenious argument. I desire, as I said before, to keep this provision just as it is, and to appropriate for the next session, in order to induce the House of Representatives to adopt our amendment, and put our reporters on an equality with them. Then I will go with the Senator from Virginia, in any proper mode of economy he may desire, to prevent the payment of $200,000 for these books. I think that is enormous, but I would not take it out of these hard-working people. Let them have their pay for reporting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. FITZPATRICK in the chair.) Does the Senator from Illinois insist on his motion?

Mr. TRUMBULL. Yes, sir, I insist upon the motion to reconsider. I am opposed to paying extra compensation in advance for the next session of Congress. Senators around me tell me that loses the whole provision. I do not see it. I have unwillingly given votes here sometimes, on the idea that the House of Representatives will not do right. I cannot believe that the House of Representatives, after having voted extra compensation for the past and present session of Congress to its own reporters, will refuse it to ours; but there is no propriety in paying extra compensation for services not yet rendered. What becomes of the argument of the Senator from Louisiana, that we are to look upon these reporters as a merchant would upon a faithful clerk, to whom he feels at liberty to make presents at the end of his term of service, for the faithfulness with which he has discharged his duties? Here we are giving this money in advance for another session. It seems to me, that if that is the only way to get at it, it would be better for the Senate to reconsider, and put into this bill simply an appropriation placing our reporters upon the same footing as the reporters of the House have been placed upon by our own vote, and there leave the matter.

THE PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion was not agreed to.

MR. HUNTER. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out the whole.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

MR. WADE. I have paired off with my colleague [Mr. Pugh] on this question.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 20, nays 31; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Bright, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Hammond, Henderson, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Mason, Polk, Rice, Sidel, Toombs, Trumbull, and Yulee—20.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Broderick, Brown, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Green, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Jones, Kennedy, King, Mallory, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Sumner, Wilson, and Wright—31.

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

MR. DAVIS. I offer an amendment in page 22, line five hundred and twenty-nine, to strike out "two" and insert "four," and add after the word "dollars," in line five hundred and thirty, the words, "and the clerkship of class three, already authorized by law for said office, shall hereafter be of class four;" so that the clause will then read:

For compensation of the clerks and messengers in the office of the chief engineer, $8,440; and the clerkship of class three, already authorized by law for said office, shall, hereafter, be of class four.

This is a proposition not to increase the number of clerks, but to raise a clerk, now of class three, to class four; a man of varied acquirements and very great usefulness in the Department, and who has been for thirty years a faithful and efficient servant of the public. It is recommended by the Department especially; and the justice of increasing the salary of this clerk $200 is urged by the chief of the bureau to which he belongs, and by the head of the engineer corps. I think, upon every principle of equity and policy, the increase of that clerk's salary should be made in the manner now proposed.

MR. HUNTER. I will simply state that there were various propositions before the Committee on Finance to raise clerks from one rate of salary to another, and some to add clerks, on none of which the Committee on Finance agreed. They thought this was no time to be increasing salaries, or adding to the clerical force.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. DAVIS. I wish to offer another amendment, in line five hundred and seventy-four, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the compensation of the superintendent may be allowed to the clerk who has performed, or may hereafter perform, the duties of that office, the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary, not to exceed $2,000.

So that the clause will read:

For the general purposes of the building, corner of F and Seventeenth streets, for compensation of superintendent, for watchmen, and two laborers for said building, $3,850; and the compensation of the superintendent may be allowed to the clerk who has performed, or may hereafter perform, the duties of that office, the allowance to be made to such superintendent, with his salary as clerk, not to exceed $2,000.

The money is appropriated in the bill as it stands. The amendment does not increase the appropriation a dollar. It has been for years appropriated in the same form as in the bill originally, and the money has been used to pay for the services described in the amendment; but recently the Comptroller has put a construction upon the law different from that of his predecessor. This declaration of what the law is becomes necessary for the settlement of the accounts of this officer, as well as to allow the small sum which is paid to him for the performance of this particular duty. It does not increase the appropriation at all, and does not vary it.

The amendment was agreed to.

MR. BROWN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the word "seventy," in line one hundred and twenty-nine, was stricken out, and "fifty" inserted in place of it. I make the motion more for the purpose of correcting a little bit of history which I think is important, than for any other purpose. When the Senator from Virginia [Mr. HUNTER] moved that amendment, I interposed and stated that the price paid by us at the last session of Congress for binding the Congressional Globe was sixty cents. Two or three Senators said no, it was fifty. My recollection was not precisely accurate, but I had a general recollection that I was right. Since that, I have consulted the law which I have before me, and I find that the precise sum paid was sixty-three cents. The reason for its being put at that sum was this: the House was paying seventy cents for binding the Congressional Globe; ours was done by contract; the publisher had nothing to do with it; and the result was, as I showed at the time, that the sheets were confused, put in at the wrong place, and the binding was wretchedly done, so that the books were falling to pieces almost by the time you got them.

Then there was an inquiry, I will say to my friend from Georgia, as to what the work could be done for without profit. It was ascertained that it could be done in the style of the volumes I hold in my hand for sixty-three cents, and pay no profit. Now you propose to reduce it to fifty cents. You can have binding done at fifty cents; I dare say you can have a book bound with what I believe they call Russia backs and covers for fifty cents, and the volume will fall to pieces the moment you take the wrappers off. You can have tolerably good binding done in muslin at fifty cents; but if you want to have it done as this volume is done, you cannot have it done for less than sixty-three cents, and pay no profit. I am not asked to make this motion, and with this explanation I mean to withdraw it when I have done. But I want Senators to take note, that during this session of Congress, when you get your Congressional Globes, you get them with sheets left out, sheets misplaced, the binding wretchedly done, so that the index amounts to nothing; and, if you ask the publisher about it, he charges it on the binder; and, if you inquire of the binder, he charges it again on the publisher. A valuable work that costs a large sum of money is thus destroyed for the purpose of saving a few cents. Mr. Rives tells me he does not want this binding even at that price; he does not ask it; he does not ask me to make this motion; but having inquired into this matter formerly, I think the reduction was unwisely and improperly made; but if I insist on this motion, I shall be charged with trying to serve somebody out of doors. I only wanted to give notice to the Senate that this saving of thirteen cents on the volume will result as it did before in giving you a badly-bound book, and with the sheets so discomposed that your index will not amount to anything. I withdraw the motion.

MR. BAYARD. I am instructed by the Committee on the Judiciary to offer the following amendment, to come after line seven hundred and fifty-seven, at the end of the appropriation for salaries for the Attorney General and the clerks and messenger in his office:

Provided, That the Attorney General shall have the power, in place of the clerks now employed in his office, to appoint two assistant counsel, with a salary to each of $3,000; and two clerks, with a salary of $1,600 each.

The amendment is reported by the Committee on the Judiciary upon the application of the Attorney General, with a view to the reorganization of the force now in his office. It does not involve the cost of a dollar more than we now pay. The difference will be that, instead of having a greater number of clerks, who are not competent to perform the duties of the office, we shall substitute a smaller number, and authorize a rate of compensation to two of that number which will secure persons competent really to afford proper assistance. We propose to create no new office, but simply to provide that two of the official force shall be called assistant counsel; and the reason of it is very apparent. The grade of men necessary to perform the duties of the Attorney General's office efficiently, and available for the country, cannot be obtained as mere clerks, or at the compensation of clerks; but you can obtain it without increasing the expense, and by diminishing the force in the mode mentioned in the amendment. The Attorney General has had great additional labor thrown on him from the modern custom of referring almost every question that arises in the Departments for his opinion; and there has also been a great increase of the business of the United States in the Supreme Court. I think it is a reasonable request on his part. The committee have approved of it, and as the amendment creates no new office and no additional expense, I hope it will be adopted.

MR. HUNTER. I think this is the germ of a very large and dangerous increase of the Federal patronage. It is a proposition, in effect, to give the Attorney General two assistants. I believe the policy of giving assistants to the heads of Departments is all wrong. The effect of it is to divide and impair responsibility; to take from the heads of Departments those duties which they, above all other men, ought to perform. We commenced with the Treasury and State Departments; and probably there was more reason for it in the Treasury Department than in any other; but, having commenced with those Departments, it is now proposed to give two assistants to the Attorney General. If we adopt this amendment, the effect will be that we shall be called upon to give assistants in every other Department, the Interior, War, and Navy; and soon we shall have the comptrollers and heads of bureaus coming here and saying they ought to have assistants too. This policy will be extended, inevitably, if we commence with it. I doubt whether it ought ever to have been adopted in regard to the State or Treasury Departments; certainly it should not extend beyond those Departments.

But we shall be told, perhaps, that these officers are not designed as technically Assistant Attorneys General, but merely clerks of a higher order. If we take it in that point of view, here is an attempt to create another class of clerks—$3,000 clerks; and soon you will have a large number of them. It is proposed to add another to the existing class of clerkships, unless you take the other horn of the dilemma, and admit that it is at once a proposition to have two Assistant Attorneys General. The whole effect of the system of appointing assistants for heads of Departments is, that we relieve them of the very labor which it was designed they should undergo and execute; and it seems to me that, of all the Departments, that of the Attorney General is less entitled to it than any other.

Sir, if you want to relieve the Departments of the labors and difficulties which devolve on them, you should begin at the other end and provide for them a more efficient corps by making it a matter of law that they shall promote the clerks so as to reward merit, and to enable those who are deserving to obtain the rewards of their labor. Do that, and keep in those heads of bureaus who have shown themselves to be efficient and capable, and the business will assume such a shape and form that no head of a Department will have half the trouble or half the labor he now has. That is the point at which to commence, and I would to-morrow vote for a law forcing them to promote the clerks from one class to the class above it, when they prove themselves to have been efficient and capable, and can show upon examination that they are able to fill the higher class of clerkships to which they would be promoted. If something of that sort were done, we should have a more efficient machinery in all the Departments; but until you do it, it is perfectly idle to attempt to relieve the heads of Departments by increasing the officers who have high salaries. Get more intelligent and efficient clerks; get more experienced and able officers in the different bureaus—not that I mean to disparage those gentlemen who are now there; but I mean, adopt a system which will give you permanently more experienced and able men in these bureaus, and the heads of Departments will not have half the trouble, fewer cases will be presented to them for decision, and when they are presented, they will be presented in such a shape that they may readily decide them, and the head of each Department will be able to transact its proper business. But if we commence now with this system, it will go I fear to all the lengths I have described, and we shall have the system not only in the other Departments, the Interior, the War, and the Navy, but we shall have assistants to Comptrollers and to Auditors, and to the heads of bureaus.

I hope we shall adhere to the existing classification. If the Attorney General finds that he has too many clerks, let him reorganize his Department by diminishing the corps, not by introducing another class of clerkships, or, what is worse, two assistants to enable him to discharge his duties.

Mr. GREEN. I have always believed that "sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof," and I am not willing to look forward and anticipate difficulties that do not now exist. I am in favor of this amendment. It was well considered in committee, was reported by the chairman, and, I think, substantial reasons exist why it ought to be adopted. It is unnecessary for us to travel over the history of the country, and anticipate other difficulties growing out of it. It is plain and simple in its form, and just adapted to the efficiency of the office of Attorney General. It does not increase the expenditures a single cent; but it so arranges the business of the office as to make the force more efficient for the discharge of the duties incumbent upon the Attorney General. A mere clerk for the performance of clerical duty in the Attorney General's office is not all that is desired. There is a very small portion of mere clerical duty to be performed in that office; but there is a class of duties to which a mere clerk is perfectly incompetent, and that is the preparation of briefs, the hunting up of law, the arrangement of cases, and the preparing of opinions. One Attorney General cannot possibly do this; but let him have such assistance as he chooses to call around him, dispensing with mere clerks, and taking men with high legal attainments, such as in the arrangement of this fund he can command, he will be enabled to prepare better briefs, to better subserve the wants of the Government, to give more logical opinions on points of law submitted, to better protect the Departments who call upon him for his opinions, and in all respects make his office more efficient than it now is.

This does not cost one single cent; and it leaves the head of that branch of the Government still alone responsible, not dividing the responsibility out between him and assistants. He calls his own assistants around him; he selects those gentlemen of legal attainments, who are prepared to render him assistance in the office, still standing himself responsible, without incurring a dollar additional expense. Wherefore, then, should we object to it, when it is presented to the Senate of the United States? I see no reason why it should not prevail.

More than that, while it dispenses with clerks who are now supernumerary, who are incompetent to the preparation of briefs and to the rendition of that service which an Attorney General needs, it still leaves him a margin large enough for the mere clerical force requisite in the Attorney General's office. Heretofore those who have been called clerks were required to perform this duty; but they were confined to a limited amount of compensation, $1,600. For $1,600 you cannot get a lawyer of ability to confine himself to the Attorney General's office. For the examination of claims and difficult points presented to him for his opinion, you must have a lawyer of experience, of ability, of learning, of extensive reading. To do that, we propose to give the Attorney General the option to dispense with a mere clerk, and appoint a gentleman of a higher grade of talent, of ability, and of learning. You do not increase the cost; you do not add to the expenditures of the Government; and you improve the efficiency of the office of the Attorney General, and take from him a large class of labor, which, if he must perform, he must neglect others, by agreeing to this.

Mr. BAYARD. I can see no dilemma in this case, except that which is presented by the assumptions or the imagination of the honorable Senator from Virginia; none exists in fact. There is no desire to take from the Attorney General—nor will the effect of this amendment be to take from him—any responsibility belonging to his office. We purpose not to create an additional office, as in the case of the Assistant Secretary of State, or Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, to be appointed by the President. That would divide the responsibility. We only desire to add to the force in the Attorney General's office, so that he may be able to organize it in reference to salaries, so that, the responsibility remaining with him, he may be able to obtain men competent to perform a character of labor which ordinary clerks have not the competency to perform—that is all. Where is the evil to grow out of it? The honorable Senator, because he can find no objection to the specific recommendation of the Judiciary Committee, seeks to create one by saying that others hereafter will do something wrong—that something wrong will follow from that which is right. That seems to me to be an inconsequential argument. Because Congress now do that which is sustainable on fair grounds, it is not to be presumed that they will hereafter fall into an abuse. This has no connection at all with the subdivision of the State Department or the Treasury Department. There the Assistants are distinct officers, with a particular responsibility and a particular class of duties. Here the Attorney General is to retain the entire control over his office, and to obtain proper aid. As my friend from Missouri has mentioned, he cannot get proper men at the compensation of mere clerks. Nor are their duties merely clerical; but they are truly denominated in the amendment as assistant counsel. Instead of six clerks, we propose to allow him to employ two assistant counsel and two clerks.

I have spoken of the increased duties of the Attorney General. Let me give you an illustration. By your own legislation, you require him to revise the record of every land case decided in California. Eight hundred of them came to him in a single batch. Those records are long. He has to revise the whole of them. They involve questions of law; they involve a minute examination of facts. Can any one Attorney General do that and perform his other duties, and also represent the United States properly in the contested cases they have in the Supreme Court? Certainly not; it is beyond human power of labor. Can he delegate this function to a mere clerk? The clerk has not competency to perform the duty. The business has been got through with—and let me say imperfectly—because, under peculiar circumstances, the chief clerk happened to be a man of more ability than you could usually get in such a situation; but ultimately he resigned, because the pay was inadequate. Without such a provision as this, you leave the Attorney General in a position in which he cannot have the proper aid in the performance of his duties. I see no abuse that can flow from it, unless you suppose that because Congress do what is right in reorganizing this office properly, so as to make it efficient, and leave to the officer all the responsibility, but give him the means of carrying his duties into effect, without overburdening him, that course will hereafter lead in other Departments to abuse. That is the extent of the argument of the Senator from Virginia—that he fears abuses will arise from it. They ought not to arise from any action proposed by the Judiciary Committee in this amendment; and if they ought not to arise, the rational presumption is that they will not arise, although such may be the imagination of the honorable Senator from Virginia.

I trust that the amendment will be adopted, because I am satisfied—and I think I know quite as much about the duties of that office as the honorable chairman of the Committee on Finance—that it is essential to the good conduct of the office, and the efficient performance of its duties consistently with any rational degree of labor imposed upon the Attorney General, that the alteration should be made. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I desire to move an amendment of a single word, which, I hope, will obviate the objection of the Senator from Virginia. The objection appears to be based on the apprehension that these may be considered offices, and may become permanent offices of the Government. I think if the word "appoint" were stricken out, and the word "employ" used in its stead, so as to say that these two gentlemen are to be emploies of the Attorney General; and not appointed as officers, it might obviate the Senator's objection. Then there can be no ground for regarding this as a precedent. It will simply stand as an authority to the Attorney General to employ in his office two assistant counsel at $3,000 a year, if he deems it advisable. Then there is no office created.

Mr. HUNTER. My objection is not relieved by the answer given by the Senator from Delaware. He confesses that these assistants are to do the very thing that I say the head of the Department ought not to have deputies to do. They are to examine cases for him. They are, as I understand, to give opinions for him. It is because they are to do so, that he wishes a higher class; and they are to be permanent officers. This is not only for this session, but this is to be a permanent reorganization. I care not whether you call them assistant counsel or assistant Attorneys General, or what other appellation you may give to them. It is evident that it is designed to constitute two assistants to the Attorney General, who are to relieve him from that portion of his duties which he ought to discharge himself, or else it is an effort to create a higher class of clerkships in that one Department. Do we not all know, is it any extravagant supposition to say, that when we commence it in one Department, the example will be followed in the others? You will always find some invaluable man in this or that Department whose services must be secured, who is not willing to take the salary of a common clerk, who cannot be procured at such a salary.

Now, sir, I believe that for the salaries which are given to clerks, as the salaries go to eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars, the Attorney General can get men who are competent to do all that ought to be done by them; that is, to examine cases and to point him to authorities. I at least know one man in that office who is quite capable of filling that place of assistant counsel, who is quite able to do so from experience, from knowledge, and from ability, and I have no doubt that for the salaries which are commonly given to clerks, they can get men who are fit to do that. Beyond that, I am not willing to go. I am not willing there either to establish a higher class of clerkship, nor am I willing to allow him two assistants who are to relieve him of his responsibilities and his duties. Why, sir, already we presume that the Attorney General has less to do than others, because he is allowed to take private practice in the courts.

Mr. BAYARD. He does not do it.

Mr. HUNTER. I do not know what he does. He is allowed to do it. I believe that most of the Attorneys General, perhaps all of them, have done it heretofore, and they have been allowed to do it, because it was supposed by law the duties of the office did not occupy the whole of their time. I am not willing to relieve them from those duties to which the Senator refers. It was designed that these duties should be discharged by the man at the head of the Department. I am willing to assist him with clerks, who may look up authorities; who may examine into facts; who may make a brief of a case; but we all know that we can employ men of a very high character of intelligence and of acquirement, for eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars a year.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Delaware accept the verbal amendment suggested by the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. BAYARD. Yes, sir. The honorable Senator from Virginia has been speaking on a subject, of which he can have no practical knowledge; that is, as to the grade of men who would be competent to perform the duties requisite in the Attorney General's office for the efficiency of the office. It may please the honorable Senator to say that an Attorney General ought to do all these himself; but I say, as a lawyer, that it would be practically impossible, with the large increase of duties thrown on him during the last six or eight years. Formerly the duties of his office did not occupy the whole time of the Attorney General, and a portion of it could be devoted to arguing causes in the Supreme Court. His salary was but $4,000 a year, lower than that of other Cabinet officers, and it was fixed at that because the Government not needing his whole time, he was allowed to take private practice. He has that right still; there is no law forbidding it; but practically it is impossible for him from the increase of his official labors; and if the honorable Senator chooses to inquire he will find, that for at least eight or ten years past, the Attorneys General of the United States have been obliged to abandon anything like attention to private business, and to confine themselves to the duties of their office, which have become so laborious and onerous that it is difficult for a man to get through with them.

It is not very easy to procure the right kind of assistants. Assistants are wanted to perform a duty onerous to the chief officer: that is, the study of cases, the extraction of principles, and reference to authorities; which requires a much higher degree of legal knowledge than you can obtain for $1,800 a year. Lord Kenyon was the case hunter for Lord Erskine; and Lord Kenyon was one of the ablest lawyers that ever flourished in England. There are men of capacity who would take a position like this at $3,000 a year—which would do no more than furnish a reasonable subsistence—who might have no talents as advocates, and yet might be very able lawyers, who could perform this duty in a manner beneficial to the Government, and of real assistance to the Attorney General. If you take mere clerks, what capacity have they for such a duty?

Mr. Gillet, the late chief clerk, a good lawyer though not perhaps a great advocate, performed this duty under the late Attorney General, and for a short time under the present one; but he resigned because of the incompetency of the salary, and because the labors he had to perform destroyed his ability to attend to private practice. The Attorney General would be overwhelmed if he alone had to perform all these duties. He has made inquiry, and he informs us that he has found himself utterly unable to get any man, properly qualified, to discharge the duties for which he absolutely requires assistants, unless you allow him to pay such a rate of compensation as will secure men who can perform these subsidiary duties, he being responsible for their performance. I consider the objection ill-founded, and I hope the amendment will prevail.

Mr. FOSTER called for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. COLLAMER. I have been unable to agree, in committee or here, as to the propriety of this proceeding. If it be true that the Attorney General needs an assistant such as there is in the State and Treasury and Post Office Departments, create the office of Assistant Attorney General, and let the officer be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. Unless you do that, it seems to me you are creating the office in a disguised form. I am a little astonished at the idea of saying, in a provision like this, that the Attorney General may employ assistant counsel—giving that name in order to avoid creating the office, when, if such a man is wanted, the office should be created. I object to the very form in which the purpose is attempted to be disguised. If we take the ordinary acceptance of terms, this proposition conveys the idea that the Attorney General has got so difficult a case, so important in itself, and so complicated in its character, that he should call in assistant counsel to advise him, as is done by lawyers in private practice, and by physicians in difficult and delicate cases. If it be taken in that sense it is different from what is intended. The intention is not to employ assistant counsel when he needs them, but to obtain people to assist him in doing his own duty. It is disguised for the purpose of getting a higher order of clerk to do duties which should be done by the Attorney General. It seems to me to be an oblique and disguised method of getting at it; and if the true object in view is designed to be effected you should in some open manner create the office of Assistant Attorney General.

Mr. BAYARD. There is no semblance of disguise unless it be in the imagination of the honorable Senator from Vermont. We say fairly why we want this done, and that we mean the responsibility of the Attorney General to remain. His suggestion is, that you ought to create a distinct office to be appointed by the President and Senate. If you did that you would necessarily have to define by law the duties of that officer, and then the Attorney General would not be responsible for the performance of those duties. The object of this proposition is to enable the Attorney General to employ persons for this service, and to hold him responsible for its performance. It is to provide for a grade of service which you cannot get clerks to perform, and to call them by an appropriate name. The Attorney General has now by law a right to employ counsel and pay them, in particular cases, outside of his general duties; but because his duties are too onerous we propose to authorize him to employ a grade of men, designated in appropriate terms, who can perform these duties properly. That is all. Where is the disgrace about that? We do not intend to create a new office; if we did we should have to define its duties, and require the officer to be appointed by the President and Senate, thus destroying the responsibility of the Attorney General, as you already do of the Secretary of State or Secretary of the Treasury, by the laws in regard to the Assistants in those Departments. I think that the duties of the Attorney General's office are of such a character that it is absolutely necessary that those associated with him in their performance should be under his control. I can see no proper objection to the amendment.

Mr. COLLAMER. As the gentleman seems to be unwilling to acknowledge what appears to me to be the true character of this proceeding, namely, that it is a disguised proceeding, I will explain it a little more distinctly. The amendment says that the Attorney General may employ assistant counsel. Why call them by that name? To avoid the creation of the office? and yet you actually make it permanent. You will not create the office directly; but you provide for the employment, and thus cheat the people and yourselves. That is the disguise; that is the obliquity; it is a designed obliquity. It provides for employing assistant counsel, so that it may be said you have not created a new office. Then you have disguised the proposition—for it is really meant to be a new office. It is to obtain, under the name of assistant counsel, a higher order of clerks, if the gentleman pleases, with a higher order of pay. That, I say, is a disguise. If you want a higher order of clerks, with higher pay, say so directly, in so many words, and do not attempt to evade it.

Besides, an assistant to the head of a Department is an officer who should be appointed by the President and approved by the Senate, under all the proper sanctions of such appointments according to the settled policy of this Government. Formerly the Assistants were appointed by the heads of the Departments. I know that the Assistant Postmasters General were appointed by the head of the Post Office Department, and were removable at his pleasure; but five years ago that was altered, and the appointments were given to the President, independent altogether of the head of the Department. So it is with the Assistant Secretary of State and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury. It is the uniform habit of the Government now, in regard to such officers, to have them appointed by the President and Senate. If an assistant be needed in the Attorney General's office, let him be appointed in the usual way, or if the Attorney General really needs the assistance of a higher class of clerks let us say so and provide them.

Mr. BAYARD. I am sorry to take up so much time on this matter. I have no interest in it other than my perfect conviction in common with that of a majority of the Committee on the Judiciary that this is a proper reorganization, for the benefit of the Government, of the force in the Attorney General's office. There is no disguise, I repeat again. The honorable Senator from Vermont may please to say it is intended. Intended by whom? I know not; but if he imputes intentional disguise to me, he asserts what he has no warrant for asserting, and is not justified in asserting by any usage I have known in committee or the Senate. I have no disposition on any subject to do anything disguisely.

I say still it would be absurd to allow the President to appoint an independent officer in the office of the Attorney General, because then you would destroy his responsibility; and the confidential relation that must exist for the purpose of common legal action between two associates connected with legal matters, would require that one should not be appointed by an independent authority. I have nothing to do with what was necessary in the case of the Secretary of State, or Secretary of the Treasury, or whether that policy was wise or not. If you choose to make distinct officers there, and define the duties of those officers, you to that extent remove the responsibility of the head of the Department, and you appoint an officer under him who may thwart him in the performance of his duties.

You had better leave the Attorney General's office as it is than attempt to relieve it in the mode pointed out by the honorable Senator from Vermont. If you will not make a change, so as to give men requisite to perform the duties, let the Attorney General go on until he breaks down or fails from the duties being too onerous, because that will be the result. You cannot get the grade of men for less than the amendment proposes to pay. You may call them, if you please, clerks; they are employes—that is the favorite term used in the Senate. They are employes, and necessary employes, in the office of the Attorney General.

There is no intention to disguise anything in not calling them clerks. The reason of that is apparent. You could not get that class of members of the legal profession, who would be competent to perform the duties, as clerks; because they have something of a professional pride, and you must pay some deference to the professional feeling in that respect. You could not get the proper class of men, if you were to employ them merely under the name of clerk. There is no disguise and no harm about it. The people of the country, when they look at the provisions in your appropriation bill, know that you are paying $3,000 a year for two associate counsel. It appears on the face of the bill that you are paying $3,000 to each, in order to act as assistant counsel to the Attorney General in the performance of his duties; and there is no more disguise there, than if you said we should employ two clerks at $3,000 each, and two more clerks at $1,600 each. Where is the difference? The difference is in the name; and the object of changing the name arises from what I say to you, that you cannot get, independent of the question of compensation, that class of the legal profession who would be fit to render the services in the manner they ought to be rendered, if you choose to give them that designation.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 18, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clingman, Green, Gwinn, Hammond, Iversen, Jones, Rice, Sebastian, Slidell, Toombs, Wright, and Yulee—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Chandler, Clark, Clay, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Donlitle, Durkee, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Hunter, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, King, Seward, Simmons, Stuart, Trumbull, Wade, and Wilson—23.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. JONES. Is it in order for me now to move to reconsider the vote by which a certain amendment was made, so as to restore the bill to the original shape in which that amendment found it?

Mr. HUNTER. The vote on the amendment was taken on Thursday, and three days have since elapsed.

Mr. JONES. Then I shall ask for a separate vote on it when we come into the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is upon engrossing the amendments which have been made, and reading the bill a third time.

Mr. JONES. Can I not have a vote on the amendment to which I allude?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. JONES. In page 7, lines one hundred and forty-three and one hundred and forty-four, an amendment was made the other day striking out the words, "draughtsmen and clerks employed upon the land maps." I want to restore those words, so that the draughtsmen and clerks employed in the General Land Office, by the direction of the Clerk of the House of Representatives, shall be continued in service. They are employed in making maps of the land States which show, at a single glance, the disposition that has been made by Congress of the public lands; showing the lands that have been granted for railroads, for canals, for schools, &c. It is a very important matter, and I hope the Senate will restore the item.

Mr. HUNTER. Does the Chair decide that the motion can be made?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not unless there be some special reason which the Chair has not heard.

Mr. HUNTER. The amendment cannot now be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator from Iowa wishes to except the amendment to which he has alluded, when the question is taken on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. It is not in Committee of the Whole. When we reconsidered the vote on the passage of the bill, we did not go back into Committee of the Whole.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate, after passing this bill, reconsidered the vote on its passage, and also reconsidered the vote by which it had been ordered to a third reading; but that did not bring the bill back again into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HUNTER. I hope the question will be taken on the engrossment of the amendments and third reading of the bill.

Mr. COLLAMER. Is not the bill now open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is open to amendment.

Mr. HUNTER. The bill is open to amendment; but nothing that has been adopted by a vote of the Senate is open. The amendment alluded to by the Senator from Iowa was adopted three days ago.

Mr. COLLAMER. Have the amendments agreed to in Committee of the Whole been adopted in the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments agreed to to-day were not agreed to in committee. It never was put in committee after the reconsideration.

Mr. BROWN. The amendments were adopted on Thursday in the Senate.

Mr. HUNTER. The time for reconsideration has passed.

Mr. BROWN. No; it is not passed. Three days are not passed. You have three days. You do not count fractions. If you count out Sundays and fractions, you have not passed three days; and therefore, the motion of the Senator from Iowa is in order.

Mr. HUNTER and others. Two days is the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will call attention to the rule:

"Nor shall any motion for reconsideration be in order unless made on the same day on which the vote was taken, or within the two next days of actual session of the Senate."

Mr. BROWN. Then I give it up.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That being the case, the Chair thinks the proposition of the Senator from Iowa, to reconsider the amendment, comes too late, it not having been made on that day, nor within two days of actual session of the Senate afterwards. The question is: Shall the amendments be engrossed, and the bill read a third time?

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time. It was read the third time, and passed.

DACOTAH INDIANS.

Mr. STUART. I wish the Senate to dispose of a Senate bill, which now lies on the table, with an amendment from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair feels it his duty to first call attention to the special orders.

Mr. STUART. I move to postpone them for the present.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. No. 82) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President of the United States to cause to be surveyed the tract of land in the Territory of Minnesota, belonging to the half-breeds or mixed bloods of the Dakota or Sioux nation of Indians, and for other purposes," approved the 17th July, 1854. The amendment of the House is to strike out all after the word "lands," in the twelfth line, and insert the following:

And settlements heretofore made thereon are declared valid so far as they do not conflict with settlements made by half-breeds, and that the settlers shall have the benefit of the preemption laws of the United States, any location of half-breed scrip thereon notwithstanding: Provided, The declaration of preemption be filed within three months after public notice is given of the passage of this act in the proper land district: And provided, That when two or more persons have settled on the same quarter section prior to the passage of this act, they shall be permitted to enter the same, and the rights of each shall be determined according to the provisions of the act relating to preemption, passed March 3, 1843.

Sec. 2. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of this act shall not extend to any tract or subdivision within the body of land aforesaid, which shall have been settled upon in good faith, by, and is in the occupancy of, any of the said half-breeds or mixed bloods, which lands, so settled upon and occupied by the half-breeds, are hereby expressly declared to be subject to no other disposition than location by the "certificates" or "scrip" authorized to be issued by the said act of 1854, for the benefit of said Indians; nor shall the provisions of this act extend to any lands which may have been located prior to its passage with half-breed scrip, with the consent of the settlers thereon.

The amendment was concurred in.

DEFENSE OF LIEUTENANT ANDERSON.

Mr. CLAY. I present the following resolution of inquiry, which I hope will be acted on at once:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be requested to communicate to the Senate the papers filed in the Department in support of the claims of Blocker & Gurley and James F. Davis, counsel employed in the defense of Lieutenant Anderson and his detachment, arrested by the civil authorities of Texas while in the discharge of their official duties, under the orders of General Harney.

Mr. TOOMBS. I object to that. I recollect something of the incidents of that case. They were in the execution of a very illegal order, and I do not know that they have any claim for expenses. I object to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution lies over.

POTOMAC RIVER.

Mr. HAMLIN. I offered on Saturday a bill for the improvement of the Potomac river, in this District. I now move that the bill be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. GWIN. I wish to give notice that I shall, on Thursday next, move to take up the question of reconsideration, moved by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. CLARK,] on the bill reported by the select committee on the Pacific railroad; and I shall ask the indulgence of the Senate to make a few remarks on the subject on that day.

PAY OF DECEASED MEMBERS.

Mr. DOOLITTLE. I desire to introduce a joint resolution for the purpose of reference; and I will state that I do so at the request of a member of the House of Representatives, who has had it under consideration. The subject-matter of the compensation of those members of the House who died during the recess of Congress, and the resolution which was passed by the Senate to make compensation to the widows and heirs-at-law of Senators Bell, Butler, and Rusk, have been referred to the Treasury Department; and the Comptroller of the Treasury has expressed the opinion that, under existing laws, the payment cannot be made out of the contingent fund, and he requested that I should present the joint resolution to the Senate; and I do so for the purpose of having it referred to our Judiciary Committee.

There being no objection, leave was granted to introduce the joint resolution (S. No. 41) amendatory of an act entitled "An act to regulate the compensation of members of Congress," approved August 16, 1856, as far as relates to such as shall die during their terms of service; and it was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message was received from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, their Clerk, announcing that the House had passed a joint resolution (No. 30) for paying the compensation of stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SLIDELL. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. FOSTER. I would ask the honorable Senator from Louisiana to give way for a moment, to enable me to ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to take up the bill to continue half pay to certain widows and orphans. I do so because there are a large number of these private petitions.

Mr. SLIDELL. For what purpose? To discuss the bill?

Mr. FOSTER. To pass the bill.

Mr. SLIDELL. I shall object to it most decidedly for that purpose.

Mr. FOSTER. I was about to say there are a large number of these petitions before the Senate, and this bill provides for all of them, and unless it is acted on speedily, there will be no hope of its passage.

Mr. SLIDELL. I object to its being acted upon. It will lead to a protracted discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I presume it will not. It is not my purpose to debate the bill, and I believe it will not occasion debate.

Mr. SLIDELL. It must be debated.

Mr. JONES. I hope it will be taken up, for I believe almost every Senator has a case covered by it.

Mr. SLIDELL. I appeal to the Senator from Connecticut. I yielded from courtesy to what I supposed to be a simple, ordinary question; a mere question of reference. I had no idea that any important matter was to be taken up for discussion.

Mr. FOSTER. I certainly am not disposed to press the matter, if it is against courtesy; but I ask it of the Senate. I will not take up any time to argue the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator make any motion?

Mr. SLIDELL. I insist on my motion for an executive session.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business; and, after some time spent therein, the doors were reopened, and the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, May 17, 1858.

The House met at eleven o'clock, a. m.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move there be a call of the House.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is a quorum present. Let the Journal be read.

Mr. CLEMENS. There is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not.

The SPEAKER then counted the House, and announced that there were eighty-seven members present.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move that there be a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Journal cannot be read until a quorum is present, objection being made.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I demand the yeas and nays upon the motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 35, nays 75; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adrain, Andrews, Billingshurst, Case, Chaffee, Clemens, Comins, Cox, Curtis, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Howard, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Kilgore, Leiter, Matteson, Morgan, Isaac N. Morris, Mott, Palmer, Phelps, Pike, Ruffin, John Sherman, William Stewart, Talbot, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, and William B. Washburne—35.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Avery, Barksdale, Bingham, Bliss, Buffinton, Burns, Caskey, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clawson, Cobb, Cockrell, Corning, James Craig, Burton Craige, Curry, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dean, Dodd, English, Foley, Gartrell, Greenwood, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Hatch, Hawkins, Hoard, Hughes, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, Knapp, Lawrence, Leidy, Lovejoy, McKibbin, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Morrill, Oliver A. Morse, Nichols, Olin, Peyton, Pottle, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, Savage, Seales, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Judson W. Sherman, Singleton, Robert Smith, Stanton, Stephens, Tappan, George Taylor, Thayer, Waldron, Cadwalader C. Washburn, White, Whitoley, Woodson, Wortendyke, John V. Wright, and Zollacofer—75.

So a call of the House was refused.

Pending the call,

Mr. MORRILL stated that his colleague, Mr. WALTON, was too unwell to be in attendance.

Mr. CLAY stated that when his name was called he was in attendance upon the meeting of a committee of the House.

Mr. BRANCH stated that when his name was called he was engaged upon a committee.

Mr. GROESBECK made a similar statement, and asked leave to vote.

Mr. OWEN JONES objected.

Mr. FLORENCE. Upon a call of the House, is it necessary that a person should be present when his name is called? I am present now. I raise the question of order that I am entitled to vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. FLORENCE. I should have voted "no."
Mr. COLFAX. When my name was called I was at the Departments upon business for my constituents, and I ask leave to vote.

Many MEMBERS objected.

Mr. BURLINGAME. When my name was called I was engaged upon the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Mr. COCKERILL moved to dispense with the reading of the names on the list of yeas and nays. The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER then announced that only one hundred and ten members had answered to their names, as above recorded.

Mr. WASHBURNE, of Illinois. There is more than a quorum present now.

The SPEAKER counted the House, and announced that one hundred and thirty-four members were present.

The Journal of Saturday was then read and approved.

APPORTIONMENT OF CLERKS.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to make a report. I hope there will be no objection. It is near the close of the session, and I have had this report in my possession for more than two months. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. We have not much time to waste now, and I move to lay the bill upon the table.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. There is no harm in it.

Mr. CRAWFORD. What is the bill? The bill was read as follows:

A bill (H. R. No. 127) to apportion the clerks and messengers of the several Departments of the United States, in the city of Washington, amongst the several States and Territories and the District of Columbia.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I object.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. May I ask if the bill was not received? I think it was; and, as evidence of that I would say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. JONES] moved to lay the bill upon the table. If the report has not been received, I want to move to suspend the rules. If it was received, then I am willing that the House shall determine the matter, and if they see fit to lay it upon the table, I shall be perfectly satisfied.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I rose to inquire what the bill was, and objected.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. The House decided by a large majority to refer the bill to a special committee, and I hope they will now receive the report, and have it printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the objection of the gentleman from Pennsylvania comes too late. The Chair asked if there was any objection to receiving the report. No one objected, and the gentleman from Tennessee then rose and moved to lay the bill and report on the table.

The question was taken; and Mr. JONES's motion was not agreed to.

The bill was then referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and, with the report, ordered to be printed.

STENOGRAPHERS TO COMMITTEES.

Mr. STANTON, by unanimous consent of the House, offered the following joint resolution:

Joint resolution for paying the compensation of stenographers employed by committees of the House.

The resolution, which was read, directs the Secretary of the Treasury to allow and pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the compensation of stenographers employed by committees of the House of Representatives, as audited under the direction of the House.

Mr. ENGLISH. I wish to inquire whether, under the rules of the House, a joint resolution making an appropriation is not required to be first considered in the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union?

Mr. STANTON. That is certainly true; and therefore I move to suspend the rule requiring such consideration.

The rules were suspended, (two thirds voting in favor thereof.)

The resolution was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and, being engrossed, it was subsequently read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STANTON moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS.

Mr. DAVIDSON, from the Committee on Enrolled bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (H. R. No. 542) to authorize the vestry of Washington parish to take and inclose certain parts of streets in Washington city, for the purpose of extending the Washington cemetery, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

Mr. PIKE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled an act (S. No. 38) for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana; when the Speaker signed the same.

ADMISSION OF NEW STATES.

Mr. QUITMAN. I desire to ask the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a joint resolution, not for the purpose of having it considered at this time, but for having a day fixed when it will be convenient for the House to consider it. It is a joint resolution concerning the admission of new States into the Union.

Mr. KELSEY. I object.

Mr. QUITMAN. I move to suspend the rules, so as to enable me to introduce the resolution.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should like to hear the resolution reported.

The resolution was read. The preamble recites that, as all the States are equal under the Constitution of the United States, and have equal rights in the Territories as the common property of the States composing the Union; and that while it is the duty of Congress to provide suitable territorial governments whenever any of the Territories may have a sufficient permanent population, so it is unwise, impolitic, and unjust to the existing States, prematurely to admit new States, thereby unduly stimulating the occupation of distant vacant Territories by a forced and unnatural immigration, for political, partisan, and sectional purposes, producing strife and discord between different portions of the Union, and leading to corrupt political combinations in Congress; therefore, the resolution enacts that hereafter no new States, formed out of the Territories of the United States, shall be admitted into the Union until it shall have been ascertained by a census, taken by authority of Congress, that the Territory seeking admission contains a fixed population equal to the number required for a Representative in Congress, according to the ratio then existing, nor until the people of such Territory be authorized by act of Congress to hold a convention and form a constitution, and shall have presented the same for admission into the Union, in pursuance of its provisions, and in accordance with the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COLFAX. Does the gentleman desire to have the resolution put upon its passage now?

Mr. QUITMAN. No, sir.

Mr. COLFAX. If he does, I desire to offer an amendment providing that application may be received from Kansas for admission into the Union irrespective of the above restriction, so far as population is concerned.

Mr. QUITMAN. It is not my intention, at present, to ask to have it put upon its passage; but to move that its further consideration be postponed till to-morrow week, and that it be printed.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I would inquire what is the regular order of business?

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee of Accounts with respect to Mr. R. B. Hackney, the Doorkeeper.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Then I think we had better dispose of that first.

Mr. QUITMAN. I have moved to suspend the rules; and I believe no motion can take precedence of that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that a motion to suspend the rules is not in order pending a call for a privileged question.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. GROW. I insist on the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The business first in order is the consideration of the report of the Committee of Accounts in relation to the Doorkeeper.

Mr. QUITMAN. I would like to inquire what has become of my proposition to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion to suspend the rules cannot be entertained when a call is made for the regular order of business. It is not in the power of the House to dispense with the consideration of a privileged report, if there be objection. There is also pending on the Calendar a report from the Committee on the Judiciary, brought in on Saturday last, asking that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of a certain petition. That report came in by unanimous consent; and is before the House in the same manner as if it had been introduced under a suspension of the rules. When these matters are disposed of, the motion of the gentleman from Mississippi can be disposed of. The Chair would suggest that very great embarrassment arises from the fact of gentlemen permitting various measures to be brought before the House by unanimous consent. There are on the Calendar now at least four matters of that character.

Mr. QUITMAN. The Chair will permit me to make a single remark. I had the floor, and made a motion to suspend the rules. That motion was about being put. Can another gentleman then take the floor from me and interfere with that motion?

The SPEAKER. The demand for the regular order of business is within the province of every member of the House; and whenever it is demanded, it is the duty of the Chair to enforce the business in order. That business now is the consideration of the report of the Committee of Accounts.

DOORKEEPER OF THE HOUSE.

The report is as follows:

The undersigned, Committee of Accounts, being required by its 102d rule to "superintend and control the expenditures of the contingent fund of the House of Representatives," and "to audit and settle all accounts which may be charged thereon," &c., having had under consideration the accounts of persons said to be employed by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, report:

That prior to the commencement of the present session of Congress the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives was authorized, by resolutions of the House, passed from time to time, to make the following appointments, namely: One superintendent of the folding room; one superintendent and one assistant superintendent of the document room; one messenger in charge of the Hall of Representatives; with salaries ranging from one thousand seven hundred to one thousand eight hundred dollars per annum, and thirteen other messengers with salaries ranging from one thousand two hundred to one thousand five hundred dollars a year. On the 23d of December last, on the motion of a member from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER,] six additional messengers were allowed him, as it was very properly supposed that the comfort of the members required an increase in these assistant officers after the House had removed its sittings to the present Hall. The total number of this class of officers to be appointed by the Doorkeeper, is therefore limited by law to twenty-three. Notwithstanding this express limitation of his authority and power, the Doorkeeper, it is believed, has issued his appointments to thirty or more persons, who claim compensation for their services as messengers of the House. Twenty-three of these messengers, as above stated, are returned by the Doorkeeper on his pay-rolls monthly, with the receipts of the parties named therein attached, who are regularly paid the proportions of annual salaries due each of them respectively. It is known, however, to the undersigned, that some of them are not performing the customary duties belonging to the nature of their employment, and for which they are paid. Three of them are detached, and constantly engaged as book-keepers and assistant clerks in the folding room; one of them is a private secretary or clerk of the Doorkeeper; and two others are used as firemen to the furnaces in the vaults of the Capitol under the old Hall of Representatives; whilst on the other hand, persons who are known to be daily in attendance as messengers and assistant doorkeepers, during the sittings of the House, and who attend upon the several committee rooms, not being returned by the Doorkeeper upon his regular monthly pay rolls, have received no compensation for their services, but depend upon the grace and bounty of the House for remuneration. This gross abuse of the confidence and trust reposed by the House in one of its chief officers cannot be too severely censured, and in the judgment of the undersigned requires an immediate remedy. He has been admonished, again and again, to correct these abuses, but without effect, as he still persists in acting against both usage and law, and openly defies the control of this committee.

Abuses of a similar or worse nature exist in the folding-room. It will be seen by reference to "A statement showing the names of each person employed by the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives of the United States, the nature of their employment, time appointed, amount of sal-any paid each one, and the authority for the same." (Mis. House Doc., 109,) made by Mr. R. B. Hackney, Doorkeeper, in response to a resolution of the House, that he represents the un-usually large number of laborers and folders employed there, amounting in the aggregate to thirty-four, as by authority of the Committee of Accounts. Such is not the case. That statement made to the House is false.

By resolutions of the House of August 8, 1854, and December 23, 1857, the Doorkeeper is authorized to employ eight laborers about the Hall, and in attendance in the cloak rooms, &c. He nevertheless represents the committee as giving him authority to employ eleven.

He had instructions from said committee to employ not more than four regular folders, at $2 50 per day. He has reported the committee to the House as his authority for the employment of six at that price. The salaries of the four regular folders authorized by the committee amount to $300 per month, which it was supposed would be sufficient to defray nearly one half the usual expenditures heretofore incidental to the folding room.

The economical object of your committee has been entirely frustrated, and the expenditures in the folding room increased from an average amount of six or eight hundred dollars to two thousand or twenty-five hundred dollars per month. Here, too, the regular folders, who are returned on the pay-rolls, and are paid as such, do not perform any such duty. But a throng of piece folders, unauthorized by your committee, are employed by Mr. Hackney, who permits false returns to be made upon the books of the amount of piece-work done, and returns false accounts of the same to be audited and settled by your committee, as is shown by the following comparative table, made out by the Clerk of the House, and contrasting the number of documents actually delivered during the three months ending May 1, by the Superintendent of Public Printing, and the number alleged and returned as folded by the Doorkeeper.

OFFICE OF HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES U. S.,
May 6, 1858.

Sir: In compliance with your expressed wish, I have examined the subject of folding documents for the months of February, March, and April last; and find that the number of documents folded in the folding room of the House of Representatives, for each of the months above named, according to the pay rolls returned to this office, to be as follows, namely: for February, 73,374; March, 194,539; extra documents 2,329; total 196,868; and for April, 50,512; extra documents 19,708; total 60,220; for all of which I have declined payment, for the reason that, according to the returns as furnished by the Superintendent of Public Printing, there appears to be too great a discrepancy between the number of documents purported to have been folded and the number actually delivered by the said Superintendent. Below I submit a comparative table, showing the number of documents delivered during the last three months by the Superintendent, and the number alleged to have been folded, as returned by the Doorkeeper.

Delivered by the Superintendent in the month of	Alleged to have been folded during the month of
February..... 45,931	February..... 73,374
Do. March..... 45,935	Do. March..... 194,539
Do. April..... 30,790	Do. April..... 50,512
Total..... 122,646	Total..... 317,425

Or, in other words, there appears to have been an excess of 194,008 documents folded over the number as delivered by the Superintendent.

Very respectfully,
J. C. ALLEN,
Clerk of House of Representatives, United States.

Hon. J. M. KUNKEL, Committee of Accounts.

There are other charges of mal practice in office and venal character preferred against Mr. Hackney; but your committee conceive that it would not be strictly proper to report the declarations of Mr. Hackney's subordinates, over whom he dominates most unjustly.

In conclusion, the under-signed, Committee of Accounts, are unanimous in believing Mr. R. B. Hackney unworthy of the trust reposed in him by this House. They believe that he is either entirely and hopelessly incompetent to perform the duties belonging to his office, or shows a willful and deliberate purpose to pervert improperly and abuse the power with which he is invested.

Your committee, therefore, unanimously recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That R. B. Hackney, the Doorkeeper of the present House of Representatives, be, and he is hereby, dismissed forthwith from that office.

JOHN DICK,
JOHN A. SEARING,
FRANCIS E. SPINNER,
J. M. KUNKEL,
PAULUS POWELL.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I believe that, by order of the House, the Doorkeeper was allowed to make his statement. He has just handed me a statement in reply to that report; and I send it to the Clerk's desk to be read.

Mr. SICKLES. Is the reply printed?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. No, sir.

The Doorkeeper's statement was read, as follows:

To the House of Representatives:

In reply to the report made by the Hon. JACOB M. KUNKEL, from the Committee of Accounts, touching my conduct as Doorkeeper of the House, I respectfully submit the following communication:

The report specially sets forth several instances in which, in the judgment of the committee, I have been guilty of official misconduct. It would not have been unreasonable that, with a view to the refutation of some of these allegations, I should have claimed to have been informed who were the witnesses before the committee, and what were their statements. Although this may have appeared unimportant in the opinion of the committee, yet, to the party accused, more familiar with the subject-matter, and more capable of appreciating the motives of the witnesses, it might have been of eminent service. Notwithstanding this objection, if the special instances cited in the report constituted the principal charges which it is my duty to refute, I should have proceeded this day to show that many of them are incorrect in point of fact, and others greatly magnified. Such, however, is not the case.

The committee further say, "that there are other charges of malpractice in office and venal character preferred against Mr. Hackney; but your committee conceive it would not be strictly proper to report the declarations of Mr. Hackney's subordinates, over whom he dominates most unjustly." These words import not only gross misconduct, but offenses of a criminal character. It is true, guilt is not directly charged; but the insinuation is too pointed to be misconstrued, and, as is well known, has operated most unfavorably against me among the members of this House. I feel assured that I could not expect to be restored to the confidence of the House and the country with this sweeping accusation impending over me. As this charge has been insinuated, without a direct allegation, through a committee of the House, I ask that the matter may be thoroughly investigated. I therefore forbear any partial defense, and invoke the justice of the House to refer the subject back to any committee it may deem proper, for a full and thorough investigation. I do not ask this for the purpose of delay. I pledge myself to be diligent and prompt in pushing forward the investigation. If guilty, let me receive the condemnation I deserve. Let it, however, be established in a manner consistent with the rights of the citizen, and not by the ex parte unsworn statement of hostile witnesses.

R. B. HACKNEY.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Mr. Speaker, it seems, as I understand it from the report of the committee the other day, and also from the statement of the Doorkeeper, that that report is founded upon an investigation which, so far as it went, was altogether ex parte in its character. It seems, sir, from the statement of the Doorkeeper, that he knew nothing, and knows nothing now, of the witnesses, and that he had no hearing before the committee upon the statements contained in that report. I think it but right that the matter should be thoroughly investigated. As is stated by the Doorkeeper in his reply, the most serious charges are barely intimated; they are not distinctly made by the committee. I think the request of the Doorkeeper is, therefore, quite reasonable, that these charges should be thoroughly looked into and investigated, and all the facts brought before the House. Without consuming further time of the House with debate upon this question at this time, I move that the matter be referred to the select committee appointed to investigate the conduct of the Doorkeeper, who have not yet reported. I think it only right and just that the committee should go on with the investigation, and report the facts to the House, giving the party a right to a hearing, giving him notice, and letting him confront the witnesses. It is a great constitutional right that no man shall be put upon trial without the privilege of confronting the witnesses against him. It is, therefore, a matter of justice to the Doorkeeper.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. The gentleman from Georgia is laboring under a great misapprehension.

Several MEMBERS. Let him finish his remarks.
Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. In what am I laboring under a misapprehension?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I will not interrupt you.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. As I may not have the floor again, I should like to know now.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It would, perhaps, require some time for me to explain fully wherein I conceive the gentleman from Georgia is under misapprehension.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Then I will say nothing more at present; but, as I have occupied so short a time, I hope I shall be allowed an opportunity of replying to the gentleman from Maryland. I submit the motion that the matter be referred to the select committee already appointed to investigate the conduct of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I am sensible that the duty which I have to perform to-day is a very unpleasant one—one which only an imperative sense of public duty would ever compel me to perform. From my earliest youth I have looked upon the position of a public accuser and prosecutor as no enviable one; and I have on all occasions, when I could do so with propriety, declined occupying any such position. I would be willing to accord what the gentleman from Georgia claims for the Doorkeeper, who is under accusation, as a right guaranteed to all men under our system of jurisprudence, but he has had this right. The Committee of Accounts has presented nothing that has been brought before them, excepting matters which are of record alone—matters which they could not suppress without a grave dereliction of duty. They have, as they have avowed in their report, refused to present to the House statements which were made by as creditable witnesses as Mr. Hackney himself. The committee did not think proper to report such statements, knowing that the select committee, of which the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HUGHES] is chairman, had already taken this testimony under oath, in the presence of Mr. Hackney, and are ready now, as I understand, to present that proof to the House, and have it read if the House shall see fit to pass an order to that effect. I did not desire to put upon record, in an official paper, statements made against any man who occupies a public position in Washington, or falsely or calumniously assail those who happen to be in authority.

I think, sir, that the House has been most courteous and indulgent, in allowing the Doorkeeper the privilege of putting on file, on the records of this House, a statement in contradiction to the unanimous report of one of its committees. For myself, I feel it due to my own dignity, not on account of my personal merits, but on account of the proud constituency that I represent, to say distinctly that I will not permit any issue of the kind to be made by Mr. Hackney, or any other subordinate officer of this House. I am disposed to do him justice in all respects, and to give him a fair hearing; and I would not—and indeed I would entreat the House, if I should do him injustice, if I should be too severe in any respect, not to attribute it to any desire I have to hunt him down. But, sir, I have done what I have done from a conscientious sense of duty to the House.

Now, sir, the matters charged in the report are of a twofold character. The first is, that he has employed more subordinate officers of this House than by law or usage he was allowed to do. For proof of that statement in the report, I refer the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] to House document No. 109, which contains Mr. Hackney's own statement, made to the House in response to a resolution adopted at the instance of the gentleman from Alabama, [Mr. HOUSSON,] whom I do not see in his seat.

By law, he is entitled to appoint twenty-three assistants. He has reported thirty, and I have been told by a subordinate he has really thirty-four; all of whom have some equitable claim for services which they have rendered to the House as the assistants of the Doorkeeper. He says, in the margin of his statement made to the House, that, on moving into the new Hall, "I" found it absolutely necessary, for the comfort of members of the House, to increase the force of messengers, hoping it would meet the views of Congress. The committee admonished him, and the Speaker admonished him, that he had no such authority. The judgment of the committee was distinct that he was allowed a number of assistants sufficient to perform the duties which by law are imposed upon them.

It will be seen, by reading the report, that he has taken them away from the duties for which they were intended, and has put three of them in the folding-room as pretended book-keepers, to whom I will allude before I conclude. One he has assigned to the duty of private secretary or clerk to himself, for his own convenience. He has assigned two other messengers to act as firemen in the vaults under the old Hall of the House of Representatives—a most gross abuse of the power and confidence which the House has reposed in him; and for which, if for no other reason, he should be discharged.

The statement of Mr. Hackney, read from the Clerk's desk this morning, does not controvert these facts. On the contrary, by his silence, he admits their truth.

It is said by the committee, in their report, that abuses of still more gravity exist in the folding-room; that heretofore, under the management of every Doorkeeper who has had the control of this department of the House of Representatives, the expenses have rarely exceeded, during an ordinary session of Congress, six or eight hundred dollars per month; while so great has been the abuse and falsification of accounts by the Doorkeeper, that the expenses of the folding-room have run up from six or eight hundred dollars, to twenty or twenty-five hundred dollars per month.

This fact he does not pretend to deny. He does not pretend to say that it is untrue. These are matters of record; records which were before the committee; records in your Clerk's office, which may be examined by any gentleman for his own satisfaction. How has it been done?

Mr. SPINNER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment just at this point?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPINNER. The gentleman from Maryland asked how it had been done. I will state, for the information of the House, that the things spoken of as being folded were books, and not speeches. Now, if gentlemen will examine the report of the committee, they will find that for the month of April—I take that month, because it seems that near the close of that month Mr. Hackney found that the committee were on his track—I say it will be found that his returns for the books folded were cut down from one hundred and ninety-six thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight and odd, to fifty thousand five hundred and twelve and odd. He found that we were examining his accounts, and that we had ascertained that the number returned by him largely outran that furnished by the Superintendent of Public Printing. We found that his regular account in his book for April had been entirely torn out, and the leaves were gone. This fact we knew, but we refrained from putting it into our report, for it was agreed by the committee that they would make no specific charges, but that the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. KUNKEL,] who made the report, should state the facts of the case, and advise Mr. Hackney to resign. I understand that he did so. But the Doorkeeper has chosen to put himself on his defense, and out of doors I understand he is arraigning the committee for dishonesty. I understand this morning that the leaves which were torn out have been found, and in a place where it is not difficult to tell who had possession of them. From these leaves I have compiled a statement, which I will give to the House. I find that there are nine accounts attached to the names of the persons employed in the folding-room. These leaves, before or since they were torn out, had additional columns added to them in pencil, in which the amount is very much reduced. I present to the House a statement of the changes which were made as to the number of documents folded, and as to the amount of charges for the folding. The statement is only a summary.

Names of folders.	Volumes in first statement.	Volumes in second statement.	Cost under first statement.	Cost under second statement.
John A. Devine...	6,536	3,998	$36 14	$15 71

Totals.....	101,807	30,802	$415 95	$123 18

The price for folding books is forty cents per hundred volumes. Mr. Boak has fifteen hundred speeches, at seventy-five cents per thousand, added to his account. Mr. Spangler has, in addition to his account for folding books, also added thereto $7 61 for folding ten thousand one hundred and fifty speeches. The account, then, stands in this way:

Volumes folded as per old book.....	101,807
At 40 cents per 100 volumes.....	$407 22
Add for Spangler folding speeches.....	7 61
“ for Boak folding speeches.....	1 12
	$415 95
Volumes folded as per new book.....	30,802
At 40 cents per 100 volumes.....	$123 20
Overcharge.....	$292 75
	71,005

Showing, on averaging these nine accounts, that nearly three and one third to one was charged for every book folded; and, in the case of Mr. Austin, nearly eight for one.

The Superintendent of Public Printing returns, for the month of April, thirty thousand seven hundred and ninety volumes as delivered to the superintendent of the folding-room, which varies but twelve volumes from the corrected account of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. NICHOLS. With the permission of the gentleman from Maryland, I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Certainly.

Mr. NICHOLS. I desire to ask whether, in the month of March, the President's message and documents were not comprised in the number of documents delivered; and if so, whether the discrepancy may not be accounted for from the fact that they were comprised in three volumes instead of one? If so, it ought to go to the justification of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. If the gentleman from New York will allow me to proceed, I will answer the question of the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SPINNER. Certainly. There are other things which I intended to state; but I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I have to say that the committee acted with great leniency and forbearance towards Mr. Hackney.

If I understood correctly his statement, when read at the Clerk's desk this morning, he said that the committee gave him no opportunity to be confronted with his accusers. His accusers were not living persons; they were his own returns made in writing. He was summoned before the committee to explain these returns. I have a copy of a note written to him by the chairman of the committee, requesting him to appear before them. Every member of the committee will rise on this floor, and state that such is the fact; and I will say that, in my judgment, without referring more particularly to what he said, his own statement to the committee inculcated him more than his returns to the Clerk's office. When I informed him of the nature of the report which the committee had directed me to draw up, and of the resolution which I should offer, thinking it my duty to do so, and that I would be carrying out the wishes of the committee, I said to him: "Mr. Hackney, my advice is, that you should resign your office. If you do so, although perhaps it is a dereliction of duty upon the part of the committee to suppress what are matters of record, I will use the little influence I possess to hold them back." He did not then, nor can he now, controvert the facts which are set forth in the report as matters of record alone. He offered no explanation; and he does not pretend to make one this morning. What he does complain of I will refer to hereafter; and, though it is extremely unpleasant, I will endeavor to show that there is some truth in what he pronounces an innuendo and insinuation—a truth so overwhelming and crushing that he will bitterly repent the controversy which he himself has provoked here this day.

Mr. SEWARD. I would like to inquire from the gentleman from Maryland—

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I would rather not yield, because it breaks up the continuity of my thoughts.

Mr. SEWARD. I rise to a question of order. I object to the gentleman alluding to any facts which do not appear on the record in this transaction, because it involves the character of the Doorkeeper; and I am frank to say that I think he is badly enough complicated without referring to facts outside of the record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the question of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. When the Doorkeeper was informed of the nature of the report, he complained that the committee had not summoned before them his book-keeper and the superintendent of the folding-room, saying, "Mr. KUNKEL, you ought not to make that report until these parties are examined; for if there is anything wrong in the folding-room, they are to be held responsible, and not me." I said to him, "Mr. Hackney, the committee did not summon your clerk before them, because they had the returns of your clerk, in writing, before them. They want no explanation of them. The superintendent of the folding-room was brought before the committee, and his statement only inculcates you more." The superintendent of the folding-room, who has endeavored, honestly, I believe, to discharge his duty, has warned the committee for the last six weeks of improper entries made on these books, and false returns being made in regard to the amount of folding done by Mr. Hackney's book-folders. He states that the accounts of piece-folding for the month of April were made up on the books, to the aggregate of some hundred and ninety-six thousand volumes, or thereabouts—a number equal to that returned by him for the month of March, or nearly so. Ascertaining, however, that the Committee of Accounts had these accounts under investigation, the leaves of the book were cut out, and the account for April was restated, reducing the number, originally returned as one hundred and ninety-six thousand, down to fifty or sixty thousand. That is what Mr. Evans, his own superintendent, says.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Did the committee ascertain in whose handwriting the entries, in the leaves cut out, were made, and in whose handwriting the restated accounts were made? whether they were made by the same person?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do not know whether they are in the handwriting of the same person.

Mr. SPINNER. I understand that both are in the handwriting of Mr. Hives, who is the book-keeper of the Doorkeeper.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Were the original entries and the subsequent entries in the same handwriting?

Mr. SPINNER. I think so; although—the one being in pencil and the other in ink—it is not so entirely certain; but I think they are in the same handwriting.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It is stated by the committee, Mr. Speaker, as one other fact that forced them to the reporting of the resolution before the House, that Mr. Hackney has falsified the accounts of this folding-room and made false returns of the number of books or documents folded. How is it shown? The committee have no personal knowledge of the facts, and Mr. Hackney himself disavows any personal knowledge of them. The discrepancy between the number of volumes returned by the Doorkeeper as folded for the months of February, March, and April, and the number of documents actually delivered by the Superintendent of Public Printing to the document-room, is so great that no reasoning man can possibly account for the discrepancy.

He does not, in his statement this morning, pretend to be able to explain the discrepancy. The number delivered by the Superintendent of Public Printing to the folding-room to be folded amounted for the three months to one hundred and twenty-two thousand and forty-six; the number of documents alleged to have been folded is three hundred and twenty thousand six hundred and fifty-four. It is but just to the Doorkeeper to say that he insists there is a mistake, and attempts to account for the discrepancy existing between the two statements by saying that it has been the custom of the folding-room to charge double for folding quarto volumes, and to charge double for the President's message and accompanying documents—generally contained in three octavo volumes. Each volume is folded separately, and the three put in one general envelop. He insists, with some degree of justice, I admit, that he ought to be allowed more than for folding one volume.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message was received from the Senate, by Mr. ASBURY DICKINS, its Secretary, informing the House that the Senate had passed, without amendment, a bill (H. R. No. 542) to authorize the vestry of Washington parish to take and inclose certain parts of streets in Washington city for the purpose of extending the Washington cemetery, and for other purposes.

Also, that the Senate had passed the following bills, in which he was directed to ask the concurrence of the House:

An act (No. 168) to relieve the corporation of Georgetown from the expense of making and repairing roads west of Rock creek;

An act (No. 182) for the enforcement of mechanics' liens on buildings, &c., in the District of Columbia;

An act (No. 191) for the benefit of public schools in the city of Washington;

An act (No. 227) authorizing the organization of a fire department in the District of Columbia; and

An act (No. 241) relating to the manner of holding and transmitting the title to certain church property therein mentioned.

DOORKEEPER OF THE HOUSE—AGAIN.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Admitting the justice of this rule for charging, still it does not account for the extraordinary discrepancies existing between the number actually folded and those charged and returned by the Doorkeeper as folded. Doubling the whole number, one hundred and twenty-two thousand six hundred and forty-six, and it would still leave nearly one hundred thousand more to be accounted for.

But, Mr. Speaker, in order to anticipate what may probably be alleged by Mr. Hackney as a further excuse for this extraordinary aggregate charge for folding documents, I will state that the number of volumes actually returned by the Superintendent of Public Printing to the document-room, is not, as is stated by the Clerk of the House, one hundred and twenty-two thousand six hundred and forty-six, but there were really fifty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty-four octavo volumes, and but thirty thousand one hundred and ninety-one quarto volumes returned.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think I have succeeded in showing the House that what has been charged in this report against Mr. Hackney has been exclusively subject of record before the committee, which the committee could not overlook without a grave dereliction of duty. They forbore, I think with great leniency, to refer to subjects which had been brought to their attention on the mere declarations of his subordinates. He claims that the allegations, in general terms, of malpractice and venality in office, may be investigated. I will send to the Clerk's desk, to be read, a correspondence which has taken place between Mr. Hackney and one of his subordinates.

The Clerk read the correspondence, as follows:

DOORKEEPER'S OFFICE, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
WASHINGTON, D. C., May 4, 1858.

SIR: This is to notify you that the appointment heretofore held by you is hereby revoked, and that your services, as a messenger of the House of Representatives, are no longer required from and after this date.

Respectfully, &c.,

R. B. HACKNEY,
Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

MR. E. V. CAMPBELL, Washington, D. C.

HALL OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
May 4, 1858.

SIR: Inclosed herewith please find a letter of dismissal addressed to me by R. B. Hackney, Esq., Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives. The Doorkeeper assigns no motive for his action, and I can conceive of none, unless it be the fact that I refused to surrender to him my salary, after I had received for it, for the month of April. Other than this, there can be no cause; for I am conscious that I have done my duty faithfully. I deny the authority of the Doorkeeper to act in the manner attempted by him: and appeal to the Speaker of the House of Representatives for protection. Very respectfully,

E. V. CAMPBELL,

Messenger in the Hall of House of Representatives.
Hon. JAMES L. ORR, Speaker of the House of Representatives United States.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether I should go further into this case. I might, if it were the pleasure of the House, call upon the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. HUGHES,] the chairman of the special committee, to report, under the order of the House, the testimony taken under oath, which will go far, not only to corroborate every word contained in the report made by the Committee of Accounts, but to implicate Mr. Hackney still further.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear the gentleman from Maryland. Does he call upon me to make a statement?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I desire to know whether the subjects referred to in the report of the Committee of Accounts have not been investigated by the select committee raised to inquire into the corrupt practices of the present Doorkeeper, and of the last Doorkeeper, and whether the facts stated in the report have not been proved under oath before said committee?

Mr. SEWARD. I desire to know how the floor can be transferred to the gentleman from Indiana?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maryland yields the floor to the gentleman from Indiana to enable him to respond to an interrogatory.

Mr. SEWARD. I understood the gentleman from Maryland to surrender the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not so understand.

Mr. SEWARD. Then I object to the floor being farmed out or transferred.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I yield the floor, then, unconditionally.

Mr. HUGHES obtained the floor.

Mr. SICKLES. Will the gentleman from Indiana allow me to ask a question of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. HUGHES. I will.

Mr. SEWARD. I do not understand how it is, under any rule of the House, that when a gentleman occupying the floor has exhausted his time, or voluntarily surrendered the floor, a gentleman who was on the floor propounding an interrogatory at that instant becomes entitled to the floor.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana became entitled to the floor by rising from his seat and addressing "Mr. Speaker," and the Chair recognizing him.

Mr. SEWARD. After I had addressed the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman from Indiana addressed the Chair before the gentleman from Georgia did.

Mr. SICKLES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Maryland a question. It does not appear from the report, whether or not the Doorkeeper was summoned to appear before the Committee of Accounts. I wish to ask the gentleman from Maryland whether the Doorkeeper was summoned before the committee? whether he was notified of the charges against him, and called upon to furnish his answer to them?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Yes, sir, and he did appear before the committee.

Mr. SICKLES. He did appear?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. He did.

Mr. SICKLES. Was he informed of the charges against him?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Certainly, sir.

Mr. SICKLES. Did he make any answer?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Yes, sir; I alluded to his answer in my remarks, although perhaps the gentleman did not hear me.

Mr. SICKLES. The report does not state what his answer is.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. The House will perceive that there are but two classes of facts referred to in the report; one is as to the employment of a larger number of subordinate officers than by law and usage he is allowed, in which he persisted against the repeated admonitions not only of the Committee of Accounts, but of the Speaker of the House.

The second allegation is that there was an apparent discrepancy between the documents returned by him as folded, and the number delivered by the Superintendent of Public Printing. That is all which the committee have brought to the attention of the House.

Mr. SICKLES. Will the gentleman inform me whether the Doorkeeper made any answer in the matter?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. He did not satisfy the committee.

Mr. CLEMENS. Will the gentlemen from Maryland have the kindness to send to the Clerk's desk and have read the letter which the committee addressed to the Doorkeeper?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I have no objection.

Mr. SEWARD. I shall object.

Mr. HUGHES. I do not intend to participate in this debate at large. I desire to make a very brief statement in response to the question which was put by the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. KUNKEL,] and the allusion made by him to the select committee of which I am chairman.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman from Indiana that in the uniform practice of the House it has been held not to be in order to refer to that which has transpired in committee, until it has been reported to the House.

Mr. HUGHES. I intended to take shelter under that rule; but I think it due to the select committee that I should be permitted to make the statement which I propose to make. I believe I shall express the views of all the members of that committee when I say that this House will be better able to judge of what testimony has been before that committee, and what conclusions may be justly drawn from that testimony when it is reported to the House to speak for itself. As chairman of that committee, I feel that whatever may be the rule, it would not be right that I should make any statement as to what evidence has been given before that committee, either against the Doorkeeper or in his favor, in advance of our report.

That committee will endeavor to act in this matter towards the Doorkeeper with judicial fairness; and, therefore, I trust that the House, in passing upon the resolution which is now before it, will pass upon it in connection with the facts and testimony reported by the Committee of Accounts, and will borrow no aid from testimony not reported to the House.

So far as I am concerned, myself, in the vote I shall give upon this resolution, I shall vote as a member of the House, dismissing from my mind, as far as possible, all inferences arising from the testimony which I have heard as a member of the select committee.

A MEMBER. When will the select committee make their report?

Mr. HUGHES. I am asked when the select committee will report. I will state that the select committee have heard all the evidence they desire to hear against the parties, and will report as soon as the parties have been heard by testimony before them.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I simply intended to ask the gentleman from Indiana a single question which was susceptible of a direct answer in the affirmative or negative. I wished to know of the gentleman from Indiana if he or any other members of the select committee would, from the testimony taken by them under oath, contradict the facts stated by the Committee of Accounts. I think I have the right to know this fact.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would intimate to the gentleman from Indiana that it would not be proper for him to refer to what has taken place in committee.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I did not wish the gentleman to refer to what had taken place in committee. I only wished him to make a categorical answer to the question.

Mr. HUGHES. If I had understood that I was limited to a categorical answer, in the affirmative or negative, I certainly should not have troubled the House at all.

Mr. GROW. I desire to offer the following as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman from Georgia:

Provided, That said committee shall report finally on next Monday, and that the Doorkeeper shall have the privilege of being present during their sessions.

I wish to say, in explanation of the motion I have made, that I did not understand whether the motion of the gentleman from Georgia was to raise a select committee specially for the case or to refer to the select committee already raised upon the subject; but, at all events, I desire that the committee, which is to take charge of the matter, shall allow the Doorkeeper to be present. I understood the gentleman from Maryland to state that the Doorkeeper was invited before them, and, therefore, I have no fault to find with their proceedings. I merely want to provide that he shall be allowed to be present at the sessions of the committee which is to take charge of the matter in future.

Mr. SEWARD. I have little to say about this case, because the whole thing lies in a nut-shell. It is made up from the record, and the whole question involved in this controversy is one of intention on the part of the Doorkeeper.

It appears that the book-keeper employed by Mr. Hackney has charged an excess of one hundred and ninety-eight thousand documents as being folded, which were never printed, and never delivered to the Doorkeeper. That fact appears over the signature of Mr. Hackney himself, and shows that somewhere there has been perpetrated a most outrageous fraud.

The only singular fact connected with this whole matter is this: while I give the committee great credit for their inquiry into this matter, and have no complaint to make against them, there is a most remarkable and singular fact connected with this whole transaction, and which ought to be looked into. It is this: the committee say there are other charges of corrupt and venal character preferred against Mr. Hackney, which the committee conceived it would not be proper to allude to. Now, sir, is it possible that persons should receive offices at the hands of the Doorkeeper which they consider valuable, and yet report to the committee delinquencies upon his part? Is it possible this can be so, and they still hold office under him?

It presents this question whether the rascality was in the clerk who kept the books and the men in the folding-room who circumvented the Doorkeeper, or whether they all conspired together to perpetrate this fraud? For it would be an exceedingly strange fact to me that the book-keeper, or superintendent of the folding-room, or a messenger, or a clerk, should hold an office under the Doorkeeper for six weeks or a month, and should continue to hold it after all these things were known to have transpired, and then should report privately to the committee that the Doorkeeper was perpetrating a fraud upon the Government, or the fact that he had domineered over them. Well, sir, the record has been made up and it cannot be avoided. Who made that record? Can any man in this House believe that the Doorkeeper himself, who was not the book-keeper, who could by no possibility be present when the documents were transferred from the office of the Superintendent of Public Printing to the folding-room, could keep the account of the books brought in from day to day, and distributed out among the folders. I do not know who the book-keeper is, nor who the messengers are, nor do I care. But that these transactions have been carried on for weeks by the subordinates of the Doorkeeper without his agency or authority, seems impossible.

There is another fact connected with this matter, which is important. As stated by the chairman of the committee, certain leaves of the original account-book, which had been detached from the book, have been found, the entries upon which, it is said, are in the hand-writing of the clerk. It is stated that the original entries had been changed, or corrected entries made in pencil marks. What I want to know is whether knowledge was brought home to Mr. Hackney that these leaves had been torn out by him; whether knowledge was brought home to him of the exact number of books brought into the folding-room, in order to see whether the fault was with the clerk; and whether the Doorkeeper had been circumvented and entrapped by some of his own officers. Unless the Doorkeeper can show that his confidence in his subordinates has been abused, and that they had done this without his knowledge, he must stand upon the record as guilty of all that has been said about him. I want to get at a knowledge of all these facts. The Doorkeeper could have no personal knowledge of the number of books folded, and he must certify upon information; and I want to know whether he knew that the returns made to him were not correct.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I will answer the gentleman. I do not, of course, desire to bring these facts unnecessarily before the country, or to scandalize Mr. Hackney; but I can produce before the House a witness whose character, I suppose, is well known to the gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. FAULKNER.] He states to the committee that he was directed by Mr. Hackney to make out his account for having folded documents to the amount of $125, and that he (Mr. Hackney) would certify and return it as correct. This person was Michael Price, whom Mr. Hackney requested Mr. FAULKNER to bring here, in order that he might make him assistant superintendent of the document-room. Mr. Price, as an honest man, refused to make out a false account of that nature, saying that he had folded no documents, and that he would make out no such charge. He is not a book-folder, but employed, under the direction of the Speaker, in removing old documents from the vaults of the Capitol.

Mr. SEWARD. I would like to know of the gentleman from Maryland whether the gentleman of whom he speaks notified the Doorkeeper that the statements upon his books were incorrect, and that his book-keeper was making out false accounts of the number of documents folded?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I understand that the superintendent states that he did so inform Mr. Hackney.

Mr. SEWARD. Well that is a very indefinite way of answering the question. "I understand," the gentleman says. I want to know if notice was brought home to Mr. Hackney by the superintendent or the clerk, that these false accounts were being made out, or that the books were improperly kept?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Mr. Hackney does not deny it.

Mr. SEWARD. The gentleman is a lawyer, and knows that when a charge is made against a man, he is not bound to deny it until he comes to trial upon the charge. If this gentleman to whom the member from Maryland refers, has retained office under the Doorkeeper with a knowledge that he was perpetrating these frauds, that fact would very seriously diminish the confidence which otherwise might be reposed in his statement.

Mr. CLEMENS. I call the gentleman to order. The House is not now engaged in investigating charges against the subordinates of Mr. Hackney, but against Mr. Hackney himself.

Mr. SEWARD. I am examining the statements of persons to see how they affect Mr. Hackney.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. The gentleman from Georgia makes an insinuation against a witness who testified against Mr. Hackney, upon the ground that he knew of the improper conduct which is here charged. I ask him on the other hand, when Mr. Hackney had been notified repeatedly of the conduct of his officers why he did not remove them, and why he retained them in office?

Mr. SEWARD. That is a question I cannot decide. Many incompetent men are employed about this Capitol; and one of the misfortunes in this case is, that the Doorkeeper is incompetent for the discharge of his duties. I am disposed to protect him against that weakness, and to ascertain how far he has been surrounded by designing men, who have made him a catspaw for his own destruction. It may not be very complimentary to Mr. Hackney to allude to his intelligence; but certainly he is a most impressive man, liable to be imposed upon by designing men in whom he has placed confidence. I have a paper here which has been sent to me, and which I desire to have read.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I object. The gentleman has objected to my having a paper read.

Mr. LETCHER. The gentleman has a right to have it read as a part of his speech.

Mr. SEWARD. It is an affidavit signed by the employes of the Doorkeeper. He is represented as having domineered over them, and as having made dishonorable proposals to them. This is an affidavit in contradiction.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the gentleman has a right to have it read as a part of his speech.

Mr. SEWARD. I want to get at the truth of this matter. I will go as far to punish dishonest men as any man in the House.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I withdraw my objection.

The paper was read, and is as follows:

District of Columbia, Washington county, to wit:

On this 15th day of May, 1858, before the subscriber, a justice of the peace in and for the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, personally appear the parties subscribing hereto, and being severally duly sworn according to law, make oath and say that they are now employed under R. B. Hackney, the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives; and that, in their personal and official intercourse with the said Hackney, they have always been treated in a gentlemanly and affable manner; and further, that they have never paid over, or been required or solicited to pay over, to the said R. B. Hackney, or any other person, any compensation whatever in consideration of their receiving or holding office under the said Hackney:

Mr. SEWARD. I will not detain the House much longer. I am willing to vote for a brief postponement of this matter, because if fraud has been perpetrated, as it unquestionably has been, the sooner we get at the parties and punish them, and get rid of them, the better for the country. But if the Doorkeeper is to be affected by our action, as he must be, I think we should ascertain whether he is the guilty party, or whether his confidence has been abused and himself deceived by his employes.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. The objection of the gentleman from Georgia that other parties may be implicated in this fraud, does not exonerate the Doorkeeper from the charges of the committee; nor does the paper which has been just read affect in any way these charges. It may be that black mail has been levied on a portion of the employes and the subordinates under him, and not on another portion. Already the committee that has been appointed has reported him to this House. The gentleman from Maryland, who made that report, testifies that Mr. Hackney was notified of the nature and character of these charges, and that he failed to purge himself of them, or to use any efforts for that purpose. Now, sir, after this report has been submitted, after several days have been allowed to the Doorkeeper, he comes in here and asks further time for investigation—not of the specific charges made by the committee, but of other charges barely alluded to as probably existing.

I then submit to the consideration of the House whether it is respectful to the committee which has made this report, to take the matter out of their hands and refer it to another committee, or a special committee, for the purpose of having the matter reinvestigated? For myself, I see no necessity for such a course. If these charges are untrue, Mr. Hackney has, doubtless, informed some of his friends here of their untruth, and they may be, or ought to be, authorized to say that these charges can be disproved. But no member of the House has made any intimation of the kind. I look upon the motion which has been made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. STEPHENS] as intended to delay action. I can say for myself that I have no desire to do Mr. Hackney, or any officer, injustice; but we are on the heel of the session. We have an immense amount of business to dispose of. If this matter be referred to a select committee, and they be required to report, another day or two may be consumed in discussion; and I presume that every gentleman here has made up his mind as to how he will vote. With a view, therefore, of bringing this matter to a speedy determination, and without desiring to occupy the House with any extended remarks, or to go into the merits of the question, I move the previous question.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the previous question, and I will renew it.

Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois. I withdraw it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I now offer the following resolution as an amendment for that reported by the Committee of Accounts:

Resolved, That the whole subject be referred to the select committee already raised to investigate the accounts of the Doorkeeper, and that the Doorkeeper be allowed to meet the committee and to examine witnesses.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do not propose—

Mr. PHILLIPS. Will the gentleman allow me to make an inquiry, to see if I understand his resolution? I want to know whether his resolution contemplates that the proceedings and findings of one committee shall be subject to the investigation of another?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. No, sir.

Mr. PHILLIPS. That is what I wanted to understand.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. It is my intention and desire that the facts upon which my vote will be predicated shall be inquired into and reported upon by some committee, and that my vote shall not be determined by vague and indefinite imputations. If it is true that there have been gross malpractices and venality on the part of the Doorkeeper, I will vote instantly, sir, to expel him. My object is not for time, merely for delay, but I want these facts reported to this House. I would not blacken the name of any mortal on earth, however humble, without the facts upon which I vote. I would not consign to infamy this Doorkeeper and his family unless he be guilty.

What I want is the facts. I listened to the speech of the honorable member from Maryland with a great deal of interest. He claimed for his committee that they had shown great leniency toward the Doorkeeper. That was the purport of his argument. Now, in all kindness, I must say to him, that he and I take very different views upon this subject. There is an insinuation, an imputation of malpractices, of gross corruption, and venality, on the part of the Doorkeeper. Well, I say that it was due to the Doorkeeper that the facts upon which that imputation is based should have been reported to the House, in order that the House might know upon what the committee founded that imputation.

One of the charges which the committee has brought forward is, that the Doorkeeper has appointed more employes than he had any right to do. Well, the committee do not inform us whether even that be true. They have given us no fact, no evidence, no proof. They have merely given us their opinion. Now, sir, I hold that committee in as high esteem as any gentleman upon this floor ought to do; but I think that the facts, the proof, the evidence, the testimony, should have been reported to this House, to let us judge of it. The committee, in this very report, use this language:

"Notwithstanding this express limitation of his authority and power, the Doorkeeper, it is believed, has issued his appointments to thirty or more persons who claim compensation for their services as messengers of the House."

The committee say that it is believed that he has done this; and that is the grave charge upon which the Doorkeeper is to be dismissed! That is the whole of it. Well, now, I happen to know, as a member upon this floor, and not otherwise, for I have not even inquired of the Doorkeeper, though I presented his paper here to-day, how many employes he has, and I also know that the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Mason,] when he was chairman of the Committee of Accounts, presented a report here, in which the committee recommended an increase of the present number of officers. Now, it may be true that the Doorkeeper, whilst awaiting the action of the House fixing the number of his employes, has temporarily employed some persons.

The committee say that he claims that there is a necessity for an increase of his force. Might he not do this, and yet not be a culprit? Why, sir, what did this House do? Why did not you act when Mr. Mason made that report to the House, proposing to fix the number of employes by law? Where is the negligence? It is on the part of the members of this House, in sending that report to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. It is now there unacted upon. Might not the Doorkeeper well suppose that the House would authorize him to employ the number which he thought necessary? Well, sir, have any of these persons been paid? The committee say expressly that their names have not been put upon the pay-roll. Is this a charge of delinquency and corruption which calls upon this House to expel the Doorkeeper; especially, sir, when, in the report of the committee, there are intimations of something even too dark to be inquired into? I say, lift the curtain. Let me see it. Let this House see it. Let me see the evidence of this venality. It is due to Hackney; it is due to his family; it is due to all who are to suffer after him. If the charge be true, I shall vote to expel him. But doth your law condemn a man until he is heard? I never have done, and never will do it. Nor would I kick a man out upon such charges as those specified in the report, while another grave charge is behind. It is before a select committee. I will await the report of that committee. I will not even prejudge the case. I do not know what their report will be. So far as I am concerned, I am for letting Mr. Hackney have the indulgence which he asked for in the paper which I presented this morning.

Now, what is the other charge? The first is that he has appointed too many persons to office. Why did not the committee give us the evidence of that? We know nothing except what is contained in this paper, and I say that most of the statements in it are incorrect in point of fact. So far as the charge of having appointed too many persons to office is concerned, I do not, in the existing state of facts in this House, consider that an act of corruption. It is known to the House that there is a proposition now pending before the House, reported by the Committee of Accounts, to increase the number of employes.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I think it is a clear usurpation on the part of the Doorkeeper, which this House ought not to tolerate. We have referred this question of an increase in the number of officers to the Committee of the Whole for examination, and, in the absence of any action by the committee, Mr. Hackney has taken the responsibility upon himself to determine for the committee and the House how many persons shall be employed, and has made the appointments, and incurred this heavy expense.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. If Mr. Hackney had used the contingent fund of the House to pay these employes, without the authority of this House, I should have censured him, and might have voted to expel him for it; but the committee do not report that he has done any such thing. The committee say, in their report, that these employes wait upon the grace of the House for their pay. But if Mr. Hackney had done any such thing, while I would not approve it, I would not expel him on that account.

Mr. LEITER. I propose to ask the attention of the gentleman from Georgia to the last paragraph of the second page of the report of the committee, where direct charges are made by the committee upon their responsibility. And they are made not only in that paragraph, but in the preceding paragraph, charging him with incompetency and with making false returns.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I was coming to that part of the report. The gentleman from Maryland said that what they had reported was a matter of record, and that the records show that the returns of the Doorkeeper were false, and that they state that fact upon their responsibility. But it is apparent to the House that Mr. Hackney did not make out those returns. They were made out by the book-keeper, who was a subordinate in the folding-room. Well, sir, suppose it was false. Suppose the return was incorrectly made, the committee does not undertake to say that Mr. Hackney made it. If the superintendent of the folding-room has made incorrect or corrupt entries, the Doorkeeper should remove him, and I have no doubt would. But it was said that Mr. Hackney had returned a certain number of documents folded, and that the Superintendent of Public Printing had returned another number as delivered; and the gentleman from Maryland got right up and said the number reported as returned by the Superintendent of Public Printing was a mistake. He says the number ought to have been one hundred and twenty-two thousand, and that the number reported was thirty or forty thousand too much.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. The gentleman misapprehended me. Perhaps I may have been unfortunate, as I often am, in making myself clear to the apprehension of all gentlemen. The account stated by the Clerk was made out, reducing the number of documents to the standard of the folding-room, of octavo volumes. By that computation the number, as stated by the Clerk, was a credit of one hundred and twenty-two thousand. But the actual number of volumes sent to the folding-room, including the quartos, was less than that stated.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. That was exactly the way I understood the gentleman. In other words, the entry, as it here stands, needs explanation. And yet this explanation of errors otherwise, I understand, Mr. Hackney has not been permitted to make. I understand the gentleman from Maryland that he holds him to the record.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. If the entire amount originally entered for folding had been paid, who would have been the beneficiary, the Doorkeeper or the subordinates who did the work?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do not know.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Under the law, would the Doorkeeper or the folder receive the pay?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. The person to whom the work was credited.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. My purpose was to obtain this information: when the amount reported by the Doorkeeper was presented, to whom would the money be paid—to the Doorkeeper or the folder?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It would be paid to the parties whose names were returned by the Doorkeeper.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. By whom would the money be paid?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. By the disbursing clerk, I suppose, and to the folders.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Does the Doorkeeper draw the money from the Treasury to pay his employes?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. No, sir; they are paid by the chief clerk of the House.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. How was it possible for the Doorkeeper to put the money into his pocket?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I have already explained that the persons drew the money who were returned as having done the work; but my information is, that Mr. Hackney has received part of the money paid by the Clerk to some of his subordinates.

Mr. SINGLETON. I would like to ask, for my own satisfaction, whether there is any proof that Mr. Hackney was privy to this matter?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I am informed that there is not the slightest evidence before the committee implicating Mr. Hackney in anything connected with these false entries upon the books.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire to inquire if those clerks who made the entries have been discharged?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I know nothing about it.

Mr. COX. The officers who have charge of the books are the first two who were upon the list read, certifying to the fairness of Mr. Hackney's conduct. I wish to state to the gentleman from Georgia that the superintendent of the folding-room has no control whatever over these officers, and is in no way connected with them. I make this statement in justice to the superintendent of the folding-room.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Very well; I do not admit that to be material at all in this stage of the proceedings. I take the position that there is no evidence reported. I want the committee to give me all the facts of the case, and show that Hackney is in any way connected with it. It may be that these were mistakes. I do not know how it is. The committee have received no explanation from anybody, so far as they have reported. We are all liable to mistakes, and these clerks may have committed errors. If they have made mistakes, or if they have acted corruptly, and Mr. Hackney did not receive the money arising from it, of course he ought not to be held guilty. What I want is investigation. The gentleman from Maryland intimated that Mr. Hackney received the money. Well, let us have the evidence in the case, and if that is shown, there is not a man in this House that would vote to expel him sooner than I would.

The gentleman had read a letter addressed by one of his employes to Mr. Hackney. I think the committee ought to have called witnesses, and confronted Mr. Hackney with that man, and investigated it thoroughly, before they allowed this Partisan shaft to be directed at Mr. Hackney through a committee of this House. I would have investigated it. If it be true that Mr. Hackney has received from any one of his subordinates, whether folders, pages, messengers, or his clerks in the folding-room, a single dime to put it into his own pocket, I want to know the fact; and if it is established by legal proof, you shall have my vote to expel him instantly.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I should be glad to see some further investigation into the details connected with these charges than has yet taken place; and I shall be willing to vote for that investigation, if I can be assured that it is not to result in interminable delay, or in postponing it.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will accept the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, requiring the committee to report in one week.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. COMINS. I desire to ask the gentleman from Georgia a question. I wish to know whether, if this subject is postponed one week, this officer is to remain in full possession of his office, and in the full control and possession of the books, accounts, and patronage of his office during that time?

THE CONGRESSIONAL GLOBE.

THE OFFICIAL PROCEEDINGS OF CONGRESS, PUBLISHED BY JOHN C. RIVES, WASHINGTON, D. C.

THIRTY-FIFTH CONGRESS, 1ST SESSION.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1858.

NEW SERIES....No. 138.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I shall act upon the principle of common law, that all men are presumed innocent until their guilt is made to appear. I shall let him remain as the Doorkeeper of the House until his guilt is manifested, and not an instant after. I think it due to him not to take any other course.

Mr. GILMAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Georgia to say that he would not defer to the judgment of a committee of the House in regard to the capacity or incapacity, or the qualification of any officer of this House?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I might be governed by the opinion of a committee upon some matters; but I certainly should not be governed absolutely by the opinion of a committee who report upon a subject-matter like this without the facts, and especially would I not do so when that report is coupled with insinuations which they say they have never investigated, and which would blacken the memory of the man they would expel. We might turn him out for incompetency or for committing mistakes, but I would not do even that if accompanied with vague charges of corruption.

I wish to say, as I did in the commencement of my remarks, that I do not know one thing connected with the facts of this case. I stand as an impartial juror, to judge by the facts when they shall be brought forward; and if the proof shall sustain the charges made, I shall vote to expel the Doorkeeper. I simply want to know the facts before I vote. I move the previous question.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the demand.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I called the previous question in conformity with my promise to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PHILLIPS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to allow me a moment.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. Will the gentleman from Georgia withdraw the previous question for a moment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman refuses to withdraw the demand.

Mr. SPINNER. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to allow me to move this amendment:

And that in the mean time the said R. B. Hackney be suspended from office, and that the duties of Doorkeeper be performed by the Sergeant at Arms.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will not; because I think that amendment would be doing him great injustice.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. If the previous question is sustained, will it be allowable for any member of the committee to speak again to the main question before it is put?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman reporting a measure is entitled to speak upon it.

The previous question was then seconded, and the main question ordered.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I desire to detain the House but a very few moments in reply to the gentleman from Georgia, who last addressed the House. The gentleman argued that there were no facts to support the report of the committee, in respect to the unusual large number of persons whom he had employed, which, the report says, was done without authority of law or usage, and against the direct admonition of the Committee of Accounts. It is evident that the gentleman from Georgia did not examine the report made by Mr. Hackney himself to the House, under a resolution passed by the House. If the gentleman will refer to that report, he will discover that Mr. Hackney reports to the House ninety-two persons in his employment. The committee assert, upon their responsibility, that he has even a larger number than he has reported. He says, by way of explaining Mr. Hackney's conduct, that it was not done corruptly, or in defiance of the control of the committee, because the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Mason] reported a bill from the committee allowing the Doorkeeper a larger number of messengers than he is now, by law, allowed to employ. The number of messengers provided for in that bill, was twenty-four. Mr. Hackney has appointed thirty-four. The number provided for in the bill offered by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEARING] was twenty-three. The only difference between the provisions of the bills of the gentleman from Kentucky and of the gentleman from New York, was, that under the former, eleven of these messengers were to be temporarily employed. Fourteen were authorized, with annual salaries, and eleven were to be dismissed at the expiration of each session of Congress. So that not only the express requirements of the law, as it at present exists, and that supervising control which the Committee of Accounts have always heretofore assumed over the Doorkeeper, in fixing the number of employes, have been disregarded; but he insists on keeping in office a larger number than is permitted either by law or usage, or the authority of the Committee of Accounts.

I cannot see, Mr. Speaker, how the facts can be more clear, more explicit, or more thoroughly known to gentlemen than they now are. It has been stated on the responsibility of honorable gentlemen as worthy of credit as is Mr. Hackney.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The committee has never reported that evidence. They have never submitted the facts under oath. The gentleman [Mr. KUNKEL] rises here and states that such a person told him so and so. I want to see the statement—the extent of it.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I do not intend to make any oath for what I say as a member of the House.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I do not mean on the oath of the members of the committee, but of the witnesses to whom the gentleman refers.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I want no further evidence than the statement made by the Doorkeeper himself, in which he admits that he has appointed a larger number of persons than either the law or the usage of the House permits him, and in defiance of the authority of your committee.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Has the Doorkeeper ever made that statement?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Yes, sir.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I should be happy to have the gentleman show it to me.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. There is the statement.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Does he state that he does it in defiance of the authority of the House?

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Will the gentleman from Maryland let me ask the gentleman from Georgia a question? There are two charges made in the report—excess of official appointments, and falsification of returns from the folding-room. In the answer of the Doorkeeper, he does not deny either of these charges. What evidence, then, does he want?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have never seen any answer from the Doorkeeper.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I know it; and therefore I say the answer here does not notice either of the charges.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. My resolution is to allow this matter to go to a committee. Let the Doorkeeper be notified, and let the committee hear his answer, and report what his answer may be. That is my resolution.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I desire the gentleman from Georgia to understand that the report of the committee makes two specific charges; and, in answer to that report, the Doorkeeper comes forward and sets forth a statement in this uncertain manner, but does not respond to either of those charges. I ask if that is not a confession of the truth of these charges?

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The Doorkeeper, as I understand, in the paper that was read, denies the correctness of several of the statements made by the committee, but asks that he may have a hearing on them; and he pledges himself to the House to show that he is not amenable to the charge.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know (for this discussion was going on when I came up from committee this morning) whether the number of persons appointed by the Doorkeeper exceeds not only the number allowed him by law, but also the number recommended by the Committee of Accounts, when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MASON] was its chairman?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It does.

Mr. HOUSTON. I desire to know by what number? and then I desire to ask the gentleman two other questions in regard to the course the committee has pursued. One is, whether the committee has reported the testimony on which it bases its resolution? Another is, whether the committee was authorized to examine witnesses in the investigation of this subject?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I am now replying to the gentleman from Georgia; when I have finished with that part of the subject, I will reply to the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Georgia, a moment ago, reiterated the allegation that the Committee of Accounts had given no opportunity to Mr. Hackney to explain the charges against him. I distinctly stated, when I was up before, that the committee had given him such opportunity—had sent him a written notice explaining the grave charges made against him before that committee, and asking him for his explanation. I ask the Clerk to read the note addressed to Mr. Hackney by the chairman of the Committee of Accounts.

The letter was read, as follows:

Sir: The Committee of Accounts have had its attention called to the subject of the number of documents purporting to have been folded and returned on the pay-rolls by you to the Clerk's office.

The committee have reason to believe that there are very great errors in your returns, and therefore request your attendance at our committee-room immediately, in order to afford you the opportunity of submitting to us such explanations as you may be able or disposed to give.

JOHN DICK, Chairman.

Mr. R. B. HACKNEY, Doorkeeper House of Representatives.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. After this report was submitted to the House, on Thursday last, on the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. NICHOLS,] this subject was postponed until to-day, to give Mr. Hackney an opportunity to answer the report. I had a conversation with the learned counsel who prepared his reply, to whom I candidly stated the nature of the charges brought against him. I cannot say what passed between that gentleman and myself, because that would be a breach of confidence.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Will the gentleman allow me—

Mr. LOVEJOY. I object to this cross-firing; we are wasting time this way.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Has the gentleman a right to object?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Georgia has a right to make a personal explanation.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I have a right to make an inquiry if the gentleman yields me the floor.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that it cannot be done except the inquiry appertains to a personal explanation.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. It does; and I never interrupt a gentleman for any other purpose.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has a right to be heard if he rises for that purpose.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. The gentleman from Maryland has just alluded to the notice that was given to Mr. Hackney to appear before the committee in relation to the entries in the folding-room. I wish now to inquire of the gentleman if Mr. Hackney did not appear?

Mr. LOVEJOY. I submit that that is not a personal explanation.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I am not accountable for the inattention of any gentleman upon this floor. In the remarks which I had first the honor to submit to the House, I stated that he had appeared before the committee, and that the explanations he gave there, in my judgment, only incriminated him the more.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I desire to ask the gentleman another question, for I wish to elicit the facts. Did not Mr. Hackney state distinctly to the committee that this matter was under the charge of his subordinates, and that, personally, he knew nothing about it?

Mr. LOVEJOY. I must insist upon my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is of opinion that the interrogatories of the gentleman from Georgia are not exactly in the nature of personal explanation.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. Very well, sir.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. Will the gentleman from Maryland indulge me for one moment?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It will take me off from the subject upon which the gentleman from Georgia has just interrogated me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects to any interruptions except for personal explanation.

Mr. TAYLOR, of Louisiana. I wish merely to say one word. I hope the objection will be withdrawn.

Mr. LOVEJOY. No, sir, I must insist on it. We are wasting time here to the detriment of the public business.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It may be true, and perhaps it is true, that Mr. Hackney did say to the committee that he knew nothing about the accounts of the folding-room, but at the same time, with the inconsistency that always accompanies falsehood, he pretended to give explanations. He said he knew nothing about it, yet he volunteered to make explanations; and I have said to the House before, and say now to the gentleman from Georgia, that the more explanations he gave the more apparent became the inconsistency.

Mr. KELLOGG. I am anxious to ask one question.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I must object.

Mr. KELLOGG. If my colleague will hear the question, I am sure he will not object. I desire to know if there is any evidence—

Mr. DEAN. I object.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I did not hear the gentleman's question, or I would have answered it cheerfully.

Mr. KELLOGG. My question is whether there is any evidence—

Mr. EDIE. I object.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. It is apparent that I must necessarily be very incoherent in my remarks. The continuity of my thoughts is broken up, and I do not know that I make myself clear to gentlemen. The fault, I think, is not mine. It is to be attributed to the frequent interruptions which I have suffered. The gentleman from Georgia, upon those great principles which are not only common to the body of the common law, but to the hearts of all good men, claims some hearing for the accused. I hope I am as willing and as ready, on all occasions, to extend that personal indulgence to any man who may have grave charges brought against him. But in this instance it does seem to me that the gentleman from Georgia has signally misplaced his sympathies. These subjects are so much matters of notoriety that you might as well require me to prove the day of the month, or the hour of the day; and they are so well understood by the members of this House that it seems to me that I am engaged unnecessarily in bringing home to their convictions facts which are not denied, and cannot be denied, whatever delay the House may see proper to accord to Mr. Hackney.

I come now to answer the inquiries of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Housron] in reference to the number of the Doorkeeper's employes exceeding the number allowed by law, and allowed by the Committee of Accounts. Under the bill reported by the gentleman from Kentucky, [Mr. Mason,] the number of employes allowed to the Doorkeeper was fifty-four, including the pages. Under the bill reported by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SEARING,] the number allowed was fifty-three; and the House will remember that it was stated, at the time that report was handed in, that the bill had been drawn after consulting Mr. Hackney, and was perfectly satisfactory to him. But notwithstanding the fact that neither of these bills allowed a greater aggregate number than fifty-four persons, Mr. Hackney has himself reported to the House that he has ninety-two persons in his employment. What other evidence do gentlemen want to prove to them that he is exceeding his authority, exceeding the number allowed him by law, and exceeding the number allowed him by the bill reported from the Committee of Accounts heretofore? It seems to me so clear, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot stultify the understanding of the House by dwelling any longer upon this part of the subject.

I was disposed to believe, from the outset, sir, that Mr. Hackney was influenced in this strange conduct by the easy good nature of his disposition, or, as the committee have stated in their report, by his incompetency, or want of that decision of character and firmness which his position required. The committee believed so from the beginning, and were, therefore, unwilling to pursue him any further than their strict duty required; and if I have said anything this morning respecting Mr. Hackney that seems harsh, it has been brought on by himself and those who seem to be his advocates here, in challenging proof of other matters, which the committee have done nothing more than barely allude to, as being already the subject of investigation by a select committee of the House, who have proper authority to examine witnesses. The Committee of Accounts did not examine into the charges alluded to in their report—and I say it in exculpation of them—because they had no authority, under the rules of the House, to summon witnesses and swear them; and I, for one, was unwilling to take proof and report it here—placing it on record officially against a man—unless it could be done in a judicial manner.

I hope the gentleman from Alabama is answered. But, sir, I deny that the committee were bound to investigate these charges of venality and corruption against the Doorkeeper. They had no authority to do so. It would not have come within the scope of their duty if they had. They would have been exposed to more severe censure than has already been indulged in by the gentleman from Georgia, [Mr. STEPHENS.] And I must be permitted to say that the comments of the gentleman were both unnecessary and unwarranted by the rules of proceeding in this body. I am, for one, not disposed to submit to them, come from what quarter they may.

Now, sir, to the charge—for I desire to confine myself solely and exclusively to the subject-matter in the report. Why is delay asked for? Has not delay been granted him? Has he not been before the select committee for the last three months with his witnesses, where these subjects have been investigated? If he has any defense to make, let him make it before that tribunal which has already been constituted to investigate these matters. Why raise another committee? If the charges of venality and corruption are not substantiated, and the select committee appointed to try the charges of venality and corruption standing against him, clear him, it may then, perhaps, with some propriety, be construed into a censuring of the Committee of Accounts for alluding to these charges in general terms. The committee brought it to the knowledge of Mr. Hackney that these accounts had been falsified. It is their duty simply to audit and pass upon the accounts that are presented for their inspection. But if the House retains in its employ a principal officer, who is in the habit of certifying to false returns, and the Committee of Accounts are to pass upon those returns, permit me to say that the whole power of this body cannot impose upon me the duty of sitting upon that committee to audit such accounts, and direct them to be paid out of the contingent fund.

I will not speak of other charges, known to almost every member, which have been brought against the Doorkeeper. It is an unpleasant subject to me. I do not desire to prolong this discussion further; but I will say in conclusion, that I think the country expects it of the House to summarily dispose of this officer without delay. He has had all the time necessary to prepare his defense. But, instead of preparing any defense, or making any issue before the House in reference to the truth of the allegations, he merely asks for further delay. Were that not unreasonable, I should be disposed to extend it to him. But believing it unreasonable, the committee have instructed me to insist upon the disposal of the resolution as they have reported it.

Mr. FAULKNER. I greatly deplore the condition of this business, not only on account of

Mr. Hackney, but on account of his estimable and excellent family. I think the motion of the gentleman from Georgia should prevail, and that the subject should be referred to the select committee now engaged in investigating charges against Mr. Hackney. I will vote for that reference. But to proceed with the inquiry which I propose to make of the gentleman from Maryland. If the Committee of Accounts had limited their report to the charges strictly within their jurisdiction, I should feel fully prepared to act upon the resolution submitted by them; but I desire to know from him whether the adoption of his resolution might not be construed as indorsing certain charges of malpractice and venality which are alluded to in his report, but of which we have no evidence, and of which it does not appear the Committee of Accounts have had any evidence before them?

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I can only say that the gentleman must judge for himself. If he thinks this House is not competent to discharge its duty, in reference to the conduct of its Doorkeeper, without further investigation, he must vote for the reference. I am convinced myself of the facts stated in the report of the committee, and shall vote against the reference. I shall vote for his instant expulsion; not because I am disposed to condemn him upon grounds of venality and corruption, but because I think the fact of his utter incompetency has been fully proven; and to delay the matter is to embarrass the business of the Committee of Accounts and of the House.

Mr. FAULKNER. The gentleman has not met the full point of my inquiry. I distinguish between these matters which are within the jurisdiction of the Committee of Accounts, which they have fully investigated, and upon which they have made their report, and these indefinite allusions to malpractice and venality, which that committee have not investigated, and of which they exhibit no proof. These charges are before a select committee, and upon which no report has yet been made. I think justice requires, since the Committee of Accounts have indorsed these charges of malpractice, that we should wait until next Monday, when a report may be expected from the select committee on these specific charges.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I must do Mr. Hackney the justice to say that I do not condemn him in that respect, however strong the rumors may be against him.

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia. I will further modify my resolution by adding, "and that the committee have leave to sit during the sessions of the House."

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. Would it be in order to move to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Georgia?

The SPEAKER. It would not, the main question having been ordered to be put.

The question recurring on the amendment of Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, it was put, and the amendment was disagreed to.

The question recurring on the adoption of the resolution reported by the committee,

Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was then taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 142, nays 33; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Anderson, Andrews, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bennett, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Bocoek, Bowie, Branch, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Chapman, Ezra Clark, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochran, Cockrell, Colfax, Conins, Cragin, James Crain, Burton Craigie, Crawford, Curry, Darnell, Davidson, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dawes, Dean, Dick, Dimmick, Dodd, Durfee, Edie, Edmundson, Eustis, Farnsworth, Fenton, Foley, Foster, Garnett, Garrett, Gillis, Gilman, Gilmer, Goode, Goodwin, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Grow, Lawrence W. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Harkin, Hawkins, Hill, Hoard, Horton, Houston, Howard, Hughes, Huyler, George W. Jones, J. Gancy Jones, Owen Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Leidy, Leiter, Lovejoy, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Miles, Moore, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Niblack, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Peyton, Phillips, Pike, Potter, Powell, Quitman, Ready, Reagan, Ricard, Ritchie, Robbins, Royce, Sandidge, Scales, Scott, Henry M. Shaw, John Sherman, Shorter, Robert Smith, William Smith, Spinney, Stallworth, Stanton, William Stewart, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Thayer, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Whiteley, Winslow, Wood, Wortendyke, John V. Wright, and Zolllicoffer—142.

NAYS—Messrs. Billingshurst, Bryan, Caruthers, Caskie, Clawson, Dowdell, Elliott, Florence, Gooch, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, Keitt, Letcher, Humphrey Marshall, Mott, Nichols, Pendleton, Phelps, Pottle, Russell, Seward, Sickles, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, Talbot, Tappan, Tripp, Ward, Wilson, and Woodson—33.

So the resolution was agreed to.

Pending the call,

Mr. McQUEEN stated that Mr. BONHAM had paired off with Mr. WALDRON for one week.

Mr. BRYAN said: Believing the dismissal too summary, I vote "no."

Mr. COX stated that he had paired off with Mr. C. B. COCHRANE.

Mr. FLORENCE stated that Mr. LANDY was detained at home by indisposition in his family.

Mr. SICKLES said: I do not think the accused has had a fair opportunity to be heard in his defense. I, therefore, vote "no."

Mr. SINGLETON said: I vote "no." I do it, not for the purpose of protecting the Doorkeeper in anything wrong, but because I think the case of corruption has not been clearly made out.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee, said: For the same reasons expressed by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, I vote "no."

Mr. CLEMENS. I object to any further excuses being made.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. I vote "ay." I think this—

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. ZOLLICOFFER. This investigation ought to have been pursued further; but believing that the Doorkeeper is at least incompetent, I vote in the affirmative.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I desire to say—

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. ELLIOTT. I object to condemning a man without a trial, and I vote "no."

Mr. FLORENCE. Did I not understand the Chair to decide that gentlemen had a right to explain?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not say so.

Mr. FLORENCE. I voted against this thing because—

Mr. CLEMENS. I call the gentleman to order.

Mr. FLORENCE. Well, I desire—

[Cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is out of order.

Mr. HILL. I desire—

Mr. CLEMENS. I object.

Mr. HILL. Out of respect to the committee, I will make my vote "ay."

Mr. TALBOT said, (Mr. CLEMENS calling to order at the same time,) I cannot vote against a man without giving him a full and fair trial, and I vote "no." [Laughter.]

Mr. GARTRELL. I vote "ay" for the purpose of moving a reconsideration.

Mr. LOVEJOY. I desire to know whether there is any mode of enforcing the 42d rule, which requires every member present to vote unless excused?

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. None in the world. You cannot make a man answer.

The vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland, moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. GREENWOOD demanded the yeas and nays.

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE called for tellers on the yeas and nays.

Tellers were refused.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The motion to reconsider was then laid on the table.

ELECTION OF DOORKEEPER.

Mr. HASKIN. I rise to a question of privilege. The House now being without a Doorkeeper, I propose the adoption of the following resolution, and upon it I call the previous question:

Resolved, That Darins Truesdell, of New York, be, and he is hereby, appointed Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, for the Thirty Fifth Congress.

Mr. SHORTER. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. FLORENCE. I object to the resolution.

Mr. PHELPS. I ask to have the 14th rule read.

Mr. BOCOCK. I rise to a question of order. It is not in order as a question of privilege to move to appoint a particular person as Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives. It would be in order to move to proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the question of order.

Rule 14 was then read, as follows:

"In all cases of election by the House of its officers, the vote shall be taken viva voce."

Mr. HASKIN. I then move that the House proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina, moved (at half past two o'clock) that the House adjourn.

The question was taken, and on a division of the House there were—ayes 71, noes 112.

Mr. ENGLISH. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. KEITT. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana to withdraw his demand for the yeas and nays, with a view of seeing whether we cannot come to a conclusion on this matter. I do not think that little advantages ought to be snatched in this way. I do not think that anybody anticipated the result—at all events nobody should have made preparations for it.

Mr. MORGAN. Is debate in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

Mr. MORGAN. Then I object.

Mr. KEITT. I want to have this thing arranged. I belong to no party; go into no caucus—

The SPEAKER. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. HASKIN. I move now to proceed to the election of a Doorkeeper.

The SPEAKER. The pending question is a motion to adjourn, and on that the yeas and nays have been demanded.

Mr. HARRIS, of Illinois. I understood that the motion to adjourn was withdrawn.

Mr. KEITT. It will be withdrawn if we agree to go into the election of Doorkeeper to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. Is the motion to adjourn withdrawn?

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. No, sir.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 87, nays 103; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Boccock, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burns, Caskie, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Conning, Cox, Burton Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Faulkner, Fenton, Florence, Foley, Garrett, Garrell, Gillis, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Leidy, Macley, McQueen, Miles, Miller, Mills, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Rangan, Ruffin, Russell, Seales, Scott, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Ward, Watkins, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Woodson, Wortendyke, John V. Wright, and Zollcoffer—87.

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Andrews, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Campbell, Caruthers, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Colfax, Comins, James Craig, Curtis, Darnell, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Daves, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Eustis, Farnsworth, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Haskin, Hill, Hoard, Hopkins, Horton, Houston, Howard, Hughes, Hayler, Jewett, George W. Jones, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leiter, Leitcher, Lovejoy, Humphrey Marshall, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Isaac N. Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Phelps, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Ready, Richie, Robbins, Roberts, Rorock, Seward, Aaron Shaw, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Robert Smith, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Tripp, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Cadwallader C. Washburn, Elihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Wood—103.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Pending the vote,

Mr. WALBRIDGE stated that his colleague, Mr. LEACH, was still detained in his room by indisposition.

Mr. COX stated that he had ascertained that his pair with Mr. CLARK B. COCHRANE had expired on Saturday last, and that he was at perfect liberty to vote.

Mr. GILMAN stated that his colleague, Mr. MORSE, was still confined to his room by indisposition.

After the announcement of the vote as above recorded,

Mr. HASKIN said: In order that the time of the House may not be unnecessarily consumed,

I propose to withdraw my motion, and to substitute in place of it this proposition: that we proceed to-morrow, immediately after reading the Journal, to the election of Doorkeeper, and that in the mean time the property which should be in the charge of the Doorkeeper shall be taken charge of by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

The gentleman whose name I have introduced is one of the Assistant Doorkeepers from my district. I know he comes up to the Jacksonian standard, and I wished to call the attention of the House to him.

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to amend the proposition by inserting twelve o'clock.

Mr. HASKIN. The time I propose, is immediately after finishing the reading of the Journal.

Mr. CLEMENS demanded the yeas and nays on his amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered, only four members voting therefor.

Mr. MORGAN moved the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered.

The question was first taken on the amendment, and it was not agreed to—ayes forty-five, nays not counted.

The question then recurred on the original proposition, and it was agreed to.

Mr. PHELPS moved to reconsider the vote by which the proposition was agreed to, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

EMPLOYÉS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MASON. I desire to offer a resolution fixing the number, pay, and compensation of the employes of the Doorkeeper before he is elected. It will be then understood by him, and all persons whom he may select, what their number and compensation is. If it is not found sufficient, the Committee of Accounts are at all times authorized to employ a force for temporary purposes.

Mr. COX. I object to that resolution.

Mr. MASON. I move to suspend the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair cannot entertain that motion now.

Mr. GROW. The special committee on printing instructed me, some time ago, to report a bill to the House separating the folding-room from the charge of the Doorkeeper. This, probably, is the fittest time to bring it up for consideration.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. I desire to know why the motion to suspend the rules is not in order?

The SPEAKER. There was a proposition made on Saturday, by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CLARK,] to discharge the Judiciary Committee from the further consideration of a memorial. That proposition came before the House on Saturday by unanimous consent, which operated as a suspension of the rules; and until that matter is disposed of, the Chair is of opinion that it is not in order to receive another motion to suspend the rules, inasmuch as we are acting, by unanimous consent, under a suspension of the rules. It was on that ground that the proposition of the gentleman from Mississippi was ruled out of order.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois. On that ground I objected, on Saturday, to the introduction of the resolution of the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GROW. The special committee on printing have instructed me to report a bill which I send to the Chair.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the committee cannot report now, for the reason that the Chair has given to the gentleman from Kentucky.

IMPEACHMENT OF JUDGE WATROUS.

The SPEAKER. The first business in order is the consideration of the resolution of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. CLARK,] to discharge the Committee on the Judiciary from the further consideration of the memorial of Mr. Alexander, in the matter of the impeachment of Judge Watrous.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Illinois, demanded the previous question.

The previous question was seconded, and the main question ordered; and, under its operation, the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. CRAIGE, of Carolina, moved to reconsider the vote just taken, and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ADMISSION OF NEW STATES.

Mr. QUITMAN. I now move to suspend the rules, to enable me to introduce the joint resolution concerning the admission of new States into the Union, which I endeavored to introduce this morning.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I demand the yeas and nays upon that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. GILLIS. I would inquire of the gentleman from Mississippi whether this resolution, if adopted, would exclude Oregon?

Mr. QUITMAN. I would merely reply—
[Loud cries of "Order!"]

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 88, nays 88; as follows:

YEAS.—Messrs. Ahl, Anderson, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Bocoek, Bowie, Branch, Burns, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, John Cochrane, Cockrell, Corning, Cox, James Craig, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Mississippi, Dimmick, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Eustis, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Gartrell, Gilmer, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Lawrence W. Hall, Hawkins, Hill, Houston, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, J. Gancy Jones, Keith, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Leidy, Letcher, McQueen, Humphrey Marshall, Mason, Maynard, Miles, Millson, Moore, Noble, P. Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Quintman, Ready, Reagan, Ruffin, Sandridge, Seales, Scott, Seward, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Singleton, Robert Smith, William Smith, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, Trible, Underwood, Ward, Watkins, White, Whiteley, Winslow, Woodson, Wortendyke, John V. Wright, and Zollcofer—88.

NAYS.—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Andrews, Arnold, Bingham, Bingham, Blair, Bliss, Blunt, Burlingame, Campbell, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, Colfax, Comins, Cragin, Curtis, Darnell, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Massachusetts, Dwyer, Dean, Dick, Dodd, Durfee, Farnsworth, Fenton, Gilman, Gooch, Goodwin, Grainger, Grow, Robert H. Hall, Hoard, Hopkins, Horton, Howard, Hughes, Jewett, George W. Jones, Owen Jones, Kelsey, Kigore, Knapp, Lott, Lovjoy, Maclay, McKibbin, Mattson, Miller, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mot, Nichols, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Powell, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Roce, Russell, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Spinnier, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Wade, Walbridge, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Elhu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, Wilson, and Wood—88.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. RUSSELL stated that, not wishing to exclude Oregon from admission into the Union, he voted "no."

PROCEEDINGS IN COMMITTEE.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That between the hours of four and five o'clock p. m. of each day prior to the 29th instant, the House, or the Committee of the Whole House, or the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, may take a recess until seven o'clock, p. m., and preceding each recess debate in committee shall be confined to the pending question.

Resolved, That the names of members absent without leave of the House, on the last vote by yeas and nays preceding a recess or adjournment, shall be entered on the Journal, and reported in the Globe as absent without leave.

Resolved, That on Friday and Saturday, the 21st and 22d of May, 1858, private bills, to the passage of which no objection shall be made, shall first be considered and disposed of in Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. Do the gentleman's resolutions provide that the House or the Committee of the Whole may take a recess?

Mr. CHAFFEE. Yes, sir.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I do not see any necessity for that.

Mr. CLEMENS. I demand the yeas and nays on the motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. SICKLES, (at half past three o'clock, p. m.) I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was disagreed to.

Mr. WASHBURN, of Maine. I would suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts that he modify his resolution so as to provide that no vote shall be taken after the recess, except upon motions that the committee rise and that the House adjourn.

Mr. CHAFFEE. I accept that modification.

Mr. LETCHER. I desire to suggest to the gentleman from Massachusetts an amendment to the resolution providing that the names of the absentees shall be reported. It is that he should add that the pay of the absentees for that day be deducted, and also that any member who shall sleep during the session of the House shall have his pay stopped. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHN COCHRANE. I would suggest another amendment, that he should provide that no man shall sleep during the sessions of the House.

Mr. BLISS. If the rules shall be suspended I shall offer the following as a substitute for the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts:

Resolved, That during the present, and the next week, it shall be in order each day for the Committee of the Whole to take a recess until half past seven o'clock, p. m., provided that no votes shall be taken at such evening sessions except on motions that the committee do rise and the House adjourn.

Mr. SMITH, of Tennessee. The substitute of the gentleman from Ohio would do some good, but the resolutions of the gentleman from Massachusetts would certainly obstruct the business of the House, as every member must see when he studies them. I, therefore, hope they will not be adopted.

Mr. SANDIDGE. I would like to make an inquiry of the gentleman who introduces this resolution. I wish to know whether these night sessions are for the purpose of transacting business? If we are to come here merely for the purpose of resolving ourselves into a debating society, I shall vote against it. I am willing to vote for evening sessions to transact the business of the House.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Can the question be taken upon the resolutions separately?

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposes so, if the resolutions were in.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Let us have the regular order of business. I call for that.

The SPEAKER. The motion to suspend the rules is the regular order of business.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I move to lay the resolutions on the table.

The SPEAKER. The resolutions have not been received.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. CHAFFEE demanded tellers upon the question.

Tellers were ordered; and Messrs. BLISS and BARKSDALE were appointed.

The question was taken; and the tellers reported—yeas seventy-four, not two thirds of a quorum.

So the rules were not suspended.

BRITISH INTERFERENCE.

Mr. BARKSDALE, by unanimous consent, offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be requested to communicate to this House, if not incompatible with the public interests, any information in his possession in relation to the firing into, boarding, or searching vessels belonging to the United States, in the Gulf of Mexico, by British ships of war.

Mr. LEITER. I would suggest to the gentleman to add "or on the coast of Cuba."

Mr. BARKSDALE. I accept the amendment.

Mr. SICKLES. I suggest to the gentleman that he add "and in the ports of Cuba."

Mr. BARKSDALE. I think the resolution as it now stands is sufficiently comprehensive.

The resolution was adopted.

OFFICE OF DOORKEEPER.

Mr. MASON. I ask the consent of the House to offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the compensation of the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives shall hereafter be $2,000 per annum, and that he be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ a superintendent of the folding-room at a compensation of $1,500 per annum, and that he may employ under the direction of the Committee of Accounts of the House of Representatives, such number of folders and laborers as may be deemed necessary to perform the work; and also that he may employ under the direction of the aforesaid committee two horses during the session of Congress, and that he may receive a suitable allowance for expenses in sending messages and dispatches by messengers and pages.

And be it further resolved, That the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to employ not exceeding fourteen messengers, at a compensation of three dollars per day each per annum; and not exceeding eleven messengers, at a compensation of three dollars each per day during the session of Congress; and not exceeding four laborers, at a compensation of one dollar and fifty cents each per day during the year; and not exceeding five laborers, at a compensation of one dollar and fifty cents per day each during the session of Congress; and not exceeding twelve pages, between the ages of ten and sixteen years, at a compensation of two dollars per day each during the session of Congress.

And be it further resolved, That the Doorkeeper have deducted from his pay a sufficient amount to pay any contract made by him not authorized by this resolution, or without authority of this House.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I object; because, in the opinion of the Committee of Accounts, the compensation is inadequate and the number not sufficient.

Mr. HUGHES. I move that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. MASON. I move to suspend the rules, to enable me to offer the resolutions which have been read.

The House divided; and there were—yeas 118, nays 40.

Mr. COX demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

So the rules were suspended (two thirds voting in favor thereof.)

Mr. MASON. I move the previous question upon the adoption of the resolution.

Mr. GARNETT. I would suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that he should modify his resolution so as to authorize the Committee of Accounts to pay to those employes whom Mr. Hackney has employed during the session, and who have actually rendered services, a fair compensation for the time they have been employed.

Mr. HOUSTON. Let that matter come up by itself.

Mr. SMITH, of Illinois. I want to appeal to the gentlemen from Kentucky to modify his resolution, so as to authorize the employment of twenty pages—six more than he has embraced in his resolution. I believe if there is anything in which we should be liberal, it should be in employing the boys of indigent persons in this city.

Mr. MASON. The House can order them, if it wants them.

Mr. EUSTIS. Is it in order to move to lay the whole subject upon the table?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. EUSTIS. Then I make that motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky—

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. I object to debate.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. I do not wish to debate the matter, but simply to make a request.

The SPEAKER. That is in the nature of debate.

Mr. TAYLOR, of New York. Hardly in the nature of debate. I wish to ask the gentleman from Kentucky to withdraw his demand until I can move to refer the resolution to the Committee of Accounts.

Mr. MASON. I cannot.

The previous question was seconded; and the main question ordered to be put.

Mr. KELLY (at three o'clock and fifty minutes) moved that the House adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I call for a separate vote upon the different resolutions.

The question was then taken on the first resolution; and it was agreed to.

The question recurring upon the adoption of the second resolution—

Mr. CLEMENS. I move to insert fourteen pages in the place of twelve.

The SPEAKER. No amendment is in order.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. Does the resolution propose to appropriate money?

The SPEAKER. It does not.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

Mr. JONES, of Tennessee. What effect will the laying of this resolution on the table have upon the other resolutions?

The SPEAKER. It would be the rejection of this one.

Mr. KUNKEL, of Maryland. As a member of the Committee of Accounts, I desire to state—

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. COX. Can there be any amendment hereafter of the first resolution?

The SPEAKER. There can be no amendment.

The question was taken on the motion to lay on the table the second resolution; and it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the third resolution; and it was adopted.

The question then recurred on the third resolution; and it was adopted.

Mr. MASON moved to reconsider the votes by which the several resolutions were adopted; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

TARIFF REVISION.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania. I ask the unanimous consent of the House to offer the following resolution:

Whereas, the existing tariff has been found inadequate to supply the Government with revenue, and has proved itself a source of embarrassment to the trade and interests of the country: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee of Ways and Means be instructed to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill revising the present tariff, abolishing foreign valuation, and substituting specific duties, and home valuation, where necessary, to retain ad valorem duties, and so augmenting the duties on articles coming into competition with domestic manufactures and products as to afford increased protection to American industry and labor.

Mr. McQUEEN. I object.

Mr. MORRIS, of Pennsylvania, moved to suspend the rules, and on that motion demanded the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was not agreed to—there being, on a division—yeas 81, nays 96.

The question was taken on Mr. MORRIS's motion; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 86, nays 101; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Abbott, Adrain, Ahl, Andrews, Bennett, Billingshurst, Bingham, Bliss, Buffinton, Burlingame, Case, Chaffee, Ezra Clark, Clawson, John Cochrane, Colfax, Comins, Corning, Cragin, Curtis, Dammrell, Davis of Maryland, Davis of Massachusetts, Davis of Iowa, Dawes, Deau, Dodd, Durfee, Eustis, Fenton, Foster, Gilman, Gilmer, Gooch, Goodwin, Granger, Grow, Robert B. Hall, Hoard, Horton, Howard, Kellogg, Kelsey, Kilgore, Knapp, Leidy, Leiter, Humphrey Marshall, Matteson, Maynard, Morgan, Morrill, Edward Joy Morris, Oliver A. Morse, Mott, Olin, Palmer, Parker, Pettit, Pike, Potter, Pottle, Ready, Ritchie, Robbins, Roberts, Royce, John Sherman, Judson W. Sherman, Sickles, Spinner, Stanton, William Stewart, Tappan, Thayer, Thompson, Tompkins, Underwood, Wade, Walbridge, Cadwalader C. Washburn, Ellihu B. Washburne, Israel Washburn, White, Wilson, Wood, and Zollner—86.

NAYS—Messrs. Anderson, Arnold, Atkins, Avery, Barksdale, Blair, Boeck, Bowie, Branch, Bryan, Burns, Caskie, Chapman, John B. Clark, Clay, Clemens, Cobb, Cockerill, Cox, James Craig, Burton Craige, Crawford, Curry, Davidson, Davis of Indiana, Davis of Mississippi, Dowdell, Edmundson, Elliott, English, Farnsworth, Faulkner, Florence, Foley, Garnett, Garrett, Goode, Greenwood, Gregg, Groesbeck, Lawrence W. Hall, Thomas L. Harris, Hawkins, Hill, Hopkins, Houston, Hughes, Huyler, Jackson, Jenkins, Jewett, George W. Jones, J. Glancy Jones, Owen Jones, Keitt, Kelly, Jacob M. Kunkel, Lawrence, Letcher, Lovejoy, Maclay, McKibbin, McQueen, Samuel S. Marshall, Mason, Miles, Miller, Millson, Moore, Isaac N. Morris, Niblack, Pendleton, Peyton, Phelps, Phillips, Powell, Quitman, Reagan, Ruffin, Russell, Sandidge, Seales, Scott, Aaron Shaw, Henry M. Shaw, Shorter, Singleton, Robert Smith, Samuel A. Smith, William Smith, Stallworth, Stephens, Stevenson, James A. Stewart, Talbot, George Taylor, Miles Taylor, Watkins, Whiteley, and Winslow—101.

So (two thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

Pending the call,

Mr. WRIGHT, of Tennessee, stated that on this question he had paired off with Mr. CAMPBELL, of Ohio. He would have voted against the suspension of the rules.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I rise to a question of order. I find on my desk a Calendar, announcing the order of business on the Speaker's table. I desire to know if it is in order to supersede that Calendar by independent motions of gentlemen all over the Hall?

The SPEAKER. It is in order.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. Then the Calendar might as well not be printed.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE ARTS.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I present to the House a memorial, signed by a large number of the artists of the United States, who pray for the encouragement of the arts by Congress, and especially pointing out the embellishment of our costly national edifices as affording a fair opportunity for the gratification of their wishes in this particular. Approving, as I do, of their view, I offer the following resolution for adoption by the House:

Resolved, That the memorial of artists of the United States be, and the same is, hereby referred to a select committee of five, to be appointed by the Speaker, with instructions to report on the expediency of granting the petition of the memorialists; and with power to report by bill or otherwise.

Mr. CRAIGE, of North Carolina. I object.

Mr. MARSHALL, of Kentucky. I move to suspend the rules.

Mr. DAVIS, of Mississippi. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and thereupon (at twenty minutes past four o'clock) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

TUESDAY, May 18, 1858.

Prayer by Rev. WILLIAM PINCKNEY, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a joint resolution from the House of Representatives, (No. 3,) for paying the compensation of the stenographers employed by the committees of the House of Representatives; and it was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. KING presented a petition of business men of the northwestern lakes, praying that an appropriation may be made for the purpose of ascertaining whether Professor Ballot's rule, by which the approach of storms may be foretold, is applicable to the lakes; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. TRUMBULL presented the memorial of J. H. Langly and others, citizens of Illinois, praying for the recognition of their preemption claims to lands in the late military reservation on Rock Island, Illinois; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PEARCE presented the memorial of Michael Nourse, praying compensation for certain services rendered by the direction of the First Comptroller of the Treasury; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also presented the memorial of Hiram McCullough, praying to be released from his suretyship on the contract of S. A. West and G. McCullough, for the delivery of stone at the Gosport navy-yard; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a petition of citizens of Newark, praying that the public lands may be laid out in farms or lots for the free and exclusive use of actual settlers; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BRIGHT presented certain testimony in relation to the contested election of Senators from Indiana; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BIGLER, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of John Wightman, submitted an adverse report; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. YULEE, from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, to whom were referred the joint resolution (S. No. 36) explanatory of an act entitled "An act for the relief of George Chorpennig, jr.," approved March 3, 1857, the petition of George Chorpennig, and the presentment of the grand jury of the United States for the northern district of Florida relative to the creation of a court-house for that district, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Michigan, relative to the construction of certain wagon roads in that State, and the papers relating to the adoption of Oliver Evan Wood's plan for the delivery of letters in California, and in Oregon and Washington Territories, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SEBASTIAN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of the children of Stephen Krebs, asked that the committee be discharged from its further consideration.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the memorial of Madison Sweetser, reported a bill (S. No. 377) for the relief of Madison Sweetser; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The memorial of Taliaferro P. Shaffner, praying for an amendment to the act of Congress of March 3, 1857, "to expedite telegraphic communications for the uses of the Government in its foreign intercourse," so that the subsidy granted by that act shall be general in its application to all oceanic telegraphs, has been referred to the Committee on Printing, and they report in favor of printing the memorial without the map. The cost will be seventy dollars. The committee believe that we cannot have too much information before us on this subject, and upon investigation we are satisfied there is much important information in the memorial. I ask that an order to print it be granted, and that the memorial be referred to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

It was so ordered.

PAPERS WITHDRAWN.

On motion of Mr. DOUGLAS, it was Ordered, That Cyrus H. McCormick have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. ALLEN, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 314) for the prosecution and punishment of frauds in land titles in California, without amendment; and had passed the bill of the Senate (No. 312) to provide for the collection and safe-keeping of public archives in the State of California, with an amendment.

POST ROUTES IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of establishing mail routes from Clear Lake, by Clear Water and Fair Haven, to Forest City, in the State of Minnesota; from Fairbault, Rice county, via Swaresay, and Josco, to Mankato, in Blue Earth county, in the State of Minnesota; from Owatonna, via Clear Lake and Josco, to Mankato, and from Austin, via Geneva, Berlin, Otisco, Wilton, and Josco, to St. Peter, in the State of Minnesota; from Red Wing, via Sacramento, Wamunago, and Rice Lake, to Owatonna, in the State of Minnesota; from Cannon's Falls, via Wastedo, Hader, Wamunago, Cherry Grove, and Concord, to Mantorville, in the State of Minnesota.

AGGRESSIONS ON AMERICAN CITIZENS.

Mr. GWIN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a joint resolution (S. No. 42) for the adjustment of difficulties with the Republics of New Granada, Central America, and Mexico; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. GWIN. Mr. President, I have adopted, as near as the nature of the subject I wish to have referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations would permit, the very words of the joint resolution which passed the Senate a few days ago, having reference to our difficulties with Paraguay, in order that no new question would have to be considered by the committee in acting upon it. It cannot be denied that we have been trifled with by the Governments of New Granada and Nicaragua. The treaties made by their Ministers there have been, in one instance, so altered as to be almost an insult to this Government; and in the other, so delayed as to place it out of the power of the President, even if it is ratified, to lay it before the Senate before we adjourn. In both of these States, and especially the former, our citizens have been murdered and plundered, and we have had no redress. I include the other Central American States, because I have no doubt, if the President is authorized to demand reparation from those States, many cases will present themselves where our citizens have been grossly outraged. Such instances in Mexico are too numerous to require any notice of them in detail.

Sir, we are becoming a by-word with the whole civilized world for the neglect of our citizens in foreign States. No wonder Great Britain thinks she can, with impunity, search our vessels in the Gulf of Mexico; we never resent anything. While that gulf is swarming with British cruisers, we have afloat but one vessel, I learn—the Fulton; formerly, I believe, a ferry-boat, turned into an indifferent ship-of-war. I want the responsibility brought directly home to some one branch of the Government to settle these difficulties, which is the cause of my offering this resolution. I move that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and printed.

Mr. SEWARD. I submitted a resolution of inquiry yesterday in regard to difficulties in the Gulf of Mexico, to which the honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. Mason] objected. I believe he has no further objection to it, and I ask the Senate to take it up and pass it.

The Senate proceeded to consider the resolution; and it was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Foreign Relations be instructed to inquire whether any legislation is necessary to enable the President of the United States to protect American vessels against British aggression in the Gulf of Mexico or elsewhere, and to report by bill or otherwise.

PRINTING OF A DOCUMENT.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the motion to print the message of the President of the United States in answer to a resolution calling for information relative to the seizure, in the valley of Litana, in Peru, by the authorities of Chili, of the proceeds of the cargo of the brig Macedonia, the property of citizens of the United States, direct me to report favorably on it. The document is before me. The cost of printing it will be $903. It is in regard to the current business before the Senate, and the Committee on Foreign Relations consider it important to have it printed. The Printing Committee have not read it. It is impossible that we can read all these large documents. We have not the time to investigate them. If there be any objection to the printing, we must refer the Senate to the Committee on Foreign Relations, that asked the printing of the document. The Committee on Printing report in favor of printing it, since it relates to current business; and they have the guarantee of the Committee on Foreign Relations that it should be printed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. We, who are on the Committee on Foreign Relations, referred that document to the Committee on Printing because we were unable to read it ourselves, and expected our friend from Arkansas to do so for us, [laughter]; and if he has not read it, the whole object of the reference has failed. It is a very convenient mode for one of our committees, when we get a package too long for them to read, to refer it to the Committee on Printing. However, I will vote with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Arkansas. In regard to the compliment the gentleman pays me, I have no doubt that my reading it and ascertaining it would be of great value to the Committee on Foreign Relations, since I have nothing to do with that committee, and I do not suppose my opinion would be of any value to them, or would be held of any great value, even if I did read the document and give an opinion on it. Now, it is for those gentlemen to defend themselves, if they want this document printed. They ask for the printing to save themselves, I presume, the trouble of reading it in manuscript. Whether the Senate will permit them to get rid of the trouble of reading it in manuscript, I do not know. I rather think those Senators should be compelled to read it, and save $900. [Laughter.] Their time, perhaps, could not be better spent.

Mr. MASON. I am surprised that the Senator from Illinois, as a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations, should not be entirely conversant with the nature of these papers. They were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations some time ago, with an inquiry whether it was proper they should be printed, and the committee has reported in favor of the printing. I take it for granted, then, that the honorable Senator from Illinois, as a member of that committee, is familiar with those papers. I, as one of that committee, looked into the papers. I had a correspondence with the Secretary of State, and became satisfied that it was of great public interest that they should be printed, for two purposes. They respect a very large claim, amounting to several hundred thousand dollars, of citizens of the United States on the Government of Chili for speculations committed on American property, not in Chili, but within the limits of Peru. The correspondence has extended through many years, and has been vigorously pressed. In addition, questions of international law are raised, which the Secretary of State thought, and I concurred with him, it was very important should be in possession of our Ministers abroad. I think that will amply compensate for the printing.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The Senator from Virginia expresses his surprise that I should not have been familiar with what was contained in these papers. Probably I should have made myself so, but for the fact that, having implicit confidence in the chairman of the committee, and he having assured us that he had looked into the papers, we thought that was sufficient without putting the rest of the committee to the trouble of examining them. Nothing but our confidence in the chairman, I assure him, prevented each member from reading the whole of the papers.

Mr. MASON. I can assure the Senator that the chairman fully appreciates the extent of that compliment; but I do not think, at the same time, that he is entirely exonerated, for it is to be presumed that the chairman of the committee communicated their contents to the whole of the committee. The same confidence that justified him in following the chairman would justify him in a declaration that the contents were derived from the chairman.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I took it on faith. My faith would have been complete but for the fact that the chairman deemed it necessary to refer it to the Committee on Printing, to ascertain whether he had been right. [Laughter.]

The motion to print was agreed to.

LEMUEL WORSTER.

Mr. HAMLIN. I ask the Senate to take up a bill granting a pension to Lemuel Worster. It will not take five minutes, I apprehend. I ask it because it is a bill which has, I think, four times passed the Senate; and at the last session of Congress it also passed the House of Representatives, but then it did not reach the President. I think if the Senate would pass it now, it is one of those bills that may go through the House and receive action at the present session. It will not take three minutes.

Mr. YULEE. I hope the Senator will not press his motion. He will recollect that yesterday, during the morning hour, the bill relating to the Patent Office was taken up and left as unfinished business of the morning.

Mr. HAMLIN. I hope the bill I have moved to take up will be disposed of.

Mr. YULEE. Will it give rise to debate?

Mr. HAMLIN. I think not. If it does I will give way.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 294) for the relief of Lemuel Worster was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It directs the Secretary of the Interior to place the name of Lemuel Worster, of Lebanon, York county, Maine, upon the roll of invalid pensioners, at eight dollars per month, from the 1st day of January, 1855, during his natural life. No sale, transfer, or mortgage of this pension prior or subsequent to the passage of the act, is to be valid; but it is to inure solely to the benefit of Worster, and remain in his control, or that of his legally appointed and qualified guardian, under suitable bonds for its proper disbursement for his benefit.

His father, Captain Alexander Worster, now deceased, was in command of a company of militia, and in September, 1814, received orders to march to Kittery Point, in the State of Maine, and join himself to the troops there rendezvousing for the defense of the coast against British invasion. Ten days after effecting a junction of the forces detailed for that service, an order was received from the War Department to organize the companies of one hundred men each. Under this order Captain Worster's company and the companies commanded by Captains Thompson and Ayers were consolidated into two companies, under command of Thompson and Ayers, and Captain Worster was appointed first lieutenant of Captain Thompson's company, and commissioned as such. Under the regulations issued, each commissioned officer was entitled to, and each appointed, a servant or waiter. They were usually selected from among the enrolled men, and detailed for this duty, under pay and rations; but in this instance the officers exercised their discretion, and selected their attendants outside of the ranks. In this selection, no regard was paid to age, provided the person was capable of performing the duty; and Lieutenant Worster appointed his son Lemuel, then twelve years of age, and, in the language of the affidavit of Captain Thompson, accompanying the papers, "a smart, active lad, who served as such, and was constantly in the line of his duty, until he was taken sick of camp or spotted fever." This disease prevailed to a fearful extent in the camp, and petitioner was violently attacked by it, and continued in a critical situation until long after the troops were discharged—his father remaining at Kittery Point in charge of him for a long time after that event. After a slow and painful recovery, it was found that the disease had made sad havoc of the energies and faculties of the petitioner.

Not only was his health completely broken down; but he lost the sight of one eye entirely, the faculty of speech was gone, and he was perfectly deaf—all hopes of his usefulness or happiness in life utterly destroyed. In this situation, he has lingered to the age of fifty-two years, always a charge upon his friends. Since the death of his father his situation is one of entire dependence upon charity, and the kindness of those indifferent to his comfort and necessities. He now prays Congress, as an act of charity and justice, to grant him a pension for the remainder of his life. There is, of course, no law providing for the case; but had Lieutenant Worster appointed his servant from the ranks, as it was his privilege to do, instead of requiring the duties of his son, that attendant, if thus disabled, would be provided for in the general statutes; and had the son been an enlisted soldier, there would have been no question in the case. In view of the fact, that although a boy, he was appointed to enter upon and discharge the duties that would otherwise have been required of an enrolled soldier, the committee think the case is brought within the intent of the law, and it being a case appealing strongly to the charity of Congress, aside from the question of right, recommend an act for his relief.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SHERLOCK AND SHIRLEY.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I ask leave of the Senate to call up a bill which has been reported from the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, for the relief of Sherlock & Shirley. It is very important to the parties that it should be acted upon. I think there is no difficulty in the case; and, if the Senate take it up, all that will be necessary will be to read the report of the committee, which is brief. I think the honorable chairman of the Post Office Committee [Mr. YULEE] will say that it is a meritorious bill. It is one which I think will create no debate.

Mr. YULEE. I presume it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. IVERSON. I object to this irregular mode of taking up private bills out of their order. It will result in defeating the whole consideration of the Private Calendar. A Senator is interested in a particular bill; he asks the favor of the Senate to take it up; he gets it taken up and passed; and then he takes no further interest in anything else on the Private Calendar, and will always vote against taking it up. This practice of letting gentlemen take up their private bills to-day and to-morrow, and passing them as a matter of grace and favor, is wrong. Petitions are introduced in order, and they are referred to committees; the committees act on them, and report their bills in order; and in my opinion there is no better rule on the face of the earth than the old miller's rule of grinding every man's grist according to the time he brings it to the mill. It is unjust to other claimants, that individual cases should be taken up out of their order. It is proper that every man should have his case considered in its turn; and I trust that the habit the Senate has got into, of taking up cases out of order, will not be tolerated longer.

I do not know anything about this particular bill; I may vote for it; doubtless it is a meritorious case; but I object to the practice which Senators seem to be getting into, of taking up private bills, considering and passing them out of their order. I think the better plan would be to devote an hour every morning to the consideration of the Private Calendar, and I would, if the Senate please, call up a resolution I laid on the table some days ago to postpone the calling of the special order until one o'clock, so as to give two hours every morning for the consideration of private bills, taking up the Calendar in its order, so that all these bills may be considered in their turn, and justice be done to everybody.

It must be obvious to the Senate, I think, that one hour every morning is not sufficient to the business separate and apart from the special order. The appropriation bills will now be considered. For the rest of the session we shall be occupied, probably, four or five hours a day in the consideration of appropriation bills. One o'clock is soon enough to take up the appropriation bills, because we shall then spend four or five hours in their consideration, and the Senate, at the expiration of that time, will be in no condition to take up any new matter. It is better, therefore, that we should consider this extra business in the morning hour. Reports from committees are being rapidly brought into the Senate, and will become more numerous as the session advances to its close, so that more than one hour will be wanted to make reports and introduce resolutions and petitions; and I think we ought to have at least one hour every morning for the consideration of other matter separate and apart from the appropriation bills. If the Senate will take up my resolution and postpone the consideration of the special order of each day until one o'clock, giving us two hours for the consideration of morning business and the Private Calendar, and then take up the Private Calendar after the morning business at twelve o'clock, I think that will facilitate business very much. I hope the motion of the Senator from Kentucky will be withdrawn for the present, and let us take up and act generally on these bills under the resolution I submitted.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. This is a bill of no consequence scarcely, except to the parties; and I cannot consent to withdraw the motion to take it up. It is a matter of urgent necessity to them to have this bill passed at the present session; which it will stand no chance of doing, unless the Senate will be so good as to act on it this morning. I wonder at the vehemence with which the gentleman from Georgia assails this motion of mine, when it was immediately preceded by an application of a like sort, to which no objection was made.

Mr. IVERSON. I will yield, for this occasion, to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky, and allow this case to be taken up. After that, I hope the Senate will indulge me in taking up my resolution, and acting upon it.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not object to taking up the bill proposed by the Senator from Kentucky, for the simple reason that I think the practice which prevails in the Senate is a very good one. I rise merely to enter a dissent from the ideas suggested by the honorable chairman of the Committee on Claims; because, from my observation of the state of the Calendar, and the way we do business under it, it is perfectly clear to my mind that we shall never accomplish anything of any consequence in regard to private bills if we always take up the Calendar in its order, and do not sometimes take up private bills out of their regular order. Why, sir, it is perfectly notorious that there are old settlers here who have been here time out of mind, and come every Congress; they never get passed, and they never get rejected; but they always get on to the first part of the Calendar, being always here and always ready. They go to a committee early, and are reported by the committees early, and are put upon the Calendar; and when they come in here they are debated to the end of the chapter from January to July.

Mr. IVERSON. That objection can be obviated by taking up the Calendar and passing over these cases.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Allow me to make a suggestion here: I think this debate is not pertinent to the motion of the Senator from Kentucky; but it will be proper enough when the Senator from Georgia calls up his resolution. I hope we shall not have that debate on this proposition.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I think my remarks were quite as pertinent to this motion as most of the remarks of the Senator from Georgia were, because they were in reply to him; and when my friend from Illinois seeks to correct the practice, I wish he would begin in the beginning, and not in the middle.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I thought the right way was to begin in the middle, so as to apply both ways and hit Georgia and Maine at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESSENDEN. Very well. If it would have that effect I should have no sort of objection. But I think my remarks are in order; for this motion is to take up a bill; and I am arguing to show why it should be taken up; because, if we do not take it up in this way, and agree to other motions of a similar description, we shall never get any private bills passed at all. I think these remarks are strictly in order. But, as I said, it makes no sort of difference whether I direct the remarks I may have to make particularly to the resolution of the honorable Senator from Georgia, because it is manifest to me that the practice we have had is a good one. It is that occasionally during the morning hour, bills of comparatively trifling amount, or even of larger amount, to which there can be and is no possible objection, are disposed of by the courtesy of the Senate, which is extended to all alike on different occasions; and thus a great amount of good is done, which would be prevented if we followed the course pointed out, of taking the old bills on the Calendar, and arguing them through. We should never get through anything in that way. I hope, therefore, that the courtesy which has usually been extended to others will be extended to the Senator from Kentucky on this occasion, and that it will be continued.

Mr. IVERSON. I only want to make a suggestion in reply to the observations of the Senator from Maine. If we take up the Private Calendar during the morning hour, with an order that the Calendar be called, and only those bills be passed to which there is no objection, we obviate the difficulty he presents.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I am in favor of that.

Mr. IVERSON. If we only occupy an hour once a week in that process, we could get off the docket all the meritorious cases to which there is no objection.

The motion of Mr. CRITTENDEN was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 287) for the relief of Sherlock & Shirley was read a second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It authorizes the Postmaster General to examine the cases of fines charged against Sherlock & Shirley, under their contract for carrying the mails on route No. 5103, from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Louis, Missouri, and to remit so much of the fines as, in his judgment, ought not to be enforced against the contractors.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I will ask the Senator from Kentucky if this is a proposed authorization to the present Postmaster General to review the decisions in cases of fines made by the former Postmaster General?

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The application was made, but not acted upon, by the former Postmaster General.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I am quite willing that the present Postmaster General may act in regard to any fines which were not acted upon by his predecessor; but I am opposed to the whole system of allowing any Postmaster General to review fines which were decided upon and inflicted by his predecessor.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. There was no decision, I am informed, by the former Postmaster General. The applications were made to Mr. Campbell, but he made no decision on them. It is only desired now that the present Postmaster General shall review these cases, and shall excuse the fines if the cases come within the rule usually adopted by the Department for the excuse of fines.

Mr. COLLAMER. Perhaps a want of acquaintance with the practice of the Department may have led the Senator from Louisiana into the remark he has made. The truth is, that the fines and forfeitures—deductions, as they are called—are made upon the reports of failures of the mail, by the postmasters along and at the end of the routes; and immediately upon these reports coming in to what is called the inspection office, the fine or forfeiture that grows out of the terms of the contract is entered, as a matter of course. For instance, if the trip has failed, its price is deducted from the sum to be paid to the contractor, and that deduc-tion is entered at once. Afterwards, on an independent proceeding, application is made to the head of the Department by the contractor, to remit that; and on applications of that kind, three fourths of all the fines, and probably a larger proportion, are remitted. They are always remitted when the contractors can show a good and sufficient reason for the failure; as, for example, unavoidable accident. Now, if we were so to confine the bill as to say that the new Postmaster General could not remit those forfeitures which were entered by his predecessor, we certainly should do a very great injustice.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I did not advert to the class of cases of which the Senator is speaking.

Mr. COLLAMER. I understand that this is one of those very cases.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I know one case in which such an application has been made; and I consider a great abuse was committed, where Congress gave power to a Postmaster General to review the decisions of his predecessor refusing to remit a fine, and the application was made to excuse the parties over again.

Mr. COLLAMER. This is an entirely different affair.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If this is not one of that class of cases, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I understand it is not.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I ask the Secretary to read the bill again.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Postmaster General be, and is hereby, authorized to examine the cases of fines charged against Sherlock & Shirley under their contract for carrying the mails on route No. 5103, from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Louis, Missouri, and to remit so much of such fines as, in his judgment, ought not to be enforced against the said contractors.

Mr. YULEE. The report will explain the facts of the case.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I would ask whether the Postmaster General has not the power under the general law to remit these fines? I understand he has.

Mr. COLLAMER. He has power to remit the penalties and deductions which he makes by virtue of the terms of the contract. But the difficulty sometimes arises in this way: an application is made to him for a remission; he passes upon it, and refuses to remit, and afterwards the parties wish to proceed to a further showing in relation to the case. A new Postmaster General is always exceedingly slow at any rate; and some of them have gone so far as to say that they never would interfere or hear any further about a remission on which a former Postmaster General had passed.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The object of this bill, then, is to authorize the Postmaster General to review, in his discretion, cases adjudicated by his predecessor.

Mr. COLLAMER. That will appear by the report.

Mr. YULEE. The report states the facts.

Mr. POLK. I understand that the predecessor of the present Postmaster General has passed on this case, and refuses to remit; and, therefore, this bill is one of the very class mentioned by the honorable Senator from Louisiana. In looking hastily over the report I see the complaint is that the predecessor of the present Postmaster General took no excuse for ice, fogs, or low water. The matter has been passed upon by the former Postmaster General, and the object of this bill is to have a new decision. I so understand the case. I ask the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads if this is not so?

Mr. KING. I ask that the report be read.

Mr. YULEE. The report, which is brief, explains the facts in the case. Let that be read; and then, if necessary, a further explanation can be made.

The Secretary read the following report made by Mr. YULEE on the 28th of April:

The Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, to whom was referred the petition of Sherlock & Shirley, contractors for carrying the mail from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Louis, Missouri, praying to be relieved from certain fines alleged to have been unjustly imposed on them, beg leave to report:

The petitioners allege that, for the years 1851, 1852, 1853, and 1854, they were the contractors for carrying the mails on route No. 5103, from Louisville, Kentucky, to St. Louis, Missouri, which service was to be performed daily, in steamboats, at the compensation of $70.00 per annum. That between the 1st of October, 1851, and 31st December, river mails, and if fog is to be an excuse you will seldom find an occasion when that will not be alleged. If running on a sand bar is evidence of low water, those of us who have traveled on the Ohio river know that there are very few days in the year when you cannot get on to one. If these are to be received as excuses for not running a regular mail, it will be very difficult indeed to hold a contractor to any compliance with his contract. Still, as I do not know the facts of the case, I do not wish to state any opinion on them.

Mr. YULEE. I will state to the Senator that the case here is not a failure to perform a trip but only a detention on a trip by reason of fogs and low water, giving a reasonable ground of detention, as the Senator from Illinois should know, being familiar with western rivers. One reason which operated with the committee, especially in this case, was, that the late Postmaster General being a resident of Philadelphia, was not familiar with the nature of steamboat service on the western waters, which is somewhat peculiar, as the present Postmaster General is.

Mr. DAVIS. The last remark of the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads seems to call for some notice from me, being an inhabitant of that region of country to which he alludes. The difficulty in the transmission of the river mail results from the manner in which the contracts are made. You make contracts to run from one remote point to another, and over some line of trade, and the contracts are taken by freight boats, and the mails put upon boats that run for freight. If the whole line of mail contracts were cut up into short links where regular packets run, the mails would be transmitted with regularity. They make their time, notwithstanding fogs. These boats that run from remote points do not know where bars may have formed since they last passed over the route. They are afraid to run when the night is dark, or when there is a fog. They are freighted too heavily frequently, and encounter the risk of running aground. Hence arise the irregularities in the transmission of the mail. I have no doubt that packets were running past these very boats at a time of fog when they may have been detained.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I make opposition to this bill, because we have had one example of the effect of this kind of legislation. We had a law providing for a mail to be carried from New Orleans to Cairo. After repeated efforts, we succeeded in getting the contract made. The mail was carried in such a manner as to become a laughing stock on the river, when it was not a subject of grave complaint. The contractors put the mails on a boat when they could find one, and when they could not they did not. They had taken the contract for a price grossly inadequate, if they were to put on a line of boats themselves, but excessive if they were to put the mails on transient freight boats. They got $300,000 a year I think, for putting the mails on transient freight boats, or at least that was the manner they executed their contract. The Postmaster General, Mr. Campbell, fined them, and fined them heavily, so that the amount they received about paid them for carrying the mail in the way they did carry it. About the time he went out of office, a similar application to the present was made, and we had before us at the commencement of this session the decision of the present Postmaster General, in which he said that, on the evidence before him, he had been forced to reverse the decision of his predecessor, and gave the contractors $50,000 out of the Treasury, which had been inflicted as fines by his predecessor. I say to gentlemen they may take it for granted now that if this system of legislation is to be sanctioned or countenanced, within the next three years we shall have half a million or a million of dollars to return to contractors out of the Treasury. I shall say nothing further.

Mr. POLK. I merely wish to say, in addition to what the Senator from Louisiana has stated, that, in the very case to which he alludes, there were bids by two responsible men to carry that mail in regular packet-boats for a sum which would leave something to them. They were underbid by the contractors, who undertook to carry the mail in transient boats, and the consequence was, that the great public and the great commercial interests of the cities of St. Louis and New Orleans suffered during the whole time of that contract on account of the mode in which the mail was carried. The Senator from Louisiana has shown satisfactorily, I think, the injustice that was done by that contract—the injustice that was done to the Government, but, more than all, the injustice that was done to the public by the mode in which that service was performed, and the releases that were given from the fines and penalties that were incurred for the non-fulfillment of the engagement.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to another fact. Any gentleman who has seen a cause of collision betwixt western boats that came in contact in low water, or especially in a fog, tried, will understand how dangerous it will be to allow contractors to go before the Department on ex parte proof of such circumstances to make out a case that shall excuse them from the fines which have been imposed upon them by the prior Postmaster General, and thus relieve them of $43,258 of the amount of fines which had been deducted from their contract price of $70,000 for carrying the mail. If that is to be allowed, I undertake to say that the equality and fairness of bidding for these contracts are entirely gone, and the public are to be made to suffer the consequences of men getting contracts under such circumstances that they will know, or, at least they will reasonably calculate, that the fines and forfeitures which the law has intended shall be the means of bringing them to a strict performance of the contract will be taken off by Congress as soon as the application is made. This matter has been passed upon by one Postmaster General, and I think we ought to let it stand where it is.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I did not expect, sir, that this subject would have occupied the time it has done, or I should not have said to the Senate that I supposed it would be a matter of a very few moments. I shall detain the Senate but a very few minutes myself.

Mr. President, I think you will agree with me that much has been said beyond what the immediate subject requires. Gentlemen have told us of contracts in regard to which they know abuses have been practiced, and fines improperly remitted. Why, sir, we should never grant relief, if we were to act on the idea that the authority we now give to do justice, will be abused for the purpose of doing injustice. If this argument were applicable, what is the worth of it? Nothing. You have made a Postmaster General; you have authorized him to preside over this subject; and you have authorized him to decide upon all similar cases. The application is now for him to adjudicate upon a case occurring within a former Administration—that is all. Is our Government to be split up into little terms of four years, so that one four years is not to have anything to do with another? It is breaking the Government into fragments.

How has this matter been acted upon—passed upon, as gentlemen say? Upon the information which is communicated by the deputy postmasters to the Department, a fine is entered before the party fined has an opportunity of being heard. Is that passing upon the case? At a subsequent time, the party fined makes his application and shows cause for the remission of the fine; he presents his evidence; he applies for an adjudication; the Postmaster General goes out of office without having made that adjudication; he leaves it undone. Is that deciding, is that acting? That is inaction—not action. Now, the question is, whether the case in that state can be, according to universal usage and the admission of gentlemen here, properly acted on by the Postmaster General? The present Postmaster General, finding the case, as I understand, in that condition, considers it acted upon, or passed upon—not that any decision has ever been pronounced on the application deciding that the cause shown was good or insufficient, but the fine was imposed, and the application for remission not disposed of. The chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads, who reported this bill, will please correct me if I am wrong in this statement. Did Mr. Campbell make any express adjudication on the subject? Is there any such on the records of the Post Office Department?

Mr. YULEE. Not on the application for re-examination.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. That is what I mean. He made no decision on the application for re-examination and remission. How can gentlemen say it has been acted upon?

Mr. YULEE. If the Senator will allow me, I will state further, on the authority of a Senator now in his seat, the Senator from Minnesota, [Mr. SHIELDS,] that the former Postmaster General determined to take up the case for re-examination, but that his official term expired before he could reach it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. That is what I understand to be the case.

Mr. SHIELDS. I learned that fact, which I was about to communicate to the Senator from Illinois when I sought to interrupt him, that the former Postmaster General had determined to take up this case for re-examination, but that he left his office before he was able to carry out that intention. The present Postmaster General, who, as stated by the honorable Senator from New Hampshire, is very particular and rigid, and properly so, in his office, has a little delicacy in touching this case without some authority of Congress.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. The present Postmaster General, out of a little scruple and little delicacy towards his predecessor, as the circumstances occurred under a former Administration, and the case was before his predecessor, will not act unless Congress will give him the authority and permission to do so. The statement made by my honorable friend from Minnesota, I think, supersedes the necessity of any argument of the question on my part. I hope my friend from Louisiana will be satisfied with it, and that his amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I would very willingly withdraw the amendment, and be satisfied, if the Senator from Minnesota can state to us that he got his information from an official source.

Mr. SHIELDS. No; I have no official information on the subject.

Mr. BENJAMIN. The contractors may possibly have said so, and that would not satisfy anybody.

Mr. SHIELDS. I really do not know what an official source is. I have learned it incidentally at the office.

Mr. CLAY. I see that this debate is going to continue. It has already occupied nearly half an hour of the time allotted for the special order, and I move to lay the bill on the table. There are Senators around me who say they want to investigate it, and are not ready to vote on it.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. I hope the Senator will allow us to have a vote on it now.

Mr. CLAY. We cannot have a vote, for I am assured by Senators around me that they are not ready for a vote. They say they wish to lay it over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. CRITTENDEN. Then, as we are so far advanced in the bill, I hope the gentleman's motion will not prevail.

Mr. CLAY. I move that the bill lie on the table.

Mr. SLIDELL called for the yeas and nays on the motion; and they were ordered.

Mr. YULEE. I suggest to the Senator from Alabama to withdraw his motion. I presume he does not intend it as a test vote. If it is the desire of the Senate to allow the bill to pass over until to-morrow, I presume there will be no objection on the part of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. SLIDELL. I have called for the yeas and nays because I desire to make it a test vote. I think we have heard enough of the case.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

Mr. BRIGHT. I beg leave to state that I think the better plan would be to let the bill lie on the table until the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PUGH] shall be in his place. I know he takes an interest in this bill. It affects some of his constituents. Some of the parties live in the city of his residence. If the bill goes on the table by consent, it can be taken up again. I hope the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. SLIDELL] will agree to that.

Mr. SLIDELL. I did not make the motion to lay on the table, but I think the Senate is sufficiently informed now to act on this bill definitely in the mode proposed. I am very sure it cannot pass without very protracted debate. It involves questions of importance, and will cause the expenditure of a large amount of money.

Mr. BRIGHT. I should be glad to say something on it myself. I move that it lie on the table informally.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It requires unanimous consent, the yeas and nays having been ordered, to withdraw the motion.

Mr. SLIDELL. I am willing to withdraw the call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection. The bill and amendment will lie on the table informally.

BILLS BECOME LAWS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. HENRY, his Private Secretary, was received, announcing that the President had this day approved and signed the following acts and resolution:

A resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to audit and settle the accounts of the contractor for the erection of the United States marine hospital at San Francisco;

An act for the relief of John R. Temple, of Louisiana; and

An act to authorize the settlement of the accounts of Luther Jewett, late collector of the district of Portland and Falmouth, in the State of Maine.

CALIFORNIA LAND CLAIMS.

Mr. BAYARD. The bill of the Senate (No. 312) to provide for the collection and safe-keeping of the public archives in the State of California, has been returned from the House of Representatives, with a slight amendment, which is in line seven of page 2, to strike out the word "thereof" before "affidavit," and insert "showing the facts and circumstances upon which suspicions are founded." I move the amendment be concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAY. I trust that we shall now proceed to the consideration of the special order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. What is the special order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first special order is the joint resolution for the presentation of a medal to Commodore Hiram Paulding.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I move, then, to postpone all prior orders for the purpose of taking up the bill for the admission of Oregon.

Mr. IVERSON. I desire to get the floor, to move to take up a resolution I introduced a few days ago, in relation to the hour for calling the special orders. If the Senate will take up that resolution, act upon it, and decide it, there will be an end of the question. I think we had better make some general arrangement in relation to the transaction of business.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I presume the Oregon bill will not take long. I call for the yeas and nays on my motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that the bill to repeal the fishing bounties has been thoroughly discussed; that it has been read twice, and, I believe, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and I trust the Senate will now take it up and dispose of it. On this side of the House, I am sure, it is not proposed to debate the bill any further. It is true, some amendments have been offered to embarrass its passage, but I presume they can be dispatched without debate; at all events, if the amendments prevail they will not affect the success of the bill ultimately, but only strengthen it in the other House. I trust we shall act upon that bill, and dispatch business nearly finished before we take up other business that will occupy at least two days of discussion.

The question being taken on Mr. DOUGLAS's motion, by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 28, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bell, Broderick, Cameron, Chandler, Clark, Collamer, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglas, Durkee, Fessenden, Foot, Foster, Gwin, Hale, Hamlin, Harlan, Houston, Jones, King, Rice, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Stuart, Sumner, Wade, and Wilson—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bayard, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Brown, Clay, Clingman, Crittenden, Davis, Fitzpatrick, Green, Hammond, Hunter, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Johnson of Tennessee, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Sebastian, Sidel, Toombs, Trumbull, Wright, and Yule—28.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is equally divided.

Mr. CLAY. The motion fails.

Mr. DOUGLAS. That depends on the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Constitution provides that, when the Senate is equally divided, the Vice President shall vote. The Chair votes in the affirmative; so the Oregon bill is before the Senate. The Secretary will read it.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I desire to ask whether the motion of the Senator from Illinois was a motion to postpone and take up?

Mr. DOUGLAS. It was in the same form precisely in which such a motion was made the other day, when we had a discussion on this point.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I understand now that the Senate can take up any bill on motion. If so, I desire to move—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is right. The Chair has investigated that subject more thoroughly since it was up the other day, and he will state his impression. The motion of the Senator from Illinois was to postpone the prior orders for the purpose of taking up the Oregon bill. The motion was not to postpone the prior orders and take up the Oregon bill, in which case, if the motion prevailed, the Chair would consider it the purpose of the Senate to take up that bill; but the motion to postpone the prior orders having been agreed to, the Chair thinks it is in the power of any Senator having the floor to make a motion to take up other business. If no motion is made to take up other business, the Oregon bill would come up regularly, and the Chair announced it as in order.

Mr. COLLAMER. Allow me to suggest to the Chair that, as I understand the question, if the previous orders be postponed, this bill is before the Senate as a matter of course, because the hour has arrived for the special orders; and if you postpone all special orders before this bill, this necessarily comes up. The hour having arrived, the special orders are to be taken up; and having postponed all previous to the Oregon bill, that is now the first in order, and any motion to take up other matter is a motion to alter the order of the Calendar as it stands.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is like all the business upon the table. The Chair would call it up; but our rules provide that, when no question is before the Senate, any Senator may make a motion to take up any business. The Senator from Tennessee being upon the floor, the Chair must recognize any motion he may make.

Mr. COLLAMER. I insist that the Oregon bill is before the Senate.

Mr. CLAY. I wish to explain what I understand to be the rule. I respectfully submit to the Chair that the motion of the Senator from Illinois was to postpone all prior orders to the Oregon bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CLAY. The Senate have, with the casting vote of the Vice President, sustained his motion, and they have postponed all orders prior to the Oregon bill. Then, I submit whether it is in order to move to take up one of those prior orders which, by the vote of the Senate, has already been postponed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair decides this to be the condition of affairs. He will give his decision, and then the Senate can dispose of it. He put the motion of the Senator from Illinois to postpone the prior orders. That motion prevailed. The Chair then took up the Oregon bill, no Senator being upon the floor; it was the next business in order, and the Chair laid it before the Senate. The Senator from Tennessee rose in his place, and the Chair is willing to hear him, not knowing what motion he wishes to make. Perhaps he may move to postpone the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. The Chair has reached my conclusion. I understand the Chair to decide that the Oregon bill is before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I rise for the purpose of moving to postpone the further consideration of that bill for the present, in order to take up the homestead bill. My reason for making that motion is, that we may have action on the homestead bill. I would, while up, simply remark that the homestead bill has been a special order since January last. This bill has been reported to the Senate long since that was made a special order. It has been on the Calendar and postponed; other questions have intervened, and still there seems to be no chance to get at the homestead bill. I move that the consideration of the bill to admit Oregon as a State into the Union be postponed for the purpose of taking up the homestead bill; and upon that motion I hope the Senate will give me the yeas and nays.

Mr. BENJAMIN. I rise to a question of order upon that proposition. It is, that that motion is not in order. My friend from Alabama, I think, has stated the position so clearly that there can be but one opinion about it. The Senate has just postponed this bill, a minute ago, and the proposition being postponed before the next business is considered, the Senator from Tennessee moves to take it up. The proposition has been postponed by reason of a vote of the Senate, postponing all business on the Calendar prior to that suggested by the Senator from Illinois. This is one of the bills prior to the one proposed to be taken up by the Senator from Illinois. It stands postponed by a vote of the Senate this morning. Of course, it cannot be put again as a motion to the Senate. If the Senator from Tennessee desired that that bill should not be postponed, he ought to have moved an amendment to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to insert the words, "except the homestead bill." Then the Senate would have postponed all prior business except the homestead bill, for the purpose of taking up the Oregon bill, and then he could have got his bill up; but the homestead bill is as much postponed as any other bill that stood before the Oregon bill on the Calendar.

Mr. JOHNSON, of Tennessee. I do not see the force of the objection urged by the Senator from Louisiana. The Senate has postponed a certain number of propositions—

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will remind the Senator that the question of order must be decided without debate. The Chair does not think the point of order made by the Senator from Louisiana is well taken. The Senate, by a vote, postponed the prior orders. The Oregon bill was then called up by the Chair, and brought before the Senate; and the Senator from Tennessee has moved to postpone it. The Senate undoubtedly has the control of its own business; and the Chair must put the motions that are made to the vote of the Senate.

Mr. BENJAMIN. If the motion now is to postpone this particular bill, of course it is in order. I do not make a point of order on that; but the question of order is that it is not allowable to move now to postpone the Oregon bill for the purpose of taking up the homestead bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If, by a vote of the Senate, this bill shall be postponed, it will undoubtedly be in order for the Senator from Tennessee to move to take up the homestead bill, or any other bill.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I rise simply to inquire what would be the next business in order if the motion to postpone, made by the Senator from Tennessee, should prevail? What would then come up?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Whatever the Senate might choose to take up.

Mr. FESSENDEN. Suppose no motion were made to take up anything else, what would come up in order?

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Chair construed the prior orders to embrace all business on the table, he would sit still until some Senator made a motion.

Mr. FESSENDEN. All business prior to the Oregon bill has already been postponed. If that should now be postponed, would not the special order next succeeding that be the business before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Maine please state his point of order again?

Mr. FESSENDEN. I make no point of order; I merely make a suggestion. The business prior to the Oregon bill has been postponed, and the Senator from Tennessee now moves to postpone the Oregon bill. Suppose that motion should prevail, would not the next business in order, without any action of the Senate designating any particular bill, be the one which stands next succeeding the Oregon bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would so decide, for this reason: the postponement was to no definite period. If the Senate should now postpone the Oregon bill, and no motion were made to take up any other business, the Chair would call up the first special order.

Mr. FESSENDEN. I desire to inquire what is the next business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The first special order is the joint resolution for the presentation of a medal to Commodore Hiram Paulding, and the next is the bill in regard to the fishing bounties.

Mr. FESSENDEN. But what would be the next in order after the Oregon bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Oregon bill is on the general orders. It is not a special order.

Mr. DOUGLAS. I concur with the Chair entirely on each of the points of order which have been raised. I think the motion is in order now to postpone the Oregon bill for the purpose of taking up any other; and when it is postponed, I think it is perfectly competent for the Senate to indicate any bill on the Calendar that it desires to consider. I trust, however, that the Senate will not postpone the Oregon bill. I hope it will be acted upon.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is moved by the Senator from Tennessee to postpone the consideration of the Oregon bill; and upon this motion the yeas and nays are called for.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 8, nays 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Chandler, Durkee, Hale, Henderson, Johnson of Tennessee, Toombs, Trumbull, and Wade—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Allen, Bell, Benjamin, Bigler, Bright, Broderick, Brown, Clark, Clay, Clingman, Collamer, Crittenden, Davis, Dixon, Doolittle, Douglass, Fessenden, Fitzpatrick, Foot, Foster, Green, Gwin, Hamlin, Hammond, Harlan, Houston, Iverson, Johnson of Arkansas, Jones, Kennedy, Mallory, Mason, Pearce, Polk, Rice, Sebastian, Seward, Shields, Simmons, Slidell, Stuart, Sumner, Wilson, Wright, and Yulee—45.

So the motion to postpone was not agreed to.

ADMISSION OF OREGON.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 239) for the admission of Oregon into the Union.

Mr. CLARK. I move to amend the preamble in the second line after the word "republican" to insert the words "in form." The preamble recites that the people of Oregon have formed a republican constitution.

Mr. TRUMBULL. I inquire if the question pending is not on the postponement of the bill until the first Monday in December, and if this amendment is in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. BROWN, in the chair.) The present occupant of the chair is informed that the question is on postponing the bill until the first Monday in December next.

Mr. DOUGLAS. Upon that I ask for the yeas and nays as a test question.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am a member of the Committee on Territories, and occupying the position I do, I merely rise to state the reasons that will influence me in my vote on this matter. It was not my fortune to concur with the majority of the committee in reporting this bill—not that I object to the admission of any State that comes here in a form to entitle her to admission, but I think the Senate has witnessed enough in the last few years to be satisfied that we should have something like a general rule or general law regulating the admission of new States. It is no ordinary matter to constitute a sovereign State.

My great difficulty in not coming to an agreement with my colleagues of the committee on this subject, arose from the fact that we are entirely destitute of anything like reliable information as to the population of this Territory. When this question was under consideration a few days ago it was the opinion of one Senator that the population was, perhaps, between forty and fifty thousand; and another Senator entertained the belief that, perhaps, it would approximate eighty thousand. Now, I ask you, sir, is there a Senator on this floor who can state what the population of Oregon is? Is this to be the settled policy of the country, that new Territories are to come into the Union without any rule or regulation, on a mere statement of the belief of Senators or other individuals that it contains the requisite population? Is that sufficient ground for the admission of a new State?

So far as the constitution of Oregon is concerned, if it suits the people of that Territory, I hold that I have no right to go beyond that and to mold a constitution for them, provided it does not violate the Constitution of the United States. But it will be recollected that at the last session of the Senate there was a bill pending to pass an enabling act for Oregon. It was not passed; and in the very teeth of that, no matter from what cause it was defeated, we find the people organizing a convention, establishing a constitution, and sending it here for admission. All this results from the loose manner in which we receive information in regard to the population of Territories. I have no complaints to set up in regard to the constitution of Oregon; but I do say, that before we undertake to admit a new State into the Union, Congress should have some regular and fixed rule by which States should be constituted, and also authentic information as to her population.

Now, sir, I ask again, what evidence have we as to the real amount of population? We have none but the statements of gentlemen. No doubt, they speak from the best information they have; but is that the kind of information the Senate should require before admitting a new State? I say it is not; and I say it is time for the Senate to pause, and to establish some law, some rule, some regulation, by which to govern the admission of new States. The Committee on Territories, conscious of the fact, reported a bill, which is now on your table, requiring the State to have the Federal population before coming into the Union. It is a good bill; and I intend to yield it my support when it comes up. I wish it was the law now.

What is to be accomplished by the admission of Oregon at this time? This happens to be a case where we have ample time to do that Territory justice, if entitled to admission, and at the same time to act ourselves understandingly on the subject. In voting to postpone, as I shall, until the next session of Congress, I shall do so for the purpose of allowing Congress time to pass a bill to authorize the Territory to take a census, and report it to us at our meeting in December next. When that is done we shall have the facts before us in an authentic form, on which the Senate can form some reasonable and proper conclusion as to the population of the Territory, before we admit it into the Union as a State. I think it is the safer mode. We have all been driven, by the force of circumstances, to admit a State short of the requisite population. It is unnecessary to allude to that, because Senators are familiar with the facts. But here is a Territory where nothing could be accomplished by its admission now. They could not send Senators here during this session. They could accomplish nothing between now and the next session of Congress, except to send us a census, and let us know whether they have sufficient population to entitle them to admission or not.

Oregon has been modest about this. She has not attempted to force Senators upon us. She has not gone through the forms of electing State officers, but has acted with becoming respect, and with a diffidence that satisfied me that she doubted, under the circumstances, that she would be admitted. Therefore, although I dislike to cast a vote of this kind, because I would as promptly vote to admit a free State as a slave State when she presents herself with a clear record, showing clearly that she is entitled to admission—my acts have shown that; but, as in this case, nothing can be accomplished by action, and no detriment can accrue to Oregon by a postponement until the first Monday of December, postpone it, and then pass an enabling act, ascertain her population, and then, if it comes approximately towards the number required to entitle a State to one member under the Federal ratio, I am inclined to think Congress will admit the State.

Mr. GWIN. I am sorry to hear the announcement which has been made by my friend from Alabama, in view of the fact that for four or five months we have been engaged in nothing else but making a State out of a Territory where no census had been taken, and where it is acknowledged there is not as large a population as there is in Oregon; and he has been one of the most earnest advocates for admitting that State. I acknowledge that there were rather extraordinary circumstances urged as an excuse for doing it, but it has been done. I am sorry to see him now rise and oppose the admission of Oregon on the ground of a want of population, when it is notorious that her population is larger, and is in a better condition to support a State government, than that of Kansas. He says we have no testimony in regard to the population. What testimony had we in the case of Kansas? What other testimony did we require than that she had sent a constitution here under the proper legal sanctions, as Oregon has done? Was there any enabling act to authorize Kansas to send us a constitution here? Why is that objection made to Oregon now, when we have admitted Kansas? I am sorry to perceive that some of those who sustained the admission of Kansas, now oppose the application of Oregon.

We have the best test of the population in Oregon that can possibly be given. It is the test of the poll-books; which prove that poll-tax is paid there upon upwards of sixteen thousand adults. I expect the Senator's own State cannot show a poll-list of double that amount, and it has seven members of Congress. We only ask one for Oregon.

We have another good test. They bring up a vote that was cast when this constitution was adopted; and there was no excitement, no contest. I have the best evidence—from the gentleman who was before the people running at the time—that, at an election held nearly two years ago, there were between seventeen and eighteen thousand votes polled. That was a contested election. There never was better evidence of a fixed population in any Territory of this Union than there is in Oregon. As I stated before, there are more families in Oregon now than there were in California when she was admitted with two members. I was reported as saying more than there are now in California. That is not what I said.

I am sorry to see this objection to the admission of Oregon coming from the quarter it does, and at this particular time, because the Territory of Oregon has approached this stage deliberately. The question has been before the people there three times. Twice the people rejected the proposition to call a convention because they were of opinion at that time that it was not expedient to assume the expenses and responsibilities of a State government. They have approached it gradually, after discussing the matter for years, and now they have formed this constitution and sent it here. They have formed it in peace and quietude; they have had no disturbance. Under this constitution an election will be held during the next month; they will elect a complete State government, and I assure my friend from Alabama they will put it into operation, and it is the only government that will be there, whether you admit her as a State or not. I did not expect ever to have to answer any arguments coming from my friend from Alabama against this measure. I wish now to refer to an objection that was brought forward by the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] when this question was up before.

Mr. HAMLIN. Will the Senator from California answer me a question? I should like, if the Senator can inform me, to know what was the aggregate of the vote given at the time they voted in favor of forming a State constitution?

Mr. GWIN. Between ten and eleven thousand.

Mr. HAMLIN. And what was the vote given on each side?

Mr. DOUGLAS. I think only a couple of thousand votes were cast against the constitution, a very small amount—perhaps less than that.

Mr. SEWARD. Two thousand five hundred votes were cast against the constitution.

Mr. HAMLIN. Was there not a direct proposition submitted to the people of that Territory—will you form a constitution?

Mr. GWIN. That was done the year before, and they voted in favor of it.

Mr. HAMLIN. What was the vote on that?

Mr. GWIN. I am not prepared to say what that vote was. It was closely contested for three elections. Twice the proposition was rejected, and the last time it was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I want to know what that last vote was?

Mr. GWIN. I stated that there had been seventeen or eighteen thousand votes polled in a contested election when all the people came out. Whether or not that was on the occasion when the people agreed to call the convention, I cannot say. I got my information as to the number of votes, from General Lane, the Delegate. I was going to answer an objection made by the Senator from New Hampshire. He objects to the admission of Oregon, because the constitution made by the people of Oregon excludes Chinese from the new State; and he intimated that that was a violation of the Constitution of the United States.

Now, Mr. President, I think that is one of the best provisions in their constitution. The Chinese population who visit the Pacific coast are a pestiferous race. They are like the caterpillars and grasshoppers that afflict the country on this side of the mountains. They do not add to the wealth of the country; but they take away from it. They are not citizens; they are not recognized as citizens. They are a poor, miserable, degraded, slavish race; and we are of opinion in California—though we cannot trace it home to the parties, for they keep their own secrets—that four fifths of them are slaves; that they have masters in China, to whom they transmit the proceeds of their labors. It would be a great blessing to us in California if we were clear of them entirely. They have never brought us any benefit; they hang about the purlieus of our cities, the most degraded population; they come in behind American citizens in mining districts that have been temporarily abandoned; and, living on a mere handful of rice a day, they gather up the gold that is left, and ship it out of the country.

Oregon having witnessed the operations of this population in California, has wisely determined that she will not allow them to take mining claims, or have a permanent abode in that new State. It is hard to tell what will be the ultimate fate of the Chinese population in my own State, and what will be the consequence of their coming there. They bring no permanent and useful improvement to the country—I mean the great mass that go to the mines, and such as would go into Oregon, if they were permitted. If we had considered in California that we had the power to prohibit their landing there, I believe the State would long since have passed laws for that purpose; but it was considered that the power was lodged in Congress.

Another objection is made to the constitution of Oregon, because it prohibits colored persons from going into the State. That objection amounts to nothing; that provision of the constitution of Oregon meets my entire approbation. If, in 1849, the decision which has been rendered in the recent Dred Scott case had been made, we should have prohibited their going into California. Our people want none but the white race among us; we do not want negroes or Chinese, and we should have excluded negroes by the constitution, as we have by a recent act of the Legislature of our State, if the Dred Scott decision had been made at the time our constitution was formed. If Oregon be admitted under this constitution there will be in the States on the Pacific coast no provision for the colored race, and I have no doubt they will be excluded from the remaining territory there. These Chinese are not recognized as citizens; they are not looked upon as a portion of our population; they are not permitted by the laws to give testimony in court. They are a degraded race, and I want to get clear of all such. Oregon, in my opinion, had done well in excluding both Chinese and negroes.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I am surprised that my friend from California should suppose I have anything like hostility to the admission of Oregon as a State. My inclinations are of a different character, and I would vote for her admission if I was satisfied she had the requisite population. I assume the simple ground that we are not in possession of sufficient materials to enable Congress to judge whether she has the proper population or not. That is the ground I take; and further I say we have ample time now to allow Congress to obtain the information by passing an act authorizing the taking of a census in that Territory. What objection can be made to that?

The Senator alludes to the fact that we have been discussing for the last four months, the application of another Territory for admission. That Senator very well knows that that Territory has been a Pandora's box of evils to the country, so far as its peace and quietness are concerned, until the country is nauseated and sick of the bloodshed and disorders which have occurred in that Territory. We did not touch the matter of population there, because everybody, I believe, in some shape or other, voted to admit the State and turn it over to the people of Kansas. I say it is time now to pause, especially in the face of the fact that these examples grow into precedents. You organize Territories and admit States almost by magic. Territories are coming up at every session. Without being organized, you find two or three persons claiming to be Delegates from a remote Territory, never known of before as a separate Territory. There is one such case now, that of Arizona; so of Dacotah. What evidence have we of the population of either of those Territories? I am on the Territorial Committee, and it has been my duty to inquire into the facts; and it is mere guess work. I ask, on the testimony before us, when all the time that is necessary to obtain the requisite information exists between this and the next session of Congress, is it right to force a Territory in as a State merely because she is asking to be admitted?

I say not. It is unsafe. This is a bad precedent. If we persist in the course we are now pursuing, it will go into the settled policy of the country. It is not right; it is not just to Congress; it is unjust to the other States. You admit a State here, and, so far as Senators are concerned, you put her on an equality with the great State of New York, and, in fact, with all the other States in this Union, without knowing whether she has ten thousand or fifteen thousand votes. The highest vote given in Oregon, it is said, is twelve thousand, and that is the information derived from gentlemen who seem to have a knowledge of that Territory. No doubt they believe it to be so, and the fact is as they state; but does Congress have it in the form in which they should have information on a question before them? I say not; and we all know no such information is here.

Now, where is the necessity of precipitating the admission of this Territory as a State into the Union? There is ample time, as I before remarked, to obtain the information that is required, and to say to distant Territories, before you present yourselves for admission, give us the facts that will justify Congress in admitting you. No opinions of the gentlemen who sit behind me control me in this matter. In relation to the peculiar opinions of the Senator from New Hampshire, [Mr. HALE,] they are his own. I do not in the least sympathize with him, as he and all the Senate know. As to the exclusion of the particular population to which the Senator referred, I have nothing to say. It is with the people of the State themselves to determine, when they are forming their organic law, who shall and who shall not constitute a portion of their population, provided they keep within the pale of the Constitution of the United States.

I would not have said a word in regard to this matter, but for the fact of my being connected with the Committee on Territories, and it has been stated over and over again that the committee had reported this bill.

Mr. DOUGLAS. The grounds assigned by the Senator from Alabama for voting in favor of the motion of my colleague to postpone the further consideration of this bill until December next, are very pertinent to the object he has in view, but yet furnish good reasons to me why I should resist the motion. The object of the postponement is, as avowed by the mover and by the Senator from Alabama, to ascertain what the population of Oregon is, with a view of knowing whether she ought to be admitted or not. That would seem to indicate a line of policy that Oregon may be admitted whenever she has a population of ninety-three thousand four hundred and twenty, that being the ratio of representation for a member of Congress; but is not to be admitted until she shall have that population. I am willing to agree to that as a general rule, as the Senate well know. I endeavored in 1856 to apply it to Kansas. I have endeavored this year to apply it to Kansas and all other Territories. I am ready now to apply it to all the Territories except Kansas and Oregon. It having been adjudged that in the inchoate State of Kansas a less population was sufficient, I desire to apply the same principle to the inchoate State of Oregon.

My friend from Alabama gives as a reason, not only the want of sufficient population in Oregon, but the want of an enabling act. Let me remind him that both these objections existed in the case of Kansas.

Mr. FITZPATRICK. I beg to say to the Senator from Illinois that I did not give that as a reason, for I knew very well that it is within the discretion of Congress to admit a State without an enabling act.

Mr. DOUGLAS. But the Senator thinks it wise to have an enabling act, allowing Oregon to come in as a State whenever she shall have the proper population. I am rather glad to see him arriving at that conclusion. I have been struggling in this body during the whole of the past winter against the heresy that the organic act of a Territory was of itself an enabling act. The regularity, the legality of the convention in Kansas, has been defended solely upon the ground that the organic act was of itself an enabling act, which justifies the people of Kansas in proceeding, through their Legislature, to call a convention and establish a State government whenever they chose, without the consent of Congress. Sir, if the organic act of Kansas was an enabling act, the organic act of Oregon was also an enabling act. If the Kansas convention had the legal authority to establish a government without the consent of Congress, and demand admission, then the convention of Oregon had the same legal right to establish a government, and demand admission without the assent of Congress. The legislative power of the one Territory was precisely the same as the other. Each had the legislative authority granted in the same language, to wit: "that the legislative power and authority of the said Territory shall extend to all rightful subjects of legislation consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the provisions of this act." If that language gave to the Territorial Legislature in Kansas the authority to call a convention and establish a government, it gave the same authority in Oregon.

We have been told all the winter, that to refuse to admit Kansas when she came with a legal, valid constitution, was to reject her from the Union—and it was to be a cause of dissatisfaction. I dissent from the doctrine. I claim that a Territory has no right to demand admission until Congress has passed an enabling act giving its assent to her forming a constitution and State government for that purpose. I say a Territory may petition Congress in the form and with the authority only of a petition for admission without that requisite population and without that previous assent. But, sir, they cannot establish a State government; they cannot put a State government in operation; they cannot demand admission as a right, until Congress has given its assent. Hence the legal authority of the convention in Kansas; and the convention in Oregon rests on precisely the same foundation, if you admit the proceeding to have been regular in each case. In Kansas the regularity and fairness of the proceedings were disputed. In Oregon they are undisputed. No man denies that the convention was regularly called by the Legislature; no man denies that there was a fair election in the selection of the delegates; no man denies that the constitution was fairly submitted to the people—not only the constitution as a whole, but the slavery clause separately and the free-negro clause separately. A fair vote was given on each, and all and each of them were ratified by an overwhelming majority.

There is no dispute but that this constitution, presented by the people of Oregon, is the act and deed of her people, and embodies their will. Then why should she not be received into the Union? Simply, because she has not the requisite population, we are told. Sir, she has confessedly more population than Kansas—ten, fifteen, twenty thousand more than Kansas. I concede that, in my opinion, she has not the full population required, according to the ratio, for a member of Congress; I do not believe she will have it for two years to come; and, therefore, the proposition to postpone until December, in order to ascertain the population, is a proposition indirectly to keep her out; it is a proposition to kill the bill of admission. Sir, if you are going to do so, it is infinitely better, infinitely fairer, to kill it on a direct vote, so that the people of Oregon may know what their fate is.

Under the provisions of this constitution the election comes on in June, and the State government is to be organized in July. If you now reject the bill, the people there will know it in time to avoid the necessity of going on and establishing a State government; but if you postpone it until next December, they do not know whether you intend to keep them in a territorial condition or admit them as a State. You suspend them between the heaven and the earth, and they do not know which way you intend to send them, and you leave everything in confusion, doubt, and uncertainty with respect to their condition. I think the worst course you can possibly take is to postpone it by avoiding a direct vote. If you intend to keep Oregon out until she has the ninety-three thousand population, say so. Her proceedings being regular, her constitution being valid, being the act and deed of her people, if you intend to admit her with her population, say so, and let us decide it at once.

Sir, I am opposed to drawing this distinction between two inchoate States which may come here with a population which is nearly the same, although Oregon has the larger. I am opposed to saying that one has the right to come in without the requisite population and that the other has no such right. Sir, that distinction is odious; it is invidious; it is violative of the doctrines of the President's message in regard to Kansas, in which he said that Kansas had been prepared for admission into the Union beyond the right of the Territorial Legislature to interfere. If Kansas had been thus prepared, Oregon is thus prepared; she has passed from a territorial condition to that of a State, with the right of admission into the Union. That is the position of the President in his message justifying the admission of Kansas with the Lecompton constitution; and the President's whole argument is sustained in the Oregon case, from the further fact that the President said he thought the rule applied to Minnesota requiring the constitution to be submitted to the people for ratification, ought to be the general rule in all the Territories. Oregon has complied with that rule; Oregon has submitted her constitution to the people. They have ratified it at the polls, and she comes exactly within the two conditions specified in the President's message, to wit: first she has been prepared for admission under law; secondly, the constitution has been ratified by the people, and this is ascertained to be the act and deed of the people embodying their will. I may go further; the President thought the slavery question should be distinctly and separately submitted. Oregon has submitted it separately and distinctly.

I say, then, that Oregon is within every rule that has been laid down to justify the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton constitution, and, at the same time, she has avoided every objection that has been urged as an insuperable one to the admission of Kansas under that constitution. It is true I indicated that Kansas had not the requisite population to demand admission as a right, but I was willing to waive that. I indicated the objection that she had not the assent of Congress to form a constitution, and hence her proceedings were in the form and with the authority only of a memorial, and not with the right to admission; but I was willing to waive that, if the constitution were submitted to the people, and it was shown that it was their act and deed. On the other hand, we were told by all the advocates of the Lecompton constitution, that it was a right to demand admission; that the constitution had been formed by a lawful convention; that it was therefore legally the act and deed of the people whether it was so in fact, or not; that the question of population was not a matter of any importance, and did not constitute a valid objection.

If these were good reasons in the Kansas case, why are they not in the Oregon case? Admit both of these inchoate States with whatever population they have got; thus you dispose of them; and then I am ready to put all the other Territories on an equality by applying the general rule for which I have struggled for years, to restrict each and all of them to the requisite population, and to require the people to authenticate their constitution in such manner as to be certain that it is their act and deed, and embodies their will. I am prepared for that as a general rule, applying it to all the Territories and enforcing it rigidly, giving it as a notice in the future; but I will not apply it to Oregon, and exclude Kansas from its operation, when Oregon has a higher and a better right to admission than Kansas had with a less population.

Mr. President, I do not wish to occupy time in the discussion of this question; but I think it is unjust, unfair, towards the people of Oregon, under the circumstances, to keep them out of the Union; and, above all, it is unfair to postpone their application without deciding it. They wish to know whether they are to be a State or remain a Territory. They ought to know their fate. They ought to be enabled to regulate their affairs with reference to it. They want to know whether they are to go on and elect a Territorial Legislature or elect a State Legislature. They desire to know whether they shall elect a Territorial Delegate to the next Congress, or elect a member of Congress. It is important that they should know. Why, by this postponement, induce them to go on with a State election, omitting their Territorial Legislature, disbanding the territorial government, and having neither a Territorial Legislature, nor a Delegate here, under the hope of being admitted next winter, and then perhaps reject them next winter for the want of sufficient population? It is unjust to keep them in suspense. There is no good to be attained by it. If you are going to exclude them on the ground of a want of population, do it at once. If you are going to admit them with a less population than ninety-three thousand, do it now.

In regard to the other points which have been made, I have but a word to say. I will not follow the Senator from California in a discussion of the character of the Chinese immigrants. I care not whether his description of them be correct or not; it matters not to me what the character of that population is; the sovereignty of a State has a right to exclude them if it chooses, or to admit them if it wishes. So with regard to the free negro clause: if Oregon wants that population, let her have them; if she does not want them, let her exclude them; it matters not to me. So with regard to the slavery question; if she wants slaves, let her have them; if she does not want them, let her exclude them; that is her business, not mine. Hence, sir, I am not going to discuss the policy of the admission or exclusion of Chinese, the policy of the admission or exclusion of free negroes, or the policy of the admission or exclusion of slaves. I have nothing to do with those questions of policy. I deny your right to decide them. I hold that when Oregon comes here for admission as a State, she has a right to come with such constitution as she chooses, provided she does not violate the Constitution of the United States; and you have no right to inquire what the clauses of her constitution are about Chinese or free negroes or slaves, so long as they do not violate the Constitution of the United States; and even if they do, that is a judicial question, to be decided, not by Congress, but by the courts established by the Constitution of the United States. I will not discuss the propriety or impropriety, the wisdom or folly, of these restrictive clauses in the constitution of Oregon, because that discussion, if made with a view of controlling her action, is an invasion of State rights and State sovereignty, which I never intend to be guilty of while I hold a seat on this floor, or have the right to cast a vote to affect the destinies of this country.

Mr. HALE. I do not wish to prolong this discussion, but I desire to say that the suggestion I made, on which the Senator from California spoke, was a query whether or not this provision of the constitution of Oregon was not inconsistent with our treaty obligations with China. I understood the Senator from Illinois to suggest that the exclusion of the people of any nation from a particular State was a question of State sovereignty, with which we had nothing to do. I do not know how far the Senator would carry that idea. Would he think it was competent for any State of this Union to exclude Englishmen, or Frenchmen, or Spaniards, or the people of any European nation with which we have treaties of amity and friendship?

But, sir, there is another doctrine advanced by the Senator from Illinois, to which I never will submit at any time, here or elsewhere, and that is, that a question arising in a case before us for our action, is a judicial question to be passed upon by the Supreme Court of the United States, and that we have nothing to do with it. Sir, upon every question of a constitutional character involved in the admission of a State, or involved in any act that we are called upon to do, we are the judges and the sole judges, and the Supreme Court have nothing at all to do with it. This is the only reading of the Constitution that will not make it an instrument of oppression in the hands of one department of the Government over another. I concur entirely in the view presented by General Jackson on that subject, that each department of the Government is, and of necessity must be, the judge of its own power under the Constitution in regard to the acts that department is called upon to perform, and that it would be a piece of impertinence in the Supreme Court to interfere with it. All these questions are submitted to us, and we have to pass upon them; and in passing upon them we have to judge, we have to determine what the Constitution of the United States is, and we ought to decide it on our own judgment, entirely irrespective of what the Supreme Court may think. I do not care what the Supreme Court think on a matter that is legitimately before Congress for congressional action. When it assumes a judicial shape, and comes before them in litigation, then if there are any private rights to be affected by it, they are to determine. But for the political action of Congress, of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and of the Executive when it comes to him, each body must judge for itself. In our legislative action we are the judges, the sole and exclusive judges of what the Constitution means, the powers which it confers, and the rights which it gives to us. I dissent entirely from the idea that in regard to any question appropriately arising in the fair field of legislative discussion, the construction which the Legislature are to put upon the acts they perform is to be governed by the Supreme Court. We are the sole judges of what the Constitution is on such subjects, utterly regardless of any opinions of the Supreme Court or anybody else on God's earth outside of this Chamber. The Senate are to judge for themselves.

Mr. TRUMBULL. The Territory of Oregon asks admission into the Union as a State by the presentation of a constitution formed without any authority derived from Congress, and we are not furnished with any official information whatever of the extent of her population. It is admitted by every one, I believe, that a State ought not to be admitted into the Union until it has sufficient population to entitle it to at least one member in the House of Representatives. That principle is so manifestly just that all assent to it. State equality requires it; for it is unjust that fifty thousand people in one locality should have a representative in the other branch of Congress founded upon population, while fifty thousand in another locality have no such representation. Fifty thousand of the people of Illinois have as good a right to a representative as fifty thousand inhabitants of Oregon. This cannot be denied. The representation in this body is different. Here it is founded upon States, and not upon population. It is unjust, then, to the older States of the Union that new States should be admitted with a greater proportion of representation than the old States themselves have. All assent to this.

Why, then, is it that there is an effort to bring Oregon into the Union as an equal State without some evidence of her population? What reason is given for it? None under heaven but that Kansas has been admitted. Sir, I trust Kansas has not been admitted, and is not a State in the Union; I do not believe she will be a State in the Union under the bill which you have passed; but if it were so, that affords no reason why we should now vote for the admission of Oregon. The very Senators who urge that argument were opposed, they tell us, to admitting Kansas with a population of fifty thousand; but they are now against refusing to admit Oregon with fifty thousand. The very same Senators say to us, "admit Oregon and then we will adopt your rule; we will not admit Nebraska when she applies, without a sufficient population to entitle her to a Representative in the other branch of Congress." Why will you not admit Nebraska if you have admitted Oregon? You want to fix the rule at some other point; you will not fix it now; you want to admit another State first. Sir, will it be any better justice to keep Nebraska and Washington and the other Territories out of the Union with fifty thousand inhabitants, when you have admitted Oregon with fifty thousand, than it is now to keep Oregon out because you have admitted Kansas; if, indeed, Kansas be admitted?
